had intended to take the action to decontrol would have two months more in which to do it. The Senator will agree with me on that point, will he not?

Mr. CAIN. No. I should like first to ask the Senator what he means by saying that the passage of the joint resolution would say to those American cities which have not had an opportunity to decontrol that there will be an extension of 2 months within which they can do so.

Mr. MAYBANK. They will have the opportunity then to extend control for 6 months, or decontrol, whichever they wish to do.

Mr. CAIN. The Senator will permit me to point out that it is my opinion that the cities have had 5 months to make up their minds.

Mr. MAYBANK. Yes.

Mr. CAIN. They still have the time between the 6th day of December and the 31st day of December to determine whether they want 6 months more.

Mr. MAYBANK. The Senator is correct.

Mr. CAIN. And the joint resolution, if it shall be passed tomorrow, will say to all cities, "You are not going to be given the choice of self-determination." Now that is what we really are talking about.

Mr. MAYBANK. No, because they will be given a choice of self-determination, if they do not use it for a period of two additional months. No change is made in the law. They are simply given 2 months more.

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CAIN. I yield.

Mr. MALONE. If the distinguished Senator from Washington would allow me, perhaps this statement might clarify the situation. In the case of cities which have taken no action to extend their controls, because they think they are out from under controls automatically on the 1st of January, the adoption of the joint resolution tomorrow would automatically make it necessary for them to take decontrol action to get out from under, or else continue with control.

Mr. CAIN. The Senator could not be more right.

Mr. MAYBANK. That is correct. That is what I said.

Mr. CAIN. That is for continuing control action, not decontrol.

Mr. MALONE. The holidays are near. That is the reason the junior Senator from Nevada asked the junior Senator from Washington whether, in his opinion, the time was adequate, and it was not necessary to extend the time. I still believe that many of the 1,600 cities that have not taken such action will think that it is best to let sleeping dogs lie, and get out from under control on January 1.

Mr. CAIN. There is now in conference the American Municipal Association. It consists of hundreds of mayors, scores of whom are now in Washington, D. C. A good many of those mayors have told me that their city councils have not yet taken action to decontrol their cities; that they do not have any intention of taking such action, nor do they have any intention of requesting an additional 6 months. The cities which those mayors represent have relied upon the law of the land, which says with reference to a particular city, "If it was your wish neither to take action to decontrol yourself nor to take action to extend controls for 6 months, you would be out from under controls on the 31st of December 1950.

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CAIN. I yield.

Mr. MALONE. It is possible that many of the 1,600 cities are counting automatically on being decontrolled.

Mr. CAIN. I do not know to what extent that is true, but I happen to be closely associated with a great number of these mayors, and many of them have told me that is identical with their own situation. They have relied on the law to run its own course.

Mr. MALONE. They have relied on the word of Congress that the law would expire on December 31, 1950.

Mr. CAIN. It is an important and interesting question any way one looks at it.

Mr. President, we have been fighting a war in Korea for more than 5 months. Certainly the existence of that war has been impressed on the minds of all Americans. I would take for granted that most American cities have given serious consideration to whether in their considered opinion additional Federal rent controls are required for their needs. It seems to me that we must give the benefit of the doubt to every city and assume that if it has not asked for an extension of 6 months, it knew what it was doing, and that city does not require any additional extension of control.

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CAIN. I yield.

Mr. MALONE. I might call to the attention of the distinguished Senator from Washington the fact that the President has not yet said we are at war. He has said that this is a police action.

Mr. CAIN. Certainly, I would not argue at the moment with a man who must be sorely distressed by so many difficult problems as is the President today. But I would say that I and a good many other Americans understand and know what war is, and from the minute the first bullet was fired, particularly under the circumstances in which the first bullet was fired in Korea headed north, we Americans had a right to assume that it was the beginning of a larger war; but it was war with all its bloodshed and tragedy from the very minute the aggressor crossed the thirty-eighth parallel, and the determination of the United Nations was to drive the aggressor back from where he came.

Mr. MALONE. I will say to the distinguished Senator from Washington that the junior Senator from Nevada thoroughly agrees with the conclusions of the Senator from Washington.

Mr. CAIN. In my opinion it would be extremely good for the American people to understand the real situation, and I suppose they can only if they are told by the Chief Executive of the country that we are at war, and should settle down, fight it out, economically, socially, politically, and militarily, and win the war which has surrounded us on all sides and been a part of us since the 26th day of June, 1950.

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. CAIN. I yield.

Mr. MALONE. I see that even the Department of Commerce realizes there is now an emergency in existence. They have at last, at this late date, ordered that shipments of steel and rubber and munitions to Communist China be stopped.

Mr. CAIN. The Senator from Washington wishes it was neither a war nor an emergency. But it is both.

To continue, Mr. President, the report further states that employers are experiencing difficulty in recruiting and retaining in-migrant workers due to the inability of the new workers to find housing, and that commanding officers are expressing concern over the inability of military personnel to obtain housing.

That language, if I understand it, states that there is presumed to be, or that there may in the future be, a shortage of shelter in some 1,600 communities. If a housing shortage can be proven in any or all of these 1,600 cities, I defy any Senator or any other thinking person to prove that we can cure the shortage and create badly needed and immediate housing production by further imposing Federal rent control on that city. If I thought Federal rent control would produce any housing, I certainly would be in favor of it. If housing is imperatively needed in any industrial area or adjacent to any military establishment, why do we not do something about it, really? We shall not be doing anything about it by the passage of Senate Joint Resolution 207. If housing is imperatively needed in an industrial area or near a military establishment, let the Executive agencies accelerate and put back into motion all of the present legislation which has as its purpose aid to housing production, both private and public. Is there anything wrong with that?

Rent controls are generally thought to be a means of getting more housing units in which persons may live. When rent control does no such thing, let us look for a piece of machinery which will accomplish the purpose which all of us have in mind. Let this or the new Congress enact the necessary legislation which will provide and assist in the immediate construction of emergency housing, whether it be of the Lanham Act type, trailers, prefabricated units, barracks type, or Quonset huts. Passage of Senate Joint Resolution 207 will not produce or create any immediately needed housing. On the contrary, a continuing imposition of Federal rent regulation will have the effect of further reducing the existing inventory of rental facilities. The junior Senator from Washington has stated many times before, and his statement has never been challenged, that since the imposition of Federal rent control, over 2,000,000 rental units have disappeared from the rental market through sale, conversion, or voluntary withdrawal.

In further justification of Senate Joint Resolution 207, the proponents assert—and I read from the report:

If those units—

Meaning the 4,000,000 units previously referred to—

were now thrown onto an uncontrolled market, in view of the growing impact of the national preparedness program, excessive increases in rent would be entirely likely.

I vigorously dissent from that statement and all that it implies, but I shall not labor my dissent at this time.

Let me concede the statement to be correct for the purpose of this discussion of Senate Joint Resolution 207. How can we justify the imposition of a Federal law, a national law, on only 1,600 American cities who by their actions have clearly stated they do not wish the legislation? I assert that this proposed Federal law is not needed, for there are existing and time-proven constructive alternatives. New York State, with its locally designed regulation, is but one. It is locally administered, and assertions have been made by responsible citizens of that State that under no circumstances would they wish their present regulations replaced by Federal rent control.

State legislatures all over the Nation convene early in 1951. Those sovereign States should measure up to their responsibility and should take from the Federal Government this police power, for our National Government has before it in the days ahead far more important duties and obligations to its citizens.

But there are other workable alternatives to Senate Joint Resolution 207 which are operating and can be applied to regulate and control excessive rent increases. I shall give you in detail two of them.

First, I cite the example of a city immediately adjacent to a large Army post, and how the rental problems of servicemen and their families are being very satisfactorily resolved.

Mr. President, I am distressed that the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MAYBANK] is not in the Senate Chamber at the moment, because this first example relates to a city which is situated in his State.

Fort Jackson is 4 miles distant from Columbia, S. C., a city with a 1950 population of 90,000. Just prior to World War II, Fort Jackson was reactivated, in 1940. There was immediately indicated a trend toward a tight rental housing market. The Columbia Chamber of Commerce set up conferences between General Peyton, the post commanding officer, his staff, and the property owners' group, out of which the following plan was evolved and put into operation.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the plan, as it was designed and worked in South Carolina, be made a part of my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCMAHON in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CAIN. I thank the Chair.

The matter referred to is as follows:

1. The fort would establish a billeting office in the city, and would maintain an active list of available rentals voluntarily submitted by owners or agents.

2. A fair rents committee, composed of three (3) real estate agents and three (3) from the staff of Fort Jackson, with a representative from the chamber of commerce, was established with the following duties:

(a) Review any allegedly improper rental submitted by either landlord or tenant, or prospective landlord or tenant; after which, an analysis was made, from which a determination of fair rental was reached.

(b) If the landlord failed to acquiesce to the determination by the fair rents committee, the billeting officer was instructed to remove such property from the eligible list for occupancy by military personnel.

Only three (3) cases of any consequence arose, with solutions reached within ten (10) days. This resulted in holding the rent line on a voluntary basis and the property ownerships, generally, cooperated fully.

Fort Jackson was ordered to be deactivated about April 1949, shortly after the Military had urged upon the citizenry the importance of constructing 3,150 units for military personnel, with the implied threat that, if the citizens did not do so, the Government would. The citizens there put their shoulders to the wheel and in a remarkably short time initiated the construction of a substantial portion of the requested housing units.

When the Korean situation developed, the reactivation of Fort Jackson was ordered. Despite existing vacancies, the realtors and the chamber of commerce invited the Fort Jackson authorities to a housing conference. The result was the re-establishment of a rental committee, as above outlined, with a further guide for fair rental. This was to be a net 6 percent return to the property owner, based on current replacement costs as of the date of reviewal, less applicable depreciation. All expenses allowable under income tax law were to be taken into consideration in determining the net income. Fort Jackson now has approximately 30,000 on the Post and there has not been one single complaint for their committee to handle.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, I now give an example of a highly industrialized American city where, since 1942, the rental housing problem has been completely and satisfactorily handled at the local municipal level with no Federal intervention, or at Federal expense.

Flint, Mich., a city whose 1950 population is approximately 163,000, and in which area employment is at an all-time high—114,500—has never been under Federal rent control although it is situated in a defense rental area as designated under the original OPA Rent Control Act.

Mr. President, I think this story about Flint, Mich., will be of interest to many of the Members of this body. Therefore I ask unanimous consent that it be made a part of my remarks at this point in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Prior to OPA, the mayor of Flint had appointed a fair-rent committee which functioned properly and fairly, holding hearings, if requested, with both the landlord and tenant present and decisions were made. However, the committee had no power to enforce its rulings. On July 1, 1942, the OPA appointed a local rent administrator. A committee from the Genessee County Real Estate Board contacted the local civilian defense council and jointly wired a protest to Washington, based upon the OPA ruling that local conditions must warrant the appointment. OPA withdrew the appointment subject to further investigation. The fair-rent committee then proposed an ordinance covering rent control, following the Federal act except for registration and enforcement. The power of enforcement was given the municipal judges who were to be aided by the city attorney's office and free appraisals were to be made by the real-estate board. This ordinance became effective November 15, 1942. However, on November 10, OPA announced that an administrator's office would be opened in Flint on December 1, and on November 11 about 100 wires and letters were sent to Washington and Cleveland OPA offices, to their Congressmen, Senators, the Governor, and others, protesting that the situation did not warrant the appointment. Also, a four-page letter was sent to the President explaining the situation. This letter was signed by the city attorney, the taxpayers association, the Flint Council for Defense, chamber of commerce, CIO regional office, county CIO office, A. F. of L. Regional office, and the real-estate board.

OPA again withdrew the appointment and the local rent-control ordinance went into effect. While the ordinance followed the Federal policy, there were several differences. It was not necessary for landlords to register their dwellings and violations are enforced by municipal judges.

The workings of the ordinance are very simple. In the event that the landlord feels that he is entitled to an increase in rent, or a tenant feels that he is entitled to a decrease, they file a bill with the city clerk and an appraiser is sent out to investigate the property and a hearing is held before a municipal judge on the following Monday. All parties interested are allowed to voice any comments they may have and the appraiser expresses his opinion as to what the rent should have been as of March 1, 1942, the freeze date. It is then up to the municipal judge to set the rent upon what he thinks is a fair rent as of the freeze date.

There have been over 3,000 adjustments made since the ordinance went into effect.

At the time OPA decided to take Flint over in 1942, their own estimate for operation of OPA in Flint was $125,000 a year. It is easy to understand that this estimate today would be considerably higher. If the figure is right, $125,000 a year for 8 years would be $1,000,000. It appears to me that the savings of a million dollars in a city the size of Flint is commendable, for it is staggering to think of what the cost of administering rent control over the Nation has been.

Mr. CAIN. No, Mr. President, the passage of Senate Joint Resolution 207 cannot be justified by the words and predictions of the prophets of gloom and chaos who forever have insisted that rents will rise exclusively, that mass evictions will take place, and have even predicted riot and bloodshed, for none of these have happened in those cities and communities in which 8,000,000 units have been removed from Federal rent control. We have shown that if there be among these 1,600 cities a need for controls that need can be met through legislation by their parent States, their local governing bodies, or by voluntary cooperation between the parties at interest. These are the proven and tested alternatives to an extension of the present law. These American communities should be permitted and encouraged to allow their citizens the rights inherent in the ownership and management of private property. If the conduct of that management needs regulation, let it be done at their local level of government. We should not compel their continuing acceptance of Federal control when by their actions they have so clearly indicated their choice, which we, the Congress, gave to them in April 1949.

Mr. President, the junior Senator from Washington has confined this statement to the need or the lack of need of Senate Joint Resolution 207. We are not this afternoon debating a Federal rent-control bill. We are not arguing the merits or demerits of Federal property management.

We are not discussing the plight of property owners or the protection that should be afforded tenants. Those discussions and that legislation may likely come before the Eighty-second Congress. If and when full all-out mobilization comes, when the many powers given the Executive under the Production Act of 1950 may become operative, then we shall design a totally new regulatory statute applicable to rental housing, a statute which will be based upon and will reflect the economic facts of life as found in the year of 1951. Let us be done now and forever with any further extension of any part of that wartime emergency OPA statute of 1942, which, despite every effort of well-intentioned, very serious, energetic, and intelligent Members of succeeding Congresses to rewrite, amend, or adjust it, remains on our statute books today a travesty on our American spirit of fair play and equal justice.

It is my considered judgment that, certainly in my 4 years in the Senate, no statute has ever been so stupidly interpreted by those in the executive branch charged with its conduct. That conduct has been shot through with prejudice, with malice, and to some extent, I think, with dishonesty. The intent and wish of the Congress have been flagrantly violated by the Administrator of the Office of the Housing Expediter and by his staff. Administrative rules and regulations have been willfully designed to thwart many provisions of the law over which the Members of Congress—both Democrats and Republicans—labored long in their effort to provide some measure of relief and justice to American citizens. No, Mr. President, let us not inflict this miserable administration of a poor public law on these 1,600 cities beyond the 31st day of December, 1950.

Those cities have had the right, and until December 31 still have the right, as I read the law, to ask for and receive continuing Federal rent control. Perhaps all of the 1,600 cities will ask, between now and the end of the year, an additional 6 months of Federal rent controls, if that be their wish. That is not likely, of course, but the law gives every one of those 1,600 cities the right to do so. We cannot justify an insistence that these American communities accept what they so clearly indicate they simply do not want. Passage of Senate Joint Resolution 207 compels that acceptance.

Mr. President, under date of December 2, 1950, I received a provocative letter from a Mr. John Cotton, who writes to me from the city of San Diego, Calif., to give his version of what happened in that large California city following decontrol. I ask unanimous consent that his letter be made a part of my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SAN DIEGO, CALIF., December 2, 1950.

HON. HARRY CAIN,
United States Senator,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR CAIN: Rent decontrol in San Diego has presented no serious problem in the 3 months since the Expediter complied with the city council's resolution.

During the period following the city council's action, but before decontrol was effective, the rent director charged he was receiving dozens of complaints daily of exhorbitant rent increases. These calls were, however, presumed to have been largely telephone contacts; many may have been unconfirmed; many may have been crank calls.

The fact of the matter is that there has not been a single case of rent raise here which has warranted a news story in the San Diego newspapers. The only newspaper publicity unfavorable to landlords has been in occasional letters to the editor and several of these letters appear to have been written by the same individual. All have been general, with no citation of any specific increase.

Our office manages some 700 units which were decontrolled on September 1. We served notices on that day upon 555 tenants of increases to be effective October 1. The average increase was 14 percent. In dollars, it was $5.14, raising the average monthly rent from $36.58 to $41.72.

The fact that tenants had a satisfactory alternate to paying a rent which they thought too high was clearly demonstrated in the instance of an 8-unit bungalow court property at 1525-37 Union Street—partially furnished cottages with living-bedroom combination, kitchen and bath; fairly modern; right down town.

At this property, we had planned an increase from $34.50 per month to $42.50, with no immediate expenditure for furnishings or improvements, and we notified the tenants this would be their rent.

During the 30-day notice period, six of the tenants moved. We are advised five rented other quarters and one bought a home. We then spent $50 to $100 per unit in additional furniture and rerented the vacancies for $42.50 each.

It has been our experience in reviewing our own increases and the increases of other landlords that the average raise here has been less than the 30 percent which the Housing Expediter was allowing just before our decontrol. Many have not raised their rents at all—in this office we left the rents alone on about 145 units—many owners are making substantial expenditures on their properties to improve their value.

Another unusual example of the availability of housing here was demonstrated just this week. We took over the operation of a downtown apartment and hotel property as of December 1. This building is largely tenanted by families with children at rents of $10 to $12 weekly for two- and three-room apartments. Less than a week before we were to take over, someone maliciously circulated a rumor that the new management would evict all tenants with children. When we took over yesterday, we found 6 apartments out of 22 had been vacated. It was that easy for 6 tenants with children to go out in a few days and find another place, without even bothering whether this rumor were false—as it was.

It is well known that this defense area is enjoying a steady influx of population through the stepping up of aircraft plant activity and the military. While there have been no authoritative predictions as to the rate of our population growth since the beginning of Korea, an increased housing shortage which might have been presumed to result from this influx is apparently being prevented by the high rate of residential construction. New housing is being constructed in the city of San Diego at the rate of 270 to 628 per month for the last 6 months (average 448); and in the county outside the various incorporated cities at the rate of from 234 to 426 (average 321). This does not even include the new housing in the smaller cities in the county.

In talking a few days ago with the head of the housing office of a large aircraft plant here which solicits housing for its employees, I was informed that their office had an average of nine requests for rental housing per day over a 4-day period 1 month ago, which appeared to be typical. During this same period they received an average of 27 private rental listings per day and placed an average of 5 tenants per day for sure, with a probability that more accepted housing units to which they were referred without reporting back to the housing office. The placements does not include tenants placed in Federal war housing, which would account for 3 more per day during this period. The rents requested on private listings received by the plant on the day of my interview ranged from $25 to $90 per month, with an average of $61.70 per month.

In closing may I say that the effect of the international situation on San Diego does not appear to create a situation which would require any rent control here. I believe further that the position of the aircraft plants here as to housing for their immigrant workers could be immediately improved by making two simple changes in the operation of the Lanham Act (war housing) housing projects here. First a general increase in rents to a realistic figure which would force out thousands of tenants who only stay in Federal housing because it is such a bargain; secondly, the granting of the authority with instructions to act to the PHA to evict tenants who are not in defense production, so as to provide this housing specifically for that purpose.

Trusting this may be of some interest, I am sincerely,

JOHN COTTON.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, I have also recently received an article entitled "Flint Meets Rent-Control Problem Without Federal Aid," by Merle Oliver. The article was published in the Detroit News for November 12, 1950. In the article Mr. Oliver concludes that Flint, Mich., has met the rent-control problem without Federal aid. I should like to draw Mr. Oliver's conclusions and the article on this subject to the attention of my colleagues; for that reason, I ask unanimous consent that the article be made a part of my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FLINT MEETS RENT-CONTROL PROBLEM WITHOUT FEDERAL AID

(By Merle Oliver)

FLINT, MICH., November 11.—An extraordinary coalition of real estate operators, union leaders, landlords, tenants, and city officials has put Flint in a class by itself when it comes to rent control. It has saved the Federal Government an estimated $1,000,000,000 in 8 years.

When Federal rent controls were set up in 1942, a plan was devised here to keep the bureaucrats out of Flint.

Everybody agreed that control was unavoidable but wanted it handled by hometown people. So the city set up its own rent-control ordinance and persuaded the Washington OPA people to stay away.

Rents were frozen at the March 1, 1942, level as in cities under Federal rent control. Landlords and tenants have the right to apply to municipal court for adjustments.

LANDLORDS JAILED

Hearings are held, and if the judge decides that the rent is too low or too high, he grants an increase or decrease. Members of the Genesee County real estate board serve as investigators and witnesses.

In cases of overcharge, tenants can sue and recover up to treble damages. There is also a penalty of 90 days in jail or $100 fine for flagrant cases. Municipal Judge Frank W. Cain sent two landlords to jail for shutting off a tenant's heat.

There has been one blanket increase in rents. In 1946 the city council allowed a 10-percent increase for unheated units and 15 percent for heated apartments. There has been no other application for a general increase.

The ordinance written by former City Attorney Walter C. Krapohl, covers furnished living quarters and hotels as well as unfurnished units.

HOUSES FOR RENT

"Some instances of chiseling have been uncovered," Judge Cain said. "We still hear two or three cases a week. Apparently the ordinance has been generally satisfactory."

Employment in the area is at an all-time high of 114,500. The average weekly wage here for factory workers is $79.17, compared with $74.90 in Wayne County.

Nevertheless, places for rent still are available, Judge Cain said. An average two-bedroom home rents for about $25 or $30 a month.

John W. Davis, realtor, who is chairman of the rent investigating committee of the Genesee County real estate board, said that many landlords have taken advantage of loopholes in the ordinance, "but the result usually is to even up unfairness of the law."

Real estate taxes jumped 50 percent here last year with the removal of mill-tax limitations.

OWNERS INCREASE

"All the big operators have left the real estate rental business," Davis said. "They sold out years ago. No rent units have been built. About the only landlords are owners of one or two houses who are hanging on hoping for decontrol and people who own two-unit dwellings.

"Landlords have sold at attractive prices. A house that brings $25 or $30 a month rent can be sold for $6,000, with $1,000 down and $55 a month for the next 11 years, with 6-percent interest. It would take more than twice as long to get the same amount in rent."

Occupant ownership of dwellings in Flint is above 70 percent, compared with 50 percent in 1942.

"During those 8 years, many tenants have become landlords, and these former tenants now holler the loudest that rents are too low," Davis said.

OWNER LOSES HOUSE

Raymond French, assistant city attorney, who handles rent control, said there have been numerous complaints about the ordinance, because every case has a dissatisfied loser. However, nobody has appealed a decision to circuit court, not even the landlord who lost a house to a tenant in treble damages and owed still more.

Donnel Chapman, regional director for the UAW-CIO said local rent control in general has been a good thing for the city. When the Marvel-Schebler Carburetor Co. moved to Peoria, Ill., recently, all its employees here were offered jobs at the new location with continued seniority.

"They investigated Peoria housing conditions and came back to Flint," Chapman said.

PLAN BRINGS PROFIT

Davis said that Federal rent control in Flint for the last 8 years would have cost an estimated $1,000,000. Local control brought a net profit of $100 for the period.

Whether local rent control is continued probably will depend on what happens in the rest of the country.

"People here believe that extension of Federal rent control is inevitable," Davis said. "There is no move to repeal the local ordinance, because landlords and tenants alike prefer to run our own business and keep the bureaucrats out."

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

GOVERNMENT PURCHASES OF WOOL

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD an article entitled "Government To Buy 100,000,000 Pounds of Wool on Open Market." The article appears in the Wall Street Journal for Tuesday, November 29.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

GOVERNMENT TO BUY 100,000,000 POUNDS OF WOOL ON OPEN MARKET

WASHINGTON.—The Government announced it will contract in the open market for a maximum of 100,000,000 pounds of wool by next June 30 to meet emergency reserve requirements.

A five-nation conference at Melbourne, Australia, has turned down a proposal to set aside a portion of the Australian wool to meet United States emergency needs, the State Department announcement said. Such a system of preemption was turned down as impracticable, the statement said.

As a result of the Melbourne decision, the Department said that of the estimated total United States need, 30,000,000 pounds will be bought by the Commodity Credit Corporation from American merchants for processing into military clothing.

The balance will be obtained through ordinary trade channels as required by successful contractors.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, in this article it is stated that the Government announced that to meet emergency requirements and for stockpiling purposes, it would purchase 100,000,000 pounds of wool in the open market by next June 30. On the same date, when the article was written, it is noted that fine wool, as quoted on the commodity markets, sold at $2.55 a pound, or $1.06 a pound higher than the same grade was selling for on January 1, 1950. The major portion of that increase has taken place since the outbreak of the war in Korea. For the benefit of the American taxpayers who will pay for this stockpiling program, I think it might be well to review the record of the Government's activities in wool during the past months.

First, I call particular attention to the fact that this stockpiling of strategic materials was authorized by the Congress on July 23, 1946, but it was only last week that the Government, with its inventory of wool practically zero, finally decided that wool was an essential commodity.

The Government's inventories of wool for the past 4 years have been as follows:

	Pounds
June 30, 1947	424,659,861
June 30, 1948	166,653,936
June 30, 1949	96,020,242
June 30, 1950	454,752

Notwithstanding our stockpiling program which has been in effect during the past 3½ years, we find that these once huge inventories of wool have been declared surplus and disposed of at a loss to the American taxpayers of $44,030,347.79. Eleven million two hundred fifteen thousand nine hundred forty-two dollars and forty-nine cents of this loss was sustained on the 96,000,000 pounds which were disposed of during the 12-month period immediately preceding the outbreak of war in Korea, with the final sales of this liquidation program being reported on July 1, 1950, 1 week after the war had begun.

Today, with the price of wool having skyrocketed over $1 per pound, this means that the 100,000,000 pounds which the Government has just authorized to be purchased will cost the American taxpayers over $100,000,000 more than they received for the 96,000,000 pounds which were sold during the past 12 months.

Think of it, Mr. President. Since June 30, 1949, we have sold over 96,000,000 pounds of wool which originally cost the American taxpayers $75,704,008.03, at a loss of $11,215,000, on the basis that this wool was not essential to our national defense program. Now that the market has advanced $1.06 per pound, we are proposing to buy this same wool back, in many instances from the same merchants to whom it was sold. This one transaction will represent a loss to the American taxpayers of over $110,000,000.

I can understand the Government's need of wool to meet its military requirements today. I can understand that these needs are greater today as a result of the outbreak of the war in Korea than they were anticipated to be 12 months ago.

But I do not understand, if wool is a strategic material of such importance that, in addition to buying our current requirements, it is necessary to stockpile additional inventories, why it was not so classified last year or 2 years ago when the Government had substantial inventories on hand.

This is just another example of where millions of dollars could have been saved had the bureaucrats in charge of the program exercised proper judgment. Perhaps it is this stupid policy which explains why we find our boys fighting in Korea without adequate supplies, notwithstanding the fact that over $57,000,000,000 has been spent by our Military Establishment during the past 4 years. Perhaps it accounts for an article which appeared in the same paper in a column which was headlined: "Washington is caught off guard again; it fumbles for new plan."

CONFERENCES OF THE PRESIDENT WITH PRIME MINISTER ATTLEE

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, apparently the Senate is about to recess, unless the distinguished majority leader has other measures he wishes to take up. Earlier today, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. KEM], who is not presently on the floor, asked unanimous consent that a resolution offered by him be referred to the proper committee and asked unanimous consent that it be treated as a privileged matter, and be brought back for consideration by the Senate not later than Friday of this week. I wonder whether we could not have unanimous consent to that request now, in the absence of the Senator from Missouri. That would take care of the matter.

Mr. LUCAS. I do not know anything about the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair was not here at the time, but the Chair is informed by the Parliamentarian that the resolution was ordered to lie on the table, in order that it might be considered tomorrow.

Mr. WHERRY. That is correct. I am the one who made the request. At that time, no member of the Foreign Relations Committee was present. The acting majority leader said he would like to have an hour or two in which to take it up with members of that committee, and that if the request were renewed later in the day, he might be able to give the answer. As minority leader, I asked that the resolution lie on the table temporarily, at the same time stating that this request would be made later in the day, after there had been an opportunity for consultation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. For the information of the Chair, will the Senator from Nebraska state briefly the purport of the resolution?

Mr. WHERRY. The resolution offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. KEM] contained certain provisions admonishing the President that, in the event any agreements were made with a foreign power, they should be made in compliance with the constitutional processes. There would be, I think, a question of advice and consent, more than anything else. The Senator from Missouri did not request immediate consideration of the resolution. He asked that it be referred to the proper committee, which I think is the regular procedure, and which I think should be done. He then asked, however, because of its importance, that it be treated somewhat as the resolution (S. Res. 368) submitted by the Special Committee To Investigate Interstate Crime was treated here a few days ago, and that it be reported back not later than Friday, if possible, in order that it might be given consideration by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair feels that this resolution should be referred to the Foreign Relations Committee.

Mr. WHERRY. I think that is correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is it the request of the minority leader that something in the nature of an appendix be attached to the resolution?

Mr. WHERRY. Yes—that it be reported back to the Senate for consideration not later than Friday of this week.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, that presents another interesting and very serious question, it seems to me. I do not want to take on the obligations or duties of the Committee on Foreign Relations, and before a resolution of that kind is acted upon it would seem to me we ought to have a quorum call. The chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations ought to be here to defend the position of that committee. He may agree to it, but I doubt that he will. I think it presents one of the most serious questions to come before the Senate. I am not sure that I understood the full purport of the resolution. I say candidly that I was not present when the resolution was offered.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I should like to say on behalf of the majority leader that he was not on the floor earlier in the day when this matter came up. It came up at the time the Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON] had the floor. At that time, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. KEM] offered the resolution, and I think it was his intention to request its immediate consideration. However, I felt that in all fairness to the committee, it should be referred to the committee, and then come back to the Senate for consideration. It was my view that in that manner consideration of the resolution would be expedited. So, at the conclusion of his remarks, the Senator from Missouri asked that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and that it be reported to the Senate as a privileged matter not later than Friday of this week. The acting majority leader, the Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON], then made a statement in almost the same words used by the majority leader just now, namely, that he would take the matter up with the chairman of the committee. I said that was agreeable to me. I suggested that the way to do that was to request that the resolution lie on the table temporarily, and that, at some time later in the afternoon, the Senator ask unanimous consent to have it handled in the manner I have indicated.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, in view of the importance of the subject and the lateness of the hour, it seems to me the resolution could well lie over until tomorrow. In the meantime, the present occupant of the chair [Mr. MCMAHON], who is a member of the Committee on Foreign Relations, could confer with the chairman and other members of the committee, and decide what should be done about it. I shall more or less abide by the decision of the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. WHERRY. It is understood that tomorrow, after the Senate convenes, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. KEM] may again make his request. I hope by that time the members of the Committee on Foreign Relations will have been consulted with respect to the subject, and that it will be possible to handle the resolution in the manner suggested. I think it is a fair request. There is nothing contained in the resolution which requires a hearing. It is a question of judgment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Inasmuch as the present occupant of the chair, as a member of the Committee on Foreign Relations, will undertake the responsibility of informing the chairman of the committee of what has transpired with respect to this subject, the Chair wishes to be certain that he understands exactly what is desired by the Senator from Nebraska. Does the Senator from Nebraska desire to have the resolution referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and that the committee be directed to report on the resolution, favorably or unfavorably, by Friday of this week?

Mr. WHERRY. That is correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That will be the Senator's motion tomorrow?

Mr. WHERRY. It will be in the form of a unanimous-consent request, because I do not wish to displace the unfinished business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the Senator's thoughts, and the Chair will communicate them to the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

be no reports of committees, the nominations on the Executive Calendar will be stated.

DIRECTOR OF PRICE STABILIZATION

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Michael V. Di Salle, of Ohio, to be Director of Price Stabilization.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. WHERRY. I should like to state that there is no objection to bringing up any other nominations on the calendar, except that before any further nominations are brought up we should have a quorum call.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator refer to the nomination of Michael V. Di Salle to be Director of Price Stabilization?

Mr. WHERRY. No; that nomination has been confirmed. There is no objection to bringing up any other nominations, but before doing so we should have a quorum call.

Mr. LUCAS. It is a little late to have a quorum call.

Mr. WHERRY. I merely wanted to make that statement.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, as in legislative session, I move that the Senate stand in recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

CONFIRMATION

Executive nomination confirmed by the Senate December 6 (legislative day of November 27) 1950:

DIRECTOR OF PRICE STABILIZATION

Michael V. Di Salle, of Ohio, to be Director of Price Stabilization.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 6, 1950

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Rabbi Gunther Plaut, Mount Zion Temple, St. Paul, Minn., offered the following prayer:

Our God and God of our fathers, in the midst of darkening skies and on the eve of a bitter anniversary of our people, we scan the horizon for signs of confidence. Of needs, our thoughts turn to Thee who alone canst provide us with sustenance for our hope-starved souls.

In a world which in the agony of its wounds and fears looks either to cynical nihilism or cheap panaceas, we thank Thee for men and women who can preserve their sense of history and proportion, who can still see man in the maze of mass, and will continue to champion his cause as a person of dignity and worth.

We pray in this hour for our valiant sons and daughters who bear our burden in far-away places. May our dedication match their devotion.

We pray that Thy support and insight may guide the men and women of this Congress. Give them the confidence to know that where they will lead with courage the people will follow in trust. Make them ever aware of the fact that sacrifice for freedom is not sacrifice, but service willingly offered—service for our country and service also to the divine goal of humanity, living in liberty.

Thus we ask Thy blessing upon their deliberations and their work. With freedom as their guidepost, may they, with Thee as their fortress, serve our country and thus the hopes of man. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Woodruff, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 483. An act to extend the time limit within which certain suits in admiralty may be brought against the United States; and

H. R. 2365. An act for the relief of the city of Chester, Ill.

THE LATE CHARLES G. ROSS

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I regret to announce the death of Charles Ross, the President's press representative, at his desk at the White House late last evening. He may be considered as one of the casualties of the war.

He was one of Missouri's most distinguished sons. He had served in every professional newspaper capacity from reporter to editor of both local and metropolitan newspapers. He received from his alma mater and from other schools the highest honorary degrees which could be conferred. As the President's liaison with the press of the Nation and the world he was worth a division in the field.

His relations with the Congress were especially cordial. And his unexpected and untimely death is not only a national disaster not easily sustained but a personal loss to every Member of the House.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I join with my friend the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] in expressing my deep sorrow at the death of Mr. Charles Ross, secretary to the President. It was my privilege to know Mr. Ross for over 25 years. He was an honorable gentleman, a man of great ability, of fine character, and the highest integrity. The country has lost a faithful public servant in the death of Mr. Ross. My deepest sympathy is extended to his widow and family in their hour of sorrow.

Mr. RAYBURN. In the passing of Charles Ross I feel a deep personal loss. We had been close friends for more than 30 years. He was able, patriotic, and a gentleman of the best type. To his wife and other loved ones I express my deepest sympathy.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may extend their remarks at this point in the RECORD on the life and service of Mr. Charles G. Ross.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. PRIEST. Mr. Speaker, I was shocked and deeply grieved over the death of Charlie Ross.

As press secretary to President Truman, Mr. Ross has carried tremendously heavy burdens for several years. The present crisis in Korea increased the weight of the already heavy load, and he died in line of duty.

Long before he became a Presidential secretary, Charlie Ross had distinguished himself in the field of journalism and was for many years regarded in those circles as one of the Nation's great editorial writers.

In these trying hours his calm judgment will be greatly missed by the President and by the newspapermen of the Nation, who had found in him an understanding and helpful friend at all times.

I join with other Members here and with the Nation in extending deep sympathy to his family.

UNITED STATES COAST GUARD

Mr. CANFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I called the headquarters of the United States Coast Guard this morning regarding the charges made yesterday in a report of a subcommittee of the House Committee on Post Office and Civil Service. They were serious charges and they reflected against the Coast Guard.

I was amazed to learn that the report was the product of two investigators and that no committee hearings were held in which the leadership of the Guard were questioned or permitted to make answer.

Frankly, I did not think that this body was proceeding in this way.

The public, I am sure, will be surprised to learn that the defendants here were not heard and the charges cannot be accepted as facts until the full truth is known.

Mr. Speaker, if the United States Coast Guard is going to do the job that we want them to do, and that is to guard properly the ports and harbors of the United States against sneak atomic bombs being brought here in merchant ships or other vessels, we will have to give them more officers and men. I do not like this kind of procedure and I am protesting against it here today.

DEFENSE PRODUCTION

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, the time has come to push with even more zeal our defense efforts. It is of urgent importance that the production of planes and tanks and other war equipment and material be increased, and increased at once. To accomplish this purpose, the use of priorities and allocations should be pursued to the exclusion of normal operations, if this is necessary, and certainly to the curtailment of them. It is extremely important that this production program should be given top place in our economy and without further delay.

To accomplish this result will call for inconveniences and some disruption; but the hour has come when we must increase our production of these vitally needed implements of defense. We are not making the progress which I think we must make for survival.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. DAVIS of Georgia asked and was given permission to address the House today for 20 minutes, following the legislative business of the day and any other special orders heretofore entered.

PRIME MINISTER ATTLEE

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I hold in my hand a reproduction of a photograph put out by the National Economic Council, Inc., 7501 Empire State Building, New York 1, N. Y.

I assume other Members received a like document in the morning mail. I am using it now so that those who read the RECORD may be advised of the situation. I think Mr. Attlee is a gentleman from England who is visiting the President—here on a mission to obtain money and munitions of war from us to defend his country, which the press advises us is still dealing, commercially at least, with Russia, which is insisting that the Chinese Communists be given a seat in the United Nations.

Mr. Attlee is also, we are told, telling the President where our Armed Forces are to fight.

This reproduction shows Mr. Attlee—but let the document speak for itself. I quote from the statement under the reproduction as follows:

> During the Spanish Revolution, 1936–39, Mr. Clement Attlee, Socialist, then a Member of the British Parliament, visited the British contingent of the Communist International Brigade in Spain at the invitation of the Spanish Government which at that time was under Communist control.
> The above reproduction, from a photograph now in our possession, shows the present British Prime Minister, Clement Attlee, joining with his comrades in giving the Communist clenched-fist salute.
> Its significance should be borne in mind in estimating how ready the British Socialist Labor Government will be to help America to resist Communist attacks on the American way of life, and attacks by Soviet Russia herself.
> This, of course, is not to say Mr. Attlee is or ever was a Communist, but it shows the bond of understanding between communism and socialism—both hostile to private enterprise, private property, and individual initiative.

Is it not time that the United States of America follow in the footsteps of every other nation which is represented in the United Nations, in the North Atlantic Pact, and, do as they do, adopt and follow a policy designed to advance the welfare of our people, protect the security of our people?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

WHITE HOUSE CONFERENCE ON CHILDREN

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. Speaker, since 1909 every 10 years there has been a White House conference on children and youth. In 1950 it is titled "Midcentury White House Conference on Children and Youth."

Representatives of various organizations are in Washington this week from all over the United States of America. The participants in the Conference have an opportunity before them as well as a challenge to develop suggestions in which children can be given security and guidance in the last half of the twentieth century.

These national meetings have come as a result of citizen initiative. Each of these meetings has had a definite impact as to methods by which parents, private groups, and local, State, and National governmental agencies have sought to meet the pressing problems of the younger generation. The recommendations of the Conference now in session can greatly influence all our citizens.

I join other Members of Congress in applauding the efforts of the participants in this great Conference, and trust that their deliberations and resolutions will be of benefit.

MIDCENTURY WORLD OUTLOOK CONFERENCE, BOB JONES UNIVERSITY, GREENVILLE, S. C., DECEMBER 11–16, 1950

Mr. BRYSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRYSON. Mr. Speaker, at no time during the dozen years of my service in this body have I observed my colleagues more serious-minded. It was our duty to pass necessary legislation for the prosecution and successful technical conclusion of World War II. Without detracting from the gravity of situations confronting our predecessors through the years, I make bold to assert that we have met responsibilities without precedent in the history of our country. In spite of all the efforts we have made to lead and share with others the well-earned blessings which have come to us from honest toil and faithful prayers, these are the gravest days of history. We not only are beset with those who would destroy us from without, but evil forces from within our borders are conspiring against us. If we would continue to live as free people, it is imperative that we put first things first. The pagan philosophy of communism is bent upon destroying Christian religion and freedom everywhere. It is now later than we think. Time is of the essence. Total mobilization is imperative. I therefore call upon you, my colleagues, to alert yourselves against the evil today.

In this connection, Mr. Speaker, I call attention to a Midcentury World Outlook Conference to be held in my home town of Greenville, S. C., at Bob Jones University, from December 11 to December 16. An extensive program has been arranged for the occasion. Many leaders of the free world will speak during the conference, representing the views of their respective countries. It is fitting that this meeting is to be held at this time and in the environment of such an institution.

Bob Jones University was founded by Dr. Bob Jones, Sr., a man now 67 years old, who began his ministry at the age of 15 and has preached face to face to more people than any other living evangelist. Dr. Jones' work has taken him to all the States and 30 foreign countries. Dr. Bob Jones, Jr., who is known as a great Shakespearean authority and who is also a great preacher, as well as a great evangelist and author, is president of the university, and his father is chairman of the board of trustees.

The university occupies what is in many respects the most attractive and modern educational plant to be found anywhere in America. The institution is located on a beautiful 150-acre tract of rolling land just at the city limits of Greenville. The campus fronts on the four-lane superhighway between Greenville and Spartanburg, which is part of United States Highway No. 29 between Washington and Atlanta. It faces the foothills of the Great Smokies and overlooks the business district of my home city. Construction of the entire university plant began in July 1946 and was completed in time for occupancy for the fall term of 1947–48. The buildings are of modern architecture, of cream-colored brick and reinforced concrete construction with trim of Bedford limestone.

In spite of its new physical plant, the university should not be thought of as a new institution but as an enlargement and expansion of Bob Jones College, which, during the 20 years of its history, became known around the world as standing firmly for certain principles. Bob Jones University stands firmly for the same principles and continues to declare them. It is nondenominational but stands without apology for the old-time religion and is uncompromisingly American in its outlook.

The purpose of Dr. Jones, Sr., in founding the institution was "to make this university a center of the highest academic standards and Christian culture to which carefully chosen young people will come from all parts of the world and receive their training and from which these trained Christian leaders will go forth to render service to our Lord in all corners of the globe."

Bob Jones University has a spirit all its own, combining an atmosphere of culture without cold formality, of youthful enthusiasm without rowdiness, and of scholarship without "mustiness." This institution is not typical of any one section of America. Its 3,000 students come from all the States and from 26 foreign countries.

In speaking of the work of the university, Dr. Jones, Jr., the president, has said:

> We believe that properly trained young men and women are character-prepared for whatever emergencies they may meet in life, whether those emergencies are prosperity or adversity, peace or war. Even before the Second World War when many university and college graduates were out of work, all graduates of our institution had good positions and were leaders in their chosen fields.
> While nearly 1,100 of our students are going out into the ministry, approximately 500 to mission fields, and a number into other forms of Christian work, a great many of them are planning to be lawyers, doctors, teachers, business executives, etc.
> We believe that because of the intensely Christian atmosphere of our institution and because of our emphasis on individual attention to each student, we are in a better position to do work in the fields that we cover than any other institution. Any student may go for advice or assistance to any member of the faculty at any time.
> The motto of Bob Jones University, as displayed on its corporate seal, is Petimus, credimus—We seek, we trust. We seek to inculcate into our students a desire for knowledge of the arts and sciences, and we seek to satisfy that desire. We trust the Bible as the inspired Word of God, the Lord Jesus Christ as the only Hope of the world, and His Gospel as the solution to the problems of our day.

Dr. Jones, Jr., is universally regarded as one of the world's foremost Shakespearean authorities and actors. His interest and participation is the moving force of the superb dramatic productions by the University Classic Players. These productions, as well as the performances by the University Opera Association, Oratorio Society, and other musical groups, are presented in the university's Rodeheaver Audtorium, one of the finest in the world. Last year, the university dedicated its $75,000 radio station, WMUU, and this year, construction of the film studios was completed and production of Christian films was begun by Unusual Films.

At present, Bob Jones University is undertaking another unusual project. From December 11 to December 16, the institution is having a Mid-Century World Outlook Conference. Among those participating in the meeting will be many outstanding international figures, including ambassadors, ministers, United Nations delegates, and others, each to speak on his own country—its present condition and future outlook, aspirations, and hopes. Dr. Daniel Poling, well known to many of you as a great conservative theologian, but who is progressive in all of his approach to modern problems, will speak on the world outlook from a religious standpoint. Our Gov. J. Strom Thurmond will bring a message of greeting and other citizens of South Carolina will be on the platform. This program promises not only to be extremely interesting but informative, and in these days of world crisis a particular benefit to all our people. I am authorized to extend to you and through you to your constituents everywhere a most hearty welcome to this most important meeting.

THE MARINES IN KOREA

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, this morning an incident brought to my attention the valor our fighting men are showing amidst the agony of this horrible Korean war. It is a story of some 20,000 Marines. Amidst all the cold and horror of this war with every person in every hamlet in hostile land their enemy, they are forced to retreat but they are showing sublime courage. They are retreating, yes; but under terrible difficulties they are fighting and cutting their way through rough and mountainous country and taking their wounded with them, instead of allowing their wounded to die or be taken prisoner. If they had been willing to leave their wounded behind they would be out today, but they are marines and fiercely proud of being marines; fiercely proud of being Americans. I have never known of a finer example of courage, mental and physical courage, than those marines are showing in Korea today.

May God bless them. May we show our gratitude by defending them and by their care.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts has expired.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mrs. BOLTON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, to revise and extend my remarks and include an article.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

[Mrs. BOLTON of Ohio addressed the House. Her remarks appear in the Appendix.]

ARMING OF GERMAN AND JAPANESE NATIONALS

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Speaker, more than a year ago I visited Europe and was greatly impressed with the necessity of promptly providing some strong military force which could reasonably expect to stop a Russian invasion on the ground. I recognized, as I believe many people are now beginning to recognize, that we can expect little real support from the people of Western Germany, France, Belgium, or of other European countries unless we can hold out to them the prospect of actually preventing invasion. It is not enough to tell these people that we will return and liberate them after a period of Russian occupation.

I recognized then that it was impossible for the United States to provide the needed manpower without placing our own country on a 100-percent war footing and drafting men from essential industries. On the contrary, I saw literally thousands of unemployed Germans of military age, who could not hope to secure a better job than a place in the United States Army. I, therefore, suggested that we should immediately enlist in the United States Army as many as 25 divisions of German nationals for the defense of Europe, and approximately a similar number of Japanese for the defense of Asia. I suggested that these recruits should be volunteers, that they should be paid by the United States Government in their own national currency, which would be purchased from their local government, thereby creating dollar buying power just as effectively as if we had made a gift of dollars.

I pointed out that we could maintain these Germans in Europe and Japanese in Asia at a far less cost to our Government than is involved in supporting a like number of American troops in the same areas.

I have not suggested that we abandon the build-up of Armed Forces in the United States. I know this will continue to be necessary, but I do suggest that these European and Asiatic forces would be of tremendous value to us in furnishing a hard core around which to build the defenses of Western Europe and of Eastern Asia. Until such a nucleus is established, and until it is strong enough to offer a reasonable prospect of being able to stop aggression, no amount of diplomatic nicety is going to induce the people who are adjacent to the Red Army to risk their own national existence on any kind of North Atlantic, United Nations, Western European, or other joint defense force. There is no way whereby we can give other free nations the needed assurance of effective strength than to place a substantial armed force in both Europe and Asia.

Surely the terrible events of recent days should convince the most skeptical that we must use whatever resources are at hand. The manpower of Western Germany and Japan is at hand. We should use it, not only for our own defense, but for the defense of Germany and Japan themselves.

When I made this proposal more than a year ago, it met with such favorable response at the hands of the members of the Armed Services Committee that I was encouraged to hope that the committee would take positive action. I realize that matters of this kind are more effectively initiated by the committee which has jurisdiction of the subject matter. The committee, however, took no action. About 4 months ago I, therefore, introduced a bill, H. R. 9360, to authorize the President to accept enlistments of nationals of other countries into the armed services of the United States, and for other purposes.

The bill was referred by the Committee on Armed Services to the Department of Defense. I have just been furnished with a copy of the Department's comments on the bill, advising that the Department is making an over-all study of all phases of enlistment of aliens and foreign nationals. The Department states:

> In view of the circumstances set out above, it is recommended that no action be taken on H. R. 9360.

Mr. Speaker, the Department of Defense can undoubtedly write a better bill than I have written. Undoubtedly the study referred to is highly desirable, but the pressure of events is such that the Department does not have further time for deliberation. This is not a new proposal. I made it 15 months ago. It is not one on which it is necessary to make new or original research. It has been actively discussed for more than a year. If the Department or the committee desires to use another approach to the subject, that is understandable; but the Department should act and make a positive recommendation. The committee should act and pass positive legislation.

The Members of this House can "pass the buck" to the committee, and the committee can, in turn, pass it to the Department. I know that this game of "buck passing" is in keeping with time-honored military traditions, but it is not going to save the life of a single American soldier. It is not going to prevent a military debacle in Korea, and it is not going to avoid the complete breakdown of the United Nations.

Mr. Speaker, if we are to save our armies, if we are to maintain the slightest hope of world peace, if we are to keep intact any international organization, if we are to entertain the last lingering hope that western Europe may be protected, we must build up our ground forces with the utmost speed. We must use whatever resources are at hand. The manpower resources of Germany and Japan are on the ground. They are trained; they need only an opportunity to enlist and receive American equipment and organization.

OUR SECRETARY OF STATE

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, we hear from certain unenlightened individuals demands for a change in our office of Secretary of State. There are demands for resignation, ouster, impeachment, and some even would ride the Secretary out on a rail. Personally I have great faith in Secretary of State Dean Acheson. I deplore the emotional outbursts against him, especially in this hour of peril. One does not change barrels while going over Niagara. This is a time for unity, not vituperation and abuse. This is the time for harmony, not bitterness amongst us; for sanity, and not breast-thumping demagogery; for light, and not mere sound and fury.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, to revise and extend my remarks, and to include excerpts from today's newspaper.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

[Mr. RANKIN addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

SEPARATION OF SUBSIDY FROM AIR-MAIL PAY

Mr. McSWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 854 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9184) to provide for the separation of subsidy from air-mail pay, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 2 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. McSWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ALLEN] and at this time I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, this will probably be the last rule that I shall have the honor and pleasure of presenting before this House. I am deeply grateful to my distinguished chairman, Judge SABATH, for entrusting so many of the rules to me for presentation.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McSWEENEY. I yield gladly to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. I might suggest to the gentleman, the last speech in the House at this session.

Mr. McSWEENEY. I appreciate the friendly interruption and encouraging suggestion of the distinguished majority leader, which I am glad to accept.

I want to say that my association with him and the members of the Rules Committee has been most inspiring and helpful and I am grateful to all its membership for their friendly attitude. I also want to express my thanks to Judge WOOD, chairman of the Un-American Activities Committee, and to those fine friends and fellow members of this committee who have also shown such a friendly and cooperative attitude toward me. Our friendly and impartial Speaker and our inspiring leader, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK], kindly approved my having these fine committee assignments. To the friendly and helpful staff of the House of Representatives for their many courtesies I convey my heartfelt thanks.

The disappointment of being defeated for the House of Representatives is not alone the defeat itself but it is in my being deprived of the association of a fine group of patriotic men and women of this great legislative body who are struggling, each in his own light, to protect the well-being of our country.

I do not like parting speeches; I do not like farewell admonishments or suggestions, so I am, therefore, just merely in an humble way expressing the hope that a gracious God will guide the hearts and minds of our President and all others in authority, including the Members of Congress and especially my successor. I hope that you friends who have been so kind to me in my humble efforts to bring service to my great diversified district, the Sixteenth of Ohio, the best service I could render will extend that same cooperation to my successor so that he, in turn, may be aided in serving these fine people of our district. I am turning over to him all files with pending cases with the hope that there will be no interruption of the service which I tried to render. This will facilitate my successor's work; it will reduce duplication of departmental work; and, I am sure, will be beneficial to my constituents for whom our efforts were being put forth.

I received a letter from a gentlewoman in Millersburg, Ohio, Miss Aurelia Kuhn. She has been an almost lifelong friend of my wife's and mine and her letter was among the most beautiful I received from interested friends. In this letter she quotes the following:

Keep a green bough in your heart and God will send you a singing bird.

May I ask you Members of Congress, those in public life, the men in our armies, and those of us who are in civilian capacities to accept this admonishment and not only keep "a green bough in our hearts" but let us say "keep an olive branch in our hearts and God will send us probably not a singing bird but, let us hope a dove of peace."

Thank you for your patience, and now to the business of the day.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 854 makes in order the consideration of the bill H. R. 9184 that has for its purpose the separation of what we used to call subsidies to the airborne mail, so that we will know exactly what is being spent for this purpose.

I am not going into the bill in detail but I glean from the bill the fact that it does help the people of the country to know how much is being paid as a subsidy and how much is being allocated for the carrying of the mail alone. I believe every thoughtful American citizen merely wants to know what is happening and when he knows, I have found him, in general, to be in accord with most programs. So this bill will merely make available to the people of the whole country that knowledge. I think there have been criticisms of the Post Office Department because they do not know exactly how much is subsidy and how much is, in reality, actual cost. This bill will clarify that situation.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may require.

Mr. Speaker, H. R. 9184, the bill presently before us is a very controversial one. Only this morning, in order to have a better understanding, I contacted four of my colleagues. Two favored it while the other two were very much opposed to it. Like all of you, I received at least a score of telegrams from various airlines opposing it, while at the same time I received several telegrams from various organizations supporting the Hoover recommendation favoring its passage. While officially the membership of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce favorably reported it—15 to 2—it is my understanding that many who voted to report it are not in accord with many of its provisions and feel that it should be amended.

With this great difference of opinion it was only natural that the Rules Committee bring in an open rule, which we have done, in order for the opponents and proponents of this measure be given their day in court. We have all afternoon to perfect this bill, retaining the good provisions and eliminating through amendments the bad provisions.

In order to be helpful to the membership I have made a general analysis of the bill.

GENERAL EFFECT

First. Effective July 1, 1951, the Civil Aeronautics Board is directed to establish separately the amounts to be paid to air carriers as compensation for air-mail transportation and as subsidy, instead of fixing single rates based upon the combined elements of cost of service, fair return, and the amount of assistance necessary to promote air commerce in the national interest, as required by present law. The Post Office Department is relieved of the burden of making both subsidy and air-mail compensation payments.

COMPENSATORY RATES

Second. Compensatory rates are to be based upon cost of the service to the carrier under honest and efficient operation, plus a fair and reasonable return. It is newly provided that (a) temporary rates may be established by the Board without a hearing, pending determination of final rates, (b) rates shall be published, (c) the carrier shall have the burden of proof in proceedings which it institutes by petition, and (d) new rates may not be made effective from any date prior to the institution of the rate-making proceeding. The Board is given greater discretion in fixing different rates on the basis of classification of carriers, services, routes, and so forth. Such rates are payable by the Postmaster General out of air-mail appropriations.

SUBSIDIES

Third. The general standard prescribed in present law is retained as the basis of the subsidies for essential aircraft operation, but such subsidies are to be determined by the Board, after notice and hearing, in separate proceedings instituted upon petition of carriers or on the Board's own initiative. They may be determined for individual carriers and classes of carriers, and so forth, as in the case of compensatory rates. In its petition, the carrier is required to state and support in detail the amount, if any, which its operations require under the subsidy provision. Such payments are to be made by the Board from sums appropriated therefor.

ACCOUNTING

Fourth. The Board, after notice and hearing, is directed to prescribe standards by which carriers shall, in keeping their accounts, allocate receipts and expenditures among transportation of (a) passengers and baggage, (b) freight, (c) express, and (d) mail.

STUDIES AND REPORTS

Fifth. The Board is (a) directed to include in its annual report separate analyses of mail payments and subsidy payments, (b) authorized to make studies in connection with any provision of this act, and (c) directed to report to the Congress by April 1, 1951, as to the amounts it estimates will be required for subsidy payment during each of the first five fiscal years under the separation.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX. I have a communication from a man in whom I have great confidence, a former Member of this House, and while he is now associated with air-mail carriers, I am confident that that has nothing to do with influencing the opinion that he has formed. He has examined this measure and the whole question thoroughly, and in his communication he made the statement that there will be a substitute offered for the bill by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LEONARD W. HALL], which is a fair bill, and one which everybody, in his opinion, ought to be able to accept. Has the gentleman examined the substitute; and if he has, what is his opinion as to the merits of that proposal?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I understand there are two substitutes, I will say to the gentleman from Georgia. As to the substitute the gentleman mentioned, I asked several Members about the merits of it and found differences of opinion in regard to it. But I will say to the gentleman from Georgia, who is also a member of the Committee on Rules, that that is one of the reasons why we made this an open rule. There are some Members here who contend that they would like to have that part go through which is in accordance with the Hoover recommendations, but there were other features that were objectionable. So that is the reason why the Committee on Rules brought in this open rule permitting substitutes or amendments in order to perfect the bill.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MASON. As I understand, each of these proposals carries out the report of the Hoover recommendations in separating subsidy from the cost of transporting the mail. The difference between the two proposals, as I get it, is that the bill before us, on which this rule is granted, changes the method of computing the cost of transporting the mail and puts it on a cost-plus basis, while the other measure leaves it as is, in that the Commission shall determine what the rate shall be. But each proposal does carry out the Hoover recommendations of separating subsidy from the cost of transportation.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I thank the gentleman. However, I think about the only thing the Members of the House can do is wait and, after the substitutes are offered, decide whether or not as completed it is a good bill.

Mr. McSWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH].

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, the difference between the administration version of this air-mail subsidy bill and the substitute version is this: The one that has been reported by the committee is the administration bill. It has been approved by the President, the Secretary of Commerce, the Postmaster General, and the Hoover Commission. The so-called substitute is a bill that has been prepared by the air-mail people who have been the beneficiaries of the current system and, to my mind, obtained unmerited compensation for the services they have rendered. That is the difference between the bills. One is in the interest of the Government and the other is in the interest of the private companies.

I, too, have received a letter in this connection from my old friend, Mr. Ramspeck, who for many years served here with distinction. However, he is now in the employ of the airline companies that are opposed to the bill. He is doing his duty as a representative of his employers and not as a representative of the people, as he did when he was a Member of the House.

I think I have made myself clear. The rule has been favorably reported. It is an open rule, because the legislative committee urged an open rule. It has nothing to hide. If I am not mistaken, nearly all the members of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, who have heard the witnesses and have devoted a great deal of time and study to this bill, recommend passage of the bill.

Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McSWEENEY] who, I regret, will not be with us in the next Congress, has adequately explained the proposed rule and the bill, I do not believe I should say any more. No doubt a majority of the Members realize that this bill as recommended deserves unanimous support, notwithstanding the opposition of some interests who have been thoroughly heard but did not prevail.

Mr. Speaker, not only are we losing the outstanding services of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McSWEENEY], who is presently and ably handling the rule, but accompanying him in departing our company are included a number of other gentlemen, some retiring voluntarily and others involuntarily; some have been promoted to responsible positions in State and National Governments. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McSWEENEY] has developed to be a seasoned legislator of broad and penetrating knowledge. All the time he has been on the Committee on Rules I have confidently relied upon him as a tower of strength in helping to channel proper legislation to the floor of the House. In not one instance has he failed my expectations.

In Mr. SAM HOBBS, of Alabama, we lose a great lawyer and Member of transcendent ability. While I have often disagreed with him in his views on such as labor matters, yet I would not be true to myself if I did not say he is an honorable and outstanding Member of this House.

From Florida we will miss Mr. PETERSON, who retires voluntarily after a fine record in this House as chairman of the Committee on Public Lands. The genial GEORGE SMATHERS will be missed on this side of the Capitol, and, fortunately, his elevation to the Senate will not keep him too far from us.

The California delegation will show the absence of three exceptionally fine Members, among them Mrs. HELEN GAHAGAN DOUGLAS. I have been in the House for 44 years and have served with many efficient ladies. History will record in years to come that the membership of this, the Eighty-first Congress, excelled the membership of all previous Congresses. Mrs. DOUGLAS, in my opinion, has been one of its foremost Members, industrious, courageous, unafraid, able, and efficient. I know we all will miss her charming presence and helpfulness. CECIL WHITE, from the Golden Gate State, will also create a regrettable void.

It is indeed fortunate for the country that the broad and penetrating experience of Mrs. CHASE GOING WOODHOUSE, of Connecticut, is to remain available in an executive department. I have often thought what a great loss the Government suffers when somebody comes to Congress and acquires a vast reservoir of priceless information and experience, only to have that value swept away by the misfortunes of the ballot box, and then to see some untutored stripling take the lamp or see it fall to ground in smithereens.

Prominent educator, publicist of high repute, recognized author, benevolent sociologist, experienced and successful national legislator, Mrs. WOODHOUSE might rest her reputation on her exceptional accomplishments in these fields; but her tireless concern for the welfare of America will not allow her to remain idle in these hectic days that require, and must have, the most extensive employment of talent in the solution of the great problems of civilization and hastening the coming of a universal brotherhood.

The State of Georgia and the farmers of our Nation will lose a truly great and constructive friend in Mr. PACE. Frequently he went much farther in the interest of the farmers than I thought he ought to go; but it was his earnest objective to serve agriculture and the farmers of the country to the best of his unusual ability. This he has ably done. Unfortunately, the consumers have been obliged to pay quite a bit more for the products of the farm, but nevertheless the farmer and the Nation has benefited under the program that our departing colleague labored so hard to create and maintain.

Colorado loses two of the most useful Members of this House in JOHN MARSALIS and JOHN CARROLL. The latter has been a leading exponent of liberal legislation in the interest of the masses. Recognizing his great ability, the Democratic Party in Colorado selected him as the candidate best fitted to represent them in the Senate; but in a difficult campaign, unfortunately, he was not accorded this deserved honor. We confidently hope to see these useful legislators rejoin us reasonably soon.

From the State of Idaho we are losing a man who has been with us for many years, my very good and close friend COMPTON WHITE. It was his ambition to represent his State in the other body, but his heroic efforts failed without any discredit to himself. Irrigation, reclamation, and public lands have lost one of their most ardent and able advocates.

In my own State of Illinois, unfortunately, the people were misled, as they were in many other sections of the country, by the distortion of issues and unjust criticism. As a result we have lost such splendid Members as Mr. O'HARA, Mr. LINEHAN, Mr. BUCKLEY, and Mr. CHESNEY, men with a really sincere desire to serve the country, and who, as Members of this House, have served very meritoriously. I hope that in the near future they can resume their fine service here. Mr. O'HARA, an outstanding lawyer, has devoted his professional life to the cause of labor. He has rendered constructive service as a member of the subcommittee of the Committee on Banking and Currency, on rent control and housing legislation. Mr. LINEHAN, a gentleman of broad and successful business experience, has worked for, and voted consistently in the interest of the people of his district and the Nation. Mr. CHESNEY, a very promising young man of proved ability and high purpose, has demonstrated he possessed potential legislative ability. A close and assiduous student, had he continued as a Member he would have reached a position of high importance in this House. Mr. BUCKLEY served his country well, and his defeat was the result of his efforts to untangle the mail delivery problem.

In Indiana also we lost a few Members—Mr. CROOK, Mr. KRUSE, Mr. WALSH, Mr. NOLAND, and Mr. JACOBS. Most of these men, I feel, after the people of Indiana have given in a sober atmosphere due consideration to the useful service they have rendered to the country in a sincere devotion to democracy and the future of our Nation, will return them back here. And that applies to Illinois and other States as well.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] has expired.

Mr. McSWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. SABATH. It is a matter of real regret that we are losing our good friend, the eminent counselor at law from Towson, Md., the Honorable WILLIAM P. BOLTON. Although a novice in the political field, Mr. BOLTON learned rapidly during his too brief association with us here. He is intelligent, assiduous, dependable, and exacting when the welfare of his country and his State is involved. He is the kind of man that is destined to be successful and useful wherever he may be and in whatever attracts his talents.

In Michigan we lost by death, my dear friend and colleague, John Lesinski, who had an unusually difficult task in this House; but the people of that district have seen fit to send his son here, and I know he will follow in the footsteps of his father.

In the departure of Mr. MICHENER the House and the country lost a patriotic, transcendent legislator of large dimensions. I have during many years of close association here always found him unselfish, fair, and devoted, as he believed, to the country's weal. I do regret that he finds it desirable to voluntarily retire from useful public life.

Political fortunes of war were against our sincere and able colleague from Michigan, GEORGE J. SADOWSKI, whose record of conscientious service in the interest of the common people, and especially those of Polish descent, has not been excelled by any other Member of the House. We shall sincerely miss him, and other Members will join me in the hope that surcease from arduous legislative duties will enable him to soon regain his health and that his future will be successful in whatever activities he may undertake. His outstanding record as a progressive legislator with an eye single to the public weal is one of which he, his family and kinsmen may justifiably be very proud.

When Hon. ALBERT J. ENGEL, of Michigan, sought the office of Governor of his State rather than continue as a Member of the House, I was painfully displeased, because I felt that expenditures for the Armed Forces would not, with Mr. ENGEL's retirement from the House, receive the same meticulous scrutiny they received during the many years he rode herd over those vast expenditures, the largest for any governmental activity. All acquainted with the indomitable energy of our friend know that he largely, at his own expense, visited every United States military and naval activity in the world. Mr. ENGEL has not sought attention by table-pounding oratory, but he has attracted merited attention by his assiduous pursuit of anybody who wished to squander the public moneys. Indeed, he has served history well.

In Mississippi we have lost an outstanding Member who has done more for our rivers, harbors, and flood control than any other Member during all the years of my service in this House—Mr. WHITTINGTON. He is a man of outstanding ability and courage; and although I have not always agreed with him, I still concede that he is an able gentleman, always with a controlling desire to serve the country to the very best advantage. I was obliged to oppose his river and harbor bill because I thought it was too lopsided. Nevertheless, he is a very useful Member, whose influence and usefulness we can ill afford to lose.

No Member who closes his or her service at the conclusion of this session, now rapidly drawing to a close, will cause a more real impoverishment in the councils of leadership than the voluntary retirement of your friend and my friend, the Honorable MARY T. NORTON, of New Jersey, who closes 26 years' very active service with us, years freighted with such deepest consequences to Christian civilization. After serving an appropriate novitiate here, she was the first woman to become chairman of a congressional committee. After several years of membership on the Committee on the District of Columbia, she became that committee's chairman. Following several years in that important post she, upon the death of Mr. Connery, became chairman of the Committee on Labor, which position she filled with inordinate success, championing much of the progressive social and labor legislation of the last two decades. During the last 2 years she has served with fidelity and zeal as chairman of the Committee on Administration of the House. Her having served as chairman of three outstanding House committees will long stand as an enviable record. We grudge her not the rest we hope will be hers, but at the same time we trust she will not fail to visit us frequently. Mrs. NORTON indeed has served her country with a fidelity, ability, and selflessness of purpose that assures her perpetuity of grateful remembrance.

In New Mexico we lost Mr. MILES, who is the ex-Governor of his State and beloved Representative in Congress. Unfortunately for the House, his latest aspirations to serve the people were confined to his State government, but he suffered defeat in the November election.

In New York, unfortunately, we lost our old friend, WALTER A. LYNCH, who was a candidate for Governor, and if the people had really had the interest of that State at heart they would have elected him. Nevertheless, we shall sorely miss him here. We look with confidence and hope to his rejoining us 2 years hence. The same sentiment applies to the other defeated Members of that great State.

On the Republican side we lost Mr. WADSWORTH, a member of the Rules Committee. I say to you, though he is a Republican, he has been fair, able, unselfish and conscientious as a Member of this House. Here he has shown that same devotion to welfare of country for 18 years that he showed while a highly respected Member of the Senate. I am sure we all wish this deserving gentleman much comfort and good fortune in retirement and long life.

In addition to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McSWEENEY], we have lost in that State Mr. BURKE, Mr. HUBER, and our genial colleague, Mr. YOUNG, who, unfortunately, were defeated because of the millions of dollars expended in the senatorial campaign. I deplore the fact that they must leave us.

In Oklahoma our efficient and able colleague [Mr. MONRONEY] has been, of course, elected to the Senate—a deserved promotion for one of zealotic devotion to onerous important duty. Also Mr. GILMER and Mr. WILSON, whose short service showed they possess marked industry and legislative ability.

From the stentorian voice of the State of Pennsylvania we will be deprived of hearing "Where is the money coming from?" The rich Mr. RICH will not be with us, due to second voluntary retirement. Henceforth he will be obliged to occupy his time in computing his large income derived from the profits of his successful companies under a Democratic administration. Nonetheless, I am sure that every Member of this House has ascribed and does ascribe to our good friend the highest patriotic motives in connection with that which he has said and ably done.

Among the Democrats in Pennsylvania, I regret that Mr. DAVENPORT and Mr. CAVALCANTE have politically fallen by the wayside; however, in the relatively short time they were here they exhibited genuine ability as legislators, to their credit and the credit of their districts.

We also lose our well-known Pennsylvania Republican colleagues, Mr. LICHTENWALTER and Mr. KUNKEL, very capable, amiable gentlemen.

In South Carolina we lose Mr. SIMS, a young man whom I regret to see go. He would have gone high here. Our other friend from South Carolina, Mr. HARE, was untrue to the traditions of his good name. We usually think of a hare winning a race. Our friend did not run fast enough; but we know, and he knows, that he will have another opportunity if he desires it.

In Tennessee we have two new Members, one of whom is a one-time Member of long service here.

The same in Texas. Some of you Republicans will regret that you lose a Republican in Texas. Well, Texas is doing the right thing now, and I know they will continue to do so. It very seldom goes wrong.

In Wisconsin we lose two exceptionally capable men, Mr. KEEFE, a Republican, who is leaving the House for reasons of health, and Mr. BIEMILLER, a Democrat, whose services were invaluable and will be genuinely missed. They are very earnest, extremely able, and tenacious exponents of whatever cause enlisted their interest. Mr. BIEMILLER will long be remembered as a potent advocate of labor and social legislation.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield.

Mr. BAILEY. I wish to remind the distinguished gentleman from Illinois that he could have saved himself this unpleasant task had all these States taken their cue from West Virginia and returned a solid Democratic delegation.

Mr. SABATH. I concede that the people of West Virginia have splendid judgment and showed it when they sent their entire Democratic delegation back. I hope that in the next election the people in the other States of the country will do as well as the sensible people in West Virginia have done uniformly.

In the Missouri delegation we will miss Mr. KARST and Mr. CHRISTOPHER, able and sincere Members who were really deserving of reelection.

Mr. O'SULLIVAN, of Nebraska, carved for himself an enduring record as a scholarly gentleman, legislator of preeminence, and patriot during his short service in this honorable body. We are bound to miss his kind in these Halls.

And finally, but not least, I cannot forget my good friend from the maple sugar State, Vermont, the beaming, pleasant and ever popular raconteur, Mr. PLUMLEY, who "did not choose to run for reelection" and whose personality, broad and penetrating knowledge of a great intricate world, its history and its complex affairs, scholarly attainments, and all-round geniality, will not be seen and heard here in the coming anxious days that will demand the best of mind and heart.

Mr. Speaker, it is believed that a contributing factor to the defeat of some of these outstanding Members is the fact that the people held President Truman and the Democratic Party responsible for alleged poor judgment in generalship and for the unfavorable reports published three days before the election on the loss of two combat battalions that advanced toward the Manchurian border. However, people now believe that it was due to General MacArthur's disregard of the advice and suggestions of General Bradley and President Truman to the effect that he should not approach too closely to Manchuria and thereby provoke the Chinese Communists; which some people believed might endanger the peace of the world.

I have now completed some of the pleasant and some of the unpleasant tasks. Personally, I hope that in the not remote future it will not be necessary to call attention to the Democrats we have lost. I would rather call attention—I hate to say this because I do not want to hurt some of the Republicans here—but if the situation had been reversed and we had lost a few more Republicans than we did Democrats it would have been more pleasing to me. But those are conditions that exist. The pendulum swings both ways, and in the next election I know that most of the Members will come back and that the majority in the interest of good government will not be as close as it now is in the House and the Senate.

Getting back to the matter in hand, I trust the rule will pass; and I thank the membership for bearing with me.

Mr. McSWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Massachusetts, our distinguished majority leader [Mr. McCORMACK].

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I take this time to announce to the House the program for tomorrow, but before doing that I want to extend the strongest congratulations possible to our distinguished colleague from Illinois, the genial chairman of the Rules Committee [Mr. SABATH], for the first noncontroversial political speech I have heard him make in 22 years.

Mr. SABATH. I appreciate the gentleman's remarks.

Mr. McCORMACK. I think we all agree in everything the gentleman says; I always agree with him anyway, but I think that is one speech in which every Member will agree and on which there will be no disagreement.

Now as to the program: If the rule on rent-control extension is reported out this afternoon that bill will come up tomorrow; if not, there is a rule on H. R. 9870 providing the privilege of becoming naturalized citizens to all aliens having a legal right to permanent residence. This bill came up on the Consent Calendar last Monday. The bill was reported out by the Committee on the Judiciary and it meets the objections of the veto message of the President on a similar bill which passed earlier in the present Congress. So if a rule on the rent-control extension matter is not reported, this bill will come up for consideration. In any event, I am programing the bill as a filler-in when the opportunity presents itself.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HESELTON].

Mr. HESELTON. Mr. Speaker, there is no question but what this bill is controversial. However, I want to make clear at the very outset that there is a difference of opinion within the industry itself and evidence will be presented during the course of general debate to prove that.

At this time I shall read a telegram which I received from former President Hoover, dated September 19, as follows:

NEW YORK, N. Y., September 19, 1950.

The Honorable JOHN W. HESELTON,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.:

The people of the Nation are entitled to know how much of their money is being spent for carrying the mails and how much is for subsidies. Therefore the reorganization commission specifically recommended "that the amounts of these subsidies should be paid to the Post Office by open appropriation from tax funds and not imposed upon the Post Office or the mail users in this hidden manner." I strongly urge that this Congress enact legislation to effect this recommendation of the reorganization commission.

HERBERT HOOVER.

This morning I received another telegram which I think will interest all of the Members who want to have the facts. It is true that another bill which has been filed and is available, H. R. 9305, apparently is to be offered as a substitute for the bill reported by the committee by a vote of 15 to 2, H. R. 9184. This telegram is signed by Robert L. Johnson, national chairman, Citizens Committee for the Hoover Report and reads as follows.

The Citizens Committee for the Hoover Report urges enactment at this session of H. R. 9184—

Which is the bill reported to the House—

to carry out the unanimous recommendation of the bipartisan Commission on Reorganization of the Executive Branch that subsidies be separated from mail compensation. Neither H. R. 9305 nor the various bills for further study would carry out the Hoover Commission's recommendation but H. R. 9184, as reported, would do so. We urge prompt passage of H. R. 9184 without weakening amendments.

Mr. Speaker, I think that we all know this is the culmination of a great deal of effort in Congress to bring about this result. It stems back to the Seventy-ninth Congress when there was a report recommending that this be done by the Board of Investigation and Research. Again in the Eightieth Congress a similar recommendation was made through a report of our Post Office and Civil Service Committee. Finally in the Eighty-first Congress there was a similar recommendation of the Senate Committee on Appropriations. Now we have this bill.

During the course of general debate I expect to refer more in detail to the Hoover Commission studies and recommendation, but at this time I call attention to recommendation No. 9 with reference to the Post Office Department:

We recommend, however, that the amount of these subsidies should be paid to the Post Office by open appropriation from tax funds and not imposed upon the Post Office or the mail users in this hidden manner.

Then may I quote from the report of the Hoover Committee on Federal Business Enterprises:

Losses and subsidies should be made clear each fiscal year and passed upon by the Congress.

This is the recommendation embodied in section 4 of H. R. 9184, calling for an annual report to the Congress on how much mail pay has been spent and how much subsidy has been awarded.

Finally the task force report on regulatory commissions had this to say:

We therefore recommend that the act (Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938) be amended so that the subsidy will be administered by the following method for the future:

1. The mail rates should no longer include any need or subsidy element but should be based on the service rendered. They should reflect a fair allocation of costs between mail, passenger, and freight services. Doubtless the allocation will start as an approximation but should lead to better techniques of cost analysis.

2. The subsidy should be separately fixed by the Board and should be appropriated to the Board for the purpose. This will mean the Congress will be fully informed as to the amount and basis for the subsidy and that the Board will be required to explain and defend its requested amounts.

The airlines may fear that this method would make the annual subsidy a political issue and jeopardize their investment. We see no reason to assume that Congress will not appropriate the sums necessary to carry out the declared policy of the act. If, in practice, greater certainty is found essential for longer periods, it will then be possible to devise safeguards such as contracts to pay minimum operating subsidies over a specified number of years.

The bill itself is flexible. It provides for an administration that everyone can understand. It takes care of the commercial transport system, of our national defense, and of a sound postal system. It is long overdue, and I trust that the House will avail itself this afternoon of its opportunity to carry out the clear recommendations of the Hoover Commission.

Mr. McSWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. HARRIS].

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Speaker, I should like to add my tribute to the very appropriate statement by our colleague the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] with reference to the fine, constructive, and able work of our good friend the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McSWEENEY], and the other Members of the House who will not be with us in the next session. We will miss them. But, Mr. Speaker, I do not want the membership to divert its attention from the most pressing issue, in my opinion, that has been before the Congress for some time.

Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact there are only a few more days for this the Eighty-first Congress, I had hoped this bill, H. R. 9184, would not be taken up for several reasons.

Not that I am opposed to the separation of subsidy from air-mail pay, because I am committed to separation and believe with others there should be a definite practical policy toward this objective. But there are compelling reasons, together with a practical situation, with which we are faced, that this effort today, if this bill is brought up, can be only a hopeless gesture, and, in my opinion, will make it even more difficult to bring about the best and most practical legislation, separating subsidy payments from mail compensation.

When appropriation conference report was being considered a discussion on certain provisions affecting this question resulted, and I joined with others in giving assurances that a separation program would be undertaken by our committee as early as practical.

Consideration had been given to various approaches and proposals over a period of months. This is a highly technical question. Many of these issues had not been definitely determined as the best method toward the objective, but in view of what occurred the committee met and somewhat hurriedly reported this bill, H. R. 9184, on August 31, 1950.

In a few days thereafter a rule was granted. Three weeks elapsed until adjournment for the recess and the bill was not brought up for consideration in the House. Had it been, we would have been in a much better position to work out something definite, more practical, and certainly more satisfactory by considering adjustments and working out what I think to be some of the ill-advised provisions of this proposal.

Then we came back November 27, last Monday week and here at this late hour in the session with only a few days remaining, today, December 6, it is proposed we take up this bill with so many highly controversial issues having developed.

It is a practical situation that I bring to your attention and because of these situations I am firmly convinced that this problem now should be put over by this House until January and taken up immediately in the next Congress.

I say this not only because that in my opinion this matter deserves more consideration by the House but because the Senate committee has not even held hearings or considered the legislation, I am advised. Although I recognize that usually the action of the other body in consideration of legislation is not necessarily the concern of the House, but in this instance as has so well been said, it is wholly impractical and unthinkable to expect anything to be completed on this subject during these few remaining days of the session.

Furthermore, the Senate Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce has a study under way for which $200,000 has been made available and a report not anticipated or expected until March 1, 1951.

It is stated that our committee reported this bill by a vote of 15 to 2. That was true in August. It was a clear indication that we members of the committee are committed to a program of separation of airmail subsidy. It certainly is not manifest, however, that anything like the majority of our committee is in full accord with the provisions of this bill. In fact, Mr. Speaker, I am sure that because of the situation as of today a substantial majority of our committee would actually prefer that this go over until next year with a definite understanding and determination that this problem will be taken up by the committee as one of the very first subjects on the agenda. We feel that we can accomplish a more desirable program and have a much better opportunity of actual results.

Consequently, I am not taking the position as opposing separation, neither am I taking the position as being in direct conflict with my committee, but I do believe that it should go over and will therefore, vote against taking it up.

Mr. McSWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY].

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McSWEENEY] for the work he has done on this bill. I join with the other Members in regretting that he will not be with us next year.

Mr. Speaker, I do not think that there is any doubt that this rule should be adopted. I think we are all in agreement that subsidies should be separated from compensation for the carrying of air mail. The only question is, How will it be done? Will it be done by H. R. 9184, which has the support of the President and carries out the recommendations of the Hoover Commission, and was reported by the Committee on Interstate Commerce by a vote of 15 to 2, and on which a rule has been granted by the Committee on Rules, or will it be done by the bill introduced in September by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LEONARD W. HALL], and on which no hearings were held? The only people behind that bill are the air lines.

I have great respect for the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox]. He said he had received a wire from a former Member of this House for whom he had great respect. However, this gentleman now is the paid lobbyist of the big air lines, who are sharing this $125,000,000 the Post Office is paying out every year to the air lines.

Our feeling is that the Post Office should not be expected to pay the subsidy to keep the air lines in operation. They should pay only compensation for carrying the air mail. The subsidies should be provided by the Congress after determining how important the air lines are to the national defense, to the commerce of the Nation, and so forth. That should not be charged to the Post Office Department. Therefore, I am in favor of the bill H. R. 9184, the Heselton bill, to separate the subsidy from the compensation. It is my opinion that that bill does that in the best manner.

I have one major operation to the bill of Mr. HALL'S, which the airlines are backing. Here is my objection, and I think it is very clear. In Mr. HALL'S bill the airlines that are carrying American mail, airlines going abroad are excluded from the bill. Listen to what the effect of this would be. Forty-seven million seven hundred thousand dollars of this subsidy and compensation which the post office pays goes to American airlines carrying the mail abroad. So that all those would be excluded from consideration under Mr. HALL'S bill. Listen to what they pay to these airlines going abroad. The per ton mile rate for international is 75 cents. The airline revenue for passengers is 75 cents. For cargo in international it is 39 cents. But for airmail they get $2.88 per ton mile for carrying the airmail. In domestic they get 60 cents per ton-mile for carrying passengers, 22 cents for carrying cargo; yet they pay $1.10 per ton mile for carrying the airmail. What a grab that is. There is no doubt about it, these airlines have been getting away with murder. In fact in 1934 when the subsidy first went into effect they said that it would last only 2 or 3 or 4 years so that the airlines could get going. But it has been going on for 12, 13, and 14 years and this $125,000,000 has been going out. Nobody knows how much of this $125,000,000 is subsidy. Mr. O'Connell, head of the CAB, said that he did not know, but that it was between 30 and 60 million dollars that these airlines are getting. The citizens do not know about it. The Hoover Committee and the President and the CAB recommended, as well as the Secretary of Commerce recommended, that this subsidy and compensation be split up. H. R. 9184 has received the endorsement of the committee. I hope it will pass and pass during this session of the Congress.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. HINSHAW].

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I believe the proceedings by which this particular bill has been brought to the floor of the House, so far as my own committee is concerned, is one of the most unusual pieces of business that I have ever heard of. The committee commenced hearings on the bill known as H. R. 2908 which was introduced by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY] and House Joint Resolution 331, introduced by the chairman of the committee [Mr. CROSSER] on the 15th day of February of this year. Hearings were held on the 15th and 24th of February, March 9 and 15, April 6, and May 24. Then on the 26th day of June the Subcommittee on Transportation which has jurisdiction over this matter reported out the second of those bills, the bill introduced by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER], namely, House Joint Resolution 331. That provides for a study of this subject by the CAB because we found it to be so complicated in the Subcommittee on Transportation that we felt we ought not to determine what the answer should be.

The full committee took no action on the resolution although it was reported to the full committee. It was taken up by the full committee on the 20th day of July and then held over by the full committee.

On or about the 15th day of July the gentleman now addressing you suffered an illness which caused him to be absent from the floor of the House for a matter of 6 weeks. I was unable to be present. I sent a wire to the committee about the 1st of August asking them to defer consideration of this matter until I could return.

On August 21 the committee met and on motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HESELTON] took up his bill, H. R. 9184. No hearings were held on that bill—none whatsoever. They went into executive session on the 22d and reported it on the 29th. It is quite true that the bill offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HESELTON] is very close to the bill that was presented by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY] last year. It contains some amendments, but substantially it is the Kennedy bill.

Under these circumstances, you can see that the Transportation Subcommittee, the committee which has engaged in this sort of study for, lo, these many years, finding itself in difficulty, recommended the passage of House Joint Resolution 331. Now we find before us a wholly different bill—a bill not recommended by the subcommittee but passed by the full committee with an absence of 11 members. There were 17 of the 28 members present. I was among the 11 absent. I believe there were others, and I have their names here, but there is no need to mention them at this point. At all events, they were some of the older Members. They included Mr. Bulwinkle, who was ill, and Mr. Sadowski, who was likewise ill, and some others. Mr. Bulwinkle died. Mr. Sadowski, of course, is with us again, and we hope for a long time.

That gives you something of the situation in which our committee has found itself. There are very good reasons why this bill should not be on the floor at all at this time; and when the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. HARRIS] said a few moments ago that a very high proportion of the committee—and among those who actually voted the bill out—would prefer that this matter be deferred until next year so that our study can go further and we may bring in a bill which will be really a satisfactory one, is quite true.

I have only been able to find about three members of our committee who want that bill on the floor right now. Of course, they include the author of the bill. That is right and proper, but the rest of us do not want it here. We want to take it back to the committee and work it over. I will tell you why. The Senate, on the 15th or 20th of September, voted $200,000 to its Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to have a study made of this subject. That study is expected to be completed next March 1, at which time the Senate will consider whatever action it wants to take. If we pass this bill or anything like it in the House today, it cannot become law, because the Senate will not act on a bill like that until they finish their study. Now, that is a ridiculous situation, that we are called upon at this late date in the session to vote upon a bill which will not be enacted into law. If it were, then it would be subject to Senate amendment. I would like to see the House have the last word on this subject. We do not have in my committee the money to make that kind of a study, but the Senate does have it. Let us get the last look at the Senate proposal, instead of being foolish enough to pass a bill over to them at this time which will die before the end of this session.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HINSHAW. I yield.

Mr. KERR. What position does the Postmaster General, the head of the Post Office Department, take with reference to this matter?

Mr. HINSHAW. The Post Office Department has thought that there should be some kind of a way of separating, and we believe it too, but we find the subject exceedingly complicated and exceedingly difficult. If you adopt this rule—and I hope you will not adopt it, because we do not want it—then we will present to you some of the further facts in connection with it and show you why this particular bill is a bad bill, and why the bill presented by Mr. HALL will at least do no harm.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlemen yield?

Mr. HINSHAW. I yield.

Mr. COX. I sense it to be the feeling of the House that we might as well go ahead and adopt the rule and then in the consideration of the bill accept the substitute offered by Mr. HALL. In my judgment, the membership will take the Hall substitute, and of course, that would end the matter. I think the gentleman is right in his statement that there is no hope of getting legislation at this time. If the Senate committee has set up plans for conducting a thorough study of the question, there is no likelihood that it would take this bill.

Mr. HINSHAW. That is very correct. I hope the House will not adopt this resolution.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. O'HARA].

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, as one who is opposed to the reporting of this bill and who filed a minority report, I certainly hope that the rule making this bill in order will be defeated. This is an unusual thing for me to recommend that my colleagues take such action, but this bill is a white horse which is brought in under the theory of separation of air-mail pay and subsidy. Separation of mail pay and subsidy is a fine thing in which everybody agrees, but the white horse has some blemishes which at the moment have not been discussed.

Among those blemishes, for example, is the complete change of procedure of determining the cost. It is a very, very serious thing, Mr. Speaker, if we start legislating upon the matter of rates; it is a thing which is going to affect the entire industry, and we will be doing it without knowing exactly what we are doing in this bill.

Another blemish about which nobody has talked of yet is that it opens the door for a lot more subsidy and for compelling the CAB to recognize people who are engaged in the hauling of freight and the rendering of other types of service which are not certified as eligible to carry the mails. That is another reason the bill is here.

We are in the absolute situation, Mr. Speaker, where there is no question that the Senate is not, in this session of Congress, going to act on anything we do here today. The Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce has received an appropriation of $200,000; they are engaged in making a study of the elements involved in the matter of separation; they are not going to act upon anything we do here. We are going to look ridiculous if we pass this legislation today which that Senate study would show up as being bad legislation. For that reason let me say to my colleagues that this is one of the very few times in my 10 years' service in Congress that I find myself opposed to a rule. I think this rule should be defeated.

Seventeen members of the committee which reported this bill, I am informed, have revised their thinking to the extent that they are either opposed to the bill or that they feel absolutely that it should not be passed at this time. I believe it would be unfair for us to make a different rule relating to the carrying of mail by airplanes than we did for railroads and for steamships or other carriers.

Mr. JONAS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. I yield.

Mr. JONAS. Is it true that this legislation has the endorsement of the Commission?

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. My colleague from Massachusetts referred to the Hoover Commission; I think they did endorse it, but Mr. Hoover has not endorsed this bill pending before us.

Mr. JONAS. What I had in mind was that we have had one very trying experience recently of going pell-mell into a project of curtailing mail-delivery service. Are we now going into another one headfirst without knowing what we are doing?

I agree with every argument my distinguished friend has advanced that we should not vote for the rule.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MASON. The Hoover Commission definitely recommends separation of the subsidy from the cost of transportation?

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. That is right.

Mr. MASON. But the Hoover Commission in its reports has never endorsed this particular bill?

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. No.

Mr. MASON. Or any bill of this nature?

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. The gentleman is right.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. I have a wire here from James M. Landis who used to be head of the CAB. Here is what he states:

> As one who worked on the pertinent portions of the Hoover report, H. R. 9184 in my opinion effectively carries out its recommendations for separating subsidy from mail pay. Incidentally it also carries out the recommendations of President Truman in his message to the Congress.

Mr. Landis did write that section of the Hoover report because he had great experience in this field.

Mr. HINSHAW. What the gentleman from Massachusetts has said sounds right and reasonable, but Mr. Landis had to be replaced by another man in order to make the CAB work. I would not take his recommendation.

Mr. KENNEDY. I would not say that.

Mr. HINSHAW. Well I would say it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES].

Mr. REES. Mr. Speaker, my purpose in addressing the House at this time is to call attention to the fact that there have been several so-called investigations of this subject matter. Over a period of several years the questions of separation of subsidy from air-mail pay has been under consideration in Congress. It seems to have been rather difficult to reach a place where legislation is submitted to deal with this problem. There has been a tendency to talk about hearings to be held in the future.

The following studies have been made of the separation of subsidy from air mail pay in the past 2 years:

First. An extensive study was made by the House Post Office and Civil Service Committee and a report issued based upon hearings and evidence collected by the committee—House Report No. 1958, May 13, 1948, Eightieth Congress.

Second. The Senate Appropriations Committee explored this problem and in a report on the appropriation bill for 1949—Report No. 1389, Eightieth Congress—recommended early action to the Senate on the House Post Office and Civil Service Committee's report on separation of the subsidy from air-mail pay.

Third. The Civil Aeronautics Board Chairman addressed a letter to me, August 13, 1948, in which the Chairman stated they were going to conduct a study of the separation of subsidy from air mail pay and expected to complete that study in the spring of 1949. They were going to provide me with a draft of legislation following this study which would accomplish this separation. They have not sent me this draft.

Fourth. The Hoover Commission in its report on the postal service made a similar recommendation, that is, the separation of subsidy from air-mail pay.

Fifth. The House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee held extensive hearings on bills relating to this subject and have recommended this legislation.

Sixth. The Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee have obtained an appropriation of $200,000 to make a study of this problem. However, I should like to point out that their study is primarily concerned with the establishment of a standard rate for carrying air mail as a means of determining the subsidy but there is no reason why there should be any delay in establishing the policy of such a separation by legislation.

If it is necessary to delay action on legislation pending the completion of the Senate study, it would seem to be only logical that the determination of the necessity for the delay should be made by the Senate when the legislation reaches the Senate.

The Post Office Department today that is showing a deficit of hundreds of millions of dollars. At least we ought to separate this matter and we have a chance to do that in this legislation now before us. It may be necessary to amend the bill, but here is the vehicle to do the job. We should not set the legislation aside. We ought to examine it carefully and debate it. We ought to take action with respect to the question on the separation of subsidy from air-mail pay.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BECKWORTH].

Mr. BECKWORTH. Mr. Speaker, there is no question but what this is controversial legislation. In my opinion it likely always will be. One of the great difficulties which has confronted the Congress in the past is that it cannot get exactly that bill which everybody wants.

Now, so far as studies are concerned, any person who will take the time to look into the situation will find that there have been many studies performed in regard to this subject matter before. Considerable stress has been given to the fact that the present Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee is making a study with $200,000 which the Congress has made available. The same committee spent $10,000 last year, hired a firm of accountants known as Ernst and Ernst, and they studied it and came up with a report about it, still inconclusive in nature. Certainly I am one who does not contend that the two bills before us are perfect bills. I do contend, however, that one of these bills was voted out of the committee by a vote of 15 to 2, and nobody compelled anybody to vote as he voted; nobody forced anybody to do what he did.

Yes, it is recognized that the Heselton bill is not a perfect bill, the bill of which I speak. I am sure many of you, when you look at the Hall bill, will find that it is not a perfect bill, but both represent attempts and efforts by interested authorities and people to do a job of work which everybody says should be done. I dare say that you will not hear one Member get up and say he opposes separation of subsidies from air mail pay; not one. They are all for it. At the same time I would suggest that if you ask every air line president if he is for separation of subsidies, practically 90 percent would say "Yes, we are for separation of subsidies."

I repeat again, however, that the difficult job that we confront every time is getting that agreement in the form of words or a bill that is acceptable to everybody. Yes; these two bills represent attempts on the part of interested people to undertake to do this job. It can always be said that now is an inopportune time to pass a bill because of what the other body will do. That is true of bills that come here from there as well as bills that go from here to there.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BECKWORTH. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. KERR. Can the gentleman tell us what position the Post Office Department takes relative to these measures before us? I assume that some inquiry was made in reference to this matter of the Post Office Department. What position do they take with reference to these measures?

Mr. BECKWORTH. The Post Office Department, as has been pointed out repeatedly, have said that they are for separation of subsidies from air-mail pay. The CAB used to be not quite as positive. They now say they are for separation of the subsidies.

Mr. KERR. Did any member of the Post Office Department come before the committee and make that statement?

Mr. BECKWORTH. Yes.

Mr. KERR. That they wanted separation?

Mr. BECKWORTH. Here is an excerpt from a letter that was written to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER] February 13, 1950, by Mr. Donaldson. I will read just a short paragraph:

> I am of the firm belief that the subsidy paid to airlines should be removed from the fiscal picture of the Post Office Department. Accordingly I am of the opinion that legislation should be enacted immediately to accomplish this objective without further study such as contemplated by this resolution.

He said that it should be done without further study.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. McSWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. BECKWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9184) to provide for the separation of subsidy from air-mail pay, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 9184, with Mr. BONNER in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. BECKWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I know the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce very much regrets that he cannot be here to evidence his interest in this legislation. I know he is interested in it because one of the last things he talked about to several of us before he went to the naval hospital was this bill.

Certainly I consider myself one who has been and is a real friend of the airlines. I feel that I have sought to help them at all times, because I believe in strong civil aviation. In a day like this, when we are deluged by so much trouble on so many sides, we cannot afford to do something that will weaken our civil aviation set-up. The airlines in the main have done a very fine job. I commend and pay tribute to them.

The passage of a bill through the Congress is quite a long and tedious task. A bill often changes from time to time. This is true of most legislation. As has been indicated, there have been several bills before us. There was a "study" resolution introduced. As I pointed out a moment ago, the Postmaster General was referring to it when he said in his letter to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER] in February of this year that he thought legislation should be passed separating the subsidy from air mail pay without further study. In other words, he was not for the "study" resolution that was before our committee. Our committee, I add, did not pass the "study" resolution.

It was pointed out that a number of hearings have been held. That is true.

The Civil Aeronautics Board is not in complete harmony by any means with the so-called Heselton bill. Although I have not seen any report of the CAB concerning the Hall bill, I would assume that they are not in complete harmony with the Hall bill. But they recognize there is something worth while in this undertaking and have actually stated publicly and in writing that they do favor separation of the subsidy. The same is true of the Post Office Department. An excerpt from the Hoover Commission report has been mentioned.

The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES], a member of the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service, spoke a moment ago and mentioned the interest of his committee in this subject. Perhaps the most interested committee in the House, other than our committee, with reference to the separation of subsidy from mail pay has been the Committee on Appropriations. Time after time reports from the Appropriations Committee in several Congresses have indicated that this great committee feels this job should be done.

I do not think either the Hall bill or the Heselton bill is a perfect bill. I want to get the best bill that we can get and as we proceed here in the consideration of this matter, I am not adverse to amendments. It was mentioned a moment ago that the Heselton bill will increase the number of airlines eligible for subsidy. That is true, and I personally do not favor that, as I understand the situation. I do not think it is necessary. But may I say that the CAB could not possibly give a subsidy to any airline which it could not, in good common sense, say is serving a defense purpose or the development of air commerce or the postal service.

In other words, no airline would per se get subsidy. The Civil Aeronautics Board, in which many of you must have confidence as it undertakes to carry out this legislation, will be the Board charged with the responsibility of determining which line gets a subsidy and which line does not get a subsidy. May I say I have little fear along that line; although a freight line would be eligible to get a subsidy if it served a defense or other appropriate purpose, I cannot foresee that the CAB would give every airline subsidy, certainly in view of the fact that there have been criticisms of that body on this point from time to time.

Therefore, I do not see that they will be handing out money to additional carriers recklessly. Just a few days ago I talked to the new chairman of the CAB, Mr. Rentzel. We have worked with him quite a bit in the Civil Aeronautics Administration; I have confidence in him. When we were talking about this question of subsidy, he said separation is going to come.

Mr. Chairman, I am not against subsidies. This bill is not designed to take away subsidies. It is designed to let the public who pays the bill know which part is subsidy and which part is air-mail pay. There is nothing unfair or dishonest about that. If you ask me if I favor the subsidy, I say yes; I am in favor of plenty of subsidies to keep our airlines strong. But I do think as we proceed to try to make our civil aviation picture and program as strong and helpful as possible, we should make every effort to put all the cards on the table. The airlines say that they do not object to that, and I do not believe that they do. Most airline managements, I feel, are honest and conscientious. I repeat again it is simply a matter of how we shall do the job. There are two bills before us: the Hall bill, which I understand will be offered, and the Heselton bill, which was the one the committee reported out by a vote of 15 to 2.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BECKWORTH. I yield.

Mr. HARRIS. I appreciate the courtesy of the acting chairman, in the absence of the chairman of our committee, and I compliment him on the fine approach he has made to this matter. But is it not true that one among many of the highly controversial differences in the two bills that have been discussed, the one that the committee reported changes altogether the accounting, bookkeeping, and so forth, to require what is known as the cost allocation formula?

Mr. BECKWORTH. That is one of the issues that will be discussed. It is particularly controversial.

Mr. HARRIS. Does the gentleman agree with me that it is a very serious consideration that the membership should keep in mind?

Mr. BECKWORTH. I do.

They should listen, and decide for themselves and work their own wills.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BECKWORTH] has again expired.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HESELTON].

Mr. HESELTON. Mr. Chairman, I am not going to attempt in 5 minutes to discuss the terms of the bill. The committee report is an excellent one. A reading of it, I am sure, will convince anyone as to the value and soundness of the provisions of H. R. 9184. There is also a brief and excellent analysis of the bill itself.

I shall address myself to some of the arguments which have been used in opposition to this bill. I shall give you some of the evidence which bears out what I said when we were discussing the rule.

There is a difference of opinion among the airlines themselves. I know you received any number of telegrams from four of the big airlines. Last Friday I was in New York with my committee. The head of the fifth big airline endorsed separation of air-mail pay from subsidies. That is our largest international carrier. They are not alone in that, because the heads of all of these other lines, now fighting this bill, have gone right up to the point of saying, "We want this bill enacted."

I have here a letter from Mr. Eddie Rickenbacker to his stockholders on April 4, 1949, wherein he said:

> The foregoing tabulations (on comparative airline costs, etc.) indicate that frequently the efficient and economical carrier has not been recognized and rewarded in new route and mail-pay proceedings, and that the taxpayers have suffered the burdens of underwriting the large subsidies reflected in the above-charted rate differentials.
> This is indeed a gloomy and discouraging picture. But there are some hopeful signs.
> The President is said to be making inquiry into airline economy; the Senate Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce is instituting an investigation—

And we will hear much this afternoon about investigations—

> the Postmaster General has expressed his desire to see better business principles applied to the transportation of air mail; the CAB lately has instituted investigations designed to develop essential information regarding airline efficiency and economy; measures have been introduced in the Congress calling for a clearly stated separation of compensation and subsidy in respect to air transportation of mail, and providing that as between two identical points a new competitor may not receive air-mail pay at a higher rate than that received by the existing carrier.
> The Chairman of the CAB in an address on March 23 made this timely statement: "I believe that the advantages of separating the subsidy outweigh the disadvantages and dangers. From the standpoint of a sound air transportation system these advantages would be to hold constantly before the carriers and the Board the dollar amount of the subsidy. This would provide a considerable incentive to the carriers to put themselves in a sound economic position and it would make it far easier for the Board to determine those areas where service being performed by the carriers was uneconomic."

Then, on May 24, 1949, testifying before a similar committee in another body, Mr. Rickenbacker said this:

> I believe the President's Air Policy Committee, the Congressional Aviation Policy Board, the Hoover Commission, and more recently a majority of the members of the Civil Aeronautics Board, have recognized the desirability of having a separation of subsidy from compensation. Senator JOHNSON, in S. 1431, and Congressman KENNEDY, in H. R. 2908 (same as H. R. 9184), have introduced bills to bring about the desired objectives. I am not saying that these measures are perfect in their details, but they are steps in the right direction and they ought to be perfected and carried to enactment at the earliest possible date. (H. R. 9184 is a revised form of H. R. 2908.)

He said in the annual report for 1949, April 4, 1950:

> Some of Eastern Air Lines' competitors receive the equivalent of your company's tax payments from the Government in the form of mail subsidy. There apparently is no restriction placed on the use of this subsidy, and it enables such competitors to engage in wasteful competitive practices in an effort to divert your company's traffic.
> Without mail subsidy, underwritten by your company's tax payments and your personal tax payments, the competing carriers would and should be allowed to succeed or fail on their own merits or deficiencies.
> Your management is continuing to fight for correction of this discriminatory practice.

In the Senate airline hearings, page 1116, Rickenbacker also stated that he had urged separation in his appearance before the Finletter committee.

Further, in the annual report, he stated:

> There has been considerable discussion in recent months regarding the advisability of separating so-called subsidy and service payments for carrying air mail. Your company favors such separation, believing that subsidy payments should be plainly labeled as such.

Then the Northwest Airlines, and I know many of you have heard from them, on May 3, 1949, in a statement before the Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, through President Hunter said:

> Senator, I certainly believe that the separation of service pay and subsidy is advisable.

Mr. Smith, president of the American Airlines, stated on May 12, 1949, in the Senate airline hearings:

> Mr. SMITH. The system of merging service mail rates with subsidy payments is confusing, discouraging, and unfair to those air carriers which seek to keep their operation on service rate basis, and free from subsidy. In addition, it is poor accounting, depriving you of accurate knowledge of how the money you provide is being spent and the purpose for which it is being expended.
> These defects can and should be corrected; their correction can and should be prompt.
> Senator BREWSTER. You would favor, then, an attempt to divide the compensatory payment from the subsidy payment?
> Mr. SMITH. I would be wholeheartedly in favor of that.

I assume that you also received a letter from the Aircoach Transport Association. Those gentlemen appeared before us and urged the enactment of this bill, and they have written as follows:

> AIRCOACH TRANSPORT ASSOCIATION,
> Washington, D. C., August 19, 1950.
> Subject: Impending vote on H. R. 2908.
> Representative JOHN W. HESELTON,
> House Office Building,
> DEAR SIR: The Aircoach Transport Association, representing over 80 percent of the nonscheduled air carriers and over 90 percent of the domestic air transportation performed by such carriers, would like to put itself emphatically on record in support of H. R. 2908, the genuine separation of subsidy bill. We urge you to vote for H. R. 2908 forthwith, rejecting substitute bills which pay only lip service to the separation reform and "further study" resolutions which are designed to delay and eventually defeat the reform.
> In the face of a national crisis which has revealed the country's deficit in civil air transportation for military purposes, the recommendations of our nonsubsidized civil air carriers managements that emerged from World War II airlifts might well be regarded as expert advice.
> We believe that H. R. 2908 makes competition for low price markets more fair for nonsubsidized air carriers and therefore opens up new fields which will expand our civil airlift for national defense.
> We were right in 1947–48 when we opposed the high fares of the much larger subsidized segment of the air transportation industry with high density seating, demand-type service, and lower fares. Our "aircoach" movement swept even the certificated airline industry last year and this year, resulting in an expanded civil airlift. We were right then in pointing the way toward new markets for air transportation. We were right in pioneering the air-freight field and the combination passenger-cargo field into which the subsidized lines followed us to expand their services.
> We know we are right now in urging you to vote for H. R. 2908 because the bill will require the cost accounting for freight, passenger, express, and mail services to be kept separately. Thus the mail subsidy cannot be hidden in a general over-all cost accounting system and be secretly devoted to subsidizing below-cost certificated scheduled aircoach and cargo operations. Thus, nonsubsidized demand-type air transportation services, which are more efficient and more economical because of higher load factors, will attract additional risk capital for rapid expansion of aircoach and cargo operations.

For expansion of civil airlift for defense, for fair treatment for the nonsubsidized, largely veteran-owned and operated, small businesses in air transportation—we urge you to vote for H. R. 2908.

Very truly yours,

AIRCOACH TRANSPORT ASSOCIATION,
AMOS E. HEACOCK,
National Legislative Policy Director.

Let me read a later letter, dated August 28:

AIRCOACH TRANSPORT ASSOCIATION,
Washington, D. C., August 28, 1950.

Hon. JOHN W. HESELTON,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. HESELTON: On behalf of the Aircoach Transport Association, let me take this opportunity to express our sincere appreciation for your support and vote in favor of H. R. 9184, the separation of subsidies from air-mail pay measure.

As has been pointed out before, this bill will provide a long-needed cost allocation system to protect the Post Office Department from paying more than a compensatory mail rate. It will save the American taxpayers millions of dollars.

This bill would also greatly advance the progress of the air-transportation industry in that it would eliminate the unjust advantage certain certificated carriers have had by using subsidy pay to operate below cost in order to drive nonsubsidized carriers out of business.

Your vote, therefore, was also cast in favor of equal justice for the small businesses of the air-transportation industry and you may well be proud of your stand.

We gratefully solicit your continued support of this legislation and if there is any way we can be of service, please don't hesitate to call upon us.

Yours very truly,

AIRCOACH TRANSPORT ASSOCIATION,
AMOS E. HEACOCK, President.

Finally, this morning I assume many of you received a letter from the Ocean Air Tradeways, of New York, but I want to read this too because it stresses what I am trying to leave with you, that this is not opposition from the entire airline industry; it is opposition from people who speak for the principle of air-subsidy separation but oppose it as law.

OCEAN AIR TRADEWAYS,
New York, N. Y., December 5, 1950.

The Honorable JOHN W. HESELTON,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN HESELTON: This company is an independent nonsubsidized air carrier, also known by the rather uncomplimentary designation by the Civil Aeronautics Board, as a large irregular air carrier.

We are a veterans' group composed of former military aviation personnel and we started commercial flight operations in March 1946, carrying passengers between New York and Miami.

During the last 4 years we have managed to perform a public service carrying passengers and cargo, domestically and overseas, at rates considerably below the scheduled airlines, but within the financial reach of many thousands who could not otherwise afford air transportation. Our operation in the past and present has been and is in strict accordance with the CAA safety regulations.

This company has the dubious distinction of having been served with the first Federal court injunction preventing its transportation of passengers overseas between the United States and foreign countries as an independent air carrier.

American financial aid to the extent of several hundred thousand dollars, however, was recently given to a French nonscheduled airline in Paris, known as TAI. In other words, our tax money is used to harass and persecute free American enterprise through bureaucratic enforcement agencies, and at the same time subsidize, not only our equivalent nonscheduled air carriers in foreign countries, but also the large scheduled foreign air carriers which seriously compete with the American scheduled carriers, necessitating even greater subsidies to them.

History does not show that Great Britain, during the past century at the zenith of her merchant marine power, so lavishly and recklessly donated surface craft to foreigners to compete with herself as America has done in the field of air transportation.

We, of the so-called nonscheduled air industry, desire no favors, no subsidies, no kind words, or no help from the United States Government; our heritage, our Constitution, and our successful American free enterprise system entitles us to unmolested economic freedom in pursuing success in this new field which is so badly in need of unhampered pioneering development.

United States Air Force recent statistics show that 40 percent of the reserve air strength in the United States lies within the nonscheduled air carriers who are now faced with the latest CAB directive limiting their flights between two points to three trips per month. During the last 6 months the CAB has permanently put out of business, by cancellation of their operating certificates and letters of registration, dozens of our fellow carriers, some because they operated too frequently, others because they did not operate frequently enough, and still others because they did not have aircraft available since they had been forced to liquidate or lease out their planes for fear of violating the CAB restriction known as the frequency and regularity ruling.

Congress never intended the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938 to be twisted in its application to discriminate between American citizens the way the Civil Aeronautics Board has done. Actually the act charges the Civil Aeronautics Board with the responsibility to develop American air transportation to the highest possible degree for the benefit of all American citizens, primarily stressing national defense. It would seem that the Board's intentions are just the opposite.

In spite of these many economic sanctions and road blocks hurled at the nonscheduled industry by its own Government, it was able to throw into the pool of badly needed aircraft for the Korean airlift over thirty 4-engine long-range overseas combination passenger and cargo C-54 aircraft with completely trained operating and maintenance personnel. One of Ocean Air Tradeways' aircraft, NC 68736, a C-54, flew 523 hours in one 30-day period between Japan and the United States, shattering all known records, both military and civilian.

Since our only recourse to prevent annihilation of this industry by the Government is through legislative action, it is therefore urgently requested that you support H. R. 9184, without amendment, the air-mail-subsidy-separation bill, to prevent further growth of subsidized monopoly and let the people know how much they pay for transportation of their air mail and how much they pay for subsidy, which goes to support powerful lobbies and wasteful uneconomic air operations, which serve a chosen few rather than all the voters. This bill is directly in keeping with the Hoover report recommendations for better government.

Respectfully yours,

OCEAN AIR TRADEWAYS,

Let me repeat that last sentence for emphasis: "This bill is directly in keeping with the Hoover report recommendations for better government." It gives all of us our chance to take another and vitally important improvement in the Federal Government. In these days it is doubly important that we should do so.

Mr. BECKWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. HARRIS].

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Chairman, as I have already stated today, I frankly believe the consideration of this legislation should have gone over until next year because of the relatively few remaining days in this session and because of the impractical situation with which we are faced. I do want to say, however, that if this legislation as it is, or as it may be amended, passes and becomes law it will not be a problem for our committee and the House to consider next year. As that seems most improbable to me, I should like to say now that I do believe that there should be a separation of subsidy and air-mail pay, and I for one will be among those of our committee to undertake this problem immediately after the first of the year with a view of bringing forth some more satisfactory program of separation.

This is a highly technical subject. It is a highly controversial subject. It has been carefully considered, debated, and keenly discussed and at times contested with passion during the past year.

There are those who contend that actually there is no subsidy element in the mail rates now fixed by the Civil Aeronautics Board. In fact, our committee, over a year ago, concluded in a report that if there was subsidy, as I think it is, in the present mail compensation, it was a subsidy to the public who use air mail and not to the carriers that transport the mail.

There are others who contend that admitting there is a subsidy to air carriers involved in present rates, nothing can be accomplished by requiring the Board to undertake the arduous and expensive task of separating that element from the compensation for the transportation of mail.

Some believe that the Board should be required to separate subsidy from mail compensation in order to make public the amount of subsidy and to relieve the Post Office Department of any responsibility for administering it.

Then there are those, and this point is widely argued, who believe in reserving their decision on this issue until a thorough study by the Civil Aeronautics Board is made as to the feasibility, wisdom, and practicality of bringing about such a separation.

As I have already said, a great deal of consideration has been given to this subject during the year and our committee reported H. R. 9184 August 31.

Immediately thereafter a great deal of other questions arose. Some, in my opinion, very serious.

The President recommended separation and the Hoover Commission has recommended separation. It is contended that others have recommended separation. As our distinguished colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BECKWORTH], who is acting chairman of this committee now, has said, most everyone seems to be committed to the principle of separation.

The Hoover Commission did not recommend this particular bill that has been reported. There has been no one, insofar as I know, that advocated as a group this particular bill over some other bill be adopted, but they do recommend the principle of separation of subsidy from air-mail pay. Remember the principle of separation, because the public is entitled to know what subsidy is being paid to the airlines.

Now, there was a situation 12 years ago when the Civil Aeronautics Act was adopted by this Congress that made it advisable to adopt this kind of an approach, but these past 12 years have brought about a different policy, as the airlines are now seemingly on their own; they have grown; they are able to get along.

The President in his message submitting the 1951 budget to Congress, recommended the separation of subsidy payments from air-mail compensation. He said:

> The recent rise in total air-mail payments—to an estimated level of about $125,000,000 in 1950—has made it increasingly important that the subsidy element be separately identified. I recommend, therefore, the immediate enactment of legislation to require the separation of subsidy payments from mail compensation. Such subsidies should be paid from funds appropriated to the Civil Aeronautics Board specifically for that purpose.

The President did not, however, recommend the approach as taken in H. R. 9184, or the imposition and complete change in policy with reference to the actual operation of air mails in this country.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, this bill, H. R. 9184, does not carry out merely the recommendation of the President but goes much further and sets up complete new formulas and standards, which I contend would completely nullify what the President had in mind and that was an actual separation bill.

Therefore, I am presenting to this House for your consideration, this substitute. It is not necessarily my proposal. It is a bill that has been worked out over a period of time in the various considerations of this problem. It was introduced as a bill in this Congress by our colleague the gentleman from New York [Mr. LEONARD W. HALL], a member of our committee, as H. R. 9305.

This substitute does, in my opinion, come nearer providing actual and practical separation. The subsidy-separation principle is adopted, however, for immediate application to domestic carriers and without the expensive and time-consuming administrative entanglements which are found in the committee bill H. R. 9184.

In many respects, this proposal is more desirable, which I should like to submit to you for your consideration.

In the first place, there is a difference in the carriers to be subsidized. If you believe the principle of subsidy should be expanded, you should vote for the committee bill. If you do not believe in the general principle of subsidy and expanding subsidization programs, then you should vote for the substitute that I expect to offer which was introduced as H. R. 9305 August 7 this year by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LEONARD W. HALL].

Let me call to your attention some of the major differences in these two proposals:

First. Carriers to be subsidized: H. R. 9184 would expand the present law to provide that any air carrier can receive a subsidy, even though not authorized to carry mail, if the carrier holds a certificate of convenience and necessity. The substitute retains the present limitation that in order to receive a subsidy a carrier must not only be certificated but must also carry mail. Under existing law, which is preserved here, there are about 35 carriers that are eligible for subsidy. If H. R. 9184 were passed, the number of carriers eligible for subsidy would be expanded virtually without limit. At the present time the records of the Civil Aeronautics Board show that there are approximately 2,400 registered small air carriers and approximately 90 large air carriers which operate nonscheduled services. All of these operators are common carriers, and thus could apply for certificates of convenience and necessity and accompanying subsidy if this law is passed. In addition, H. R. 9184 even proposes to subsidize freight forwarders by air, a policy which has never been espoused by Congress, which was never discussed by the committee, and for which no justification appears in the record. Thus, by adopting H. R. 9184, the Federal Treasury would be opened to almost unlimited demands to be made by pressure groups on behalf of small and large nonscheduled carriers and freight forwarders.

Second. Cost standard: H. R. 9184 provides that the service rates for mail transportation shall not exceed the necessary cost of such transportation, plus a fair return. The substitute follows the analogous provision of the Railway Mail Pay Act which covers the establishment of mail rates for the railroads and does not include this rigid cost standard.

The cost-plus basis of making rates is bad because:

First. Since all of the air carrier's traffic is transported in the same vehicle, the cost of transporting mail could only be determined on the basis of an arbitrary allocation of expenses which can never be precise enough to serve as the sole standard of rate making. The Interstate Commerce Commission has never made rates on this basis.

Second. Even if costs could be determined satisfactorily, that rigid standard should never be used exclusively, because since costs change constantly, the rate would have to change constantly, and the board would be led further into the process of making rates retroactively.

Third. If costs were the sole basis, the carrier would have no incentive to increase efficiency and reduce costs, because if he reduced his costs he would lose an equal amount of revenue. For the same reason, he would have no incentive to increase commercial traffic, because to the extent that his other traffic increased, the cost of transporting mail would be reduced, and under H. R. 9184, the mail rate would have to be reduced also.

On the other hand, the substitute would permit the board to give conclusive weight to cost studies if it concluded that fair rates to the carrier and to the Post Office Department could be based on available cost data. However, it could also exercise judgment in fixing rates if it was not satisfied with the cost data available.

Now, there is another difference that I think is a very important one, as I asked my colleague, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BECKWORTH], about a moment ago, and that is the revision of the air carrier's accounting system. We depend on our air carriers today. We depended on them in June and July in the Korean situation.

There are some factors regarding what happened since then that I think I should refrain from mentioning, but the airlines are today engaged in the activities that are going on in this world as much as any other organization of our Government. If we have them change their accounting system, as this bill reported by the committee will do, then it will take years to set up an accounting system under its requirements. It is impossible and impractical for the airlines to do that between now and the date set forth in the bill reported by the committee, because the accounting system they have now has taken several years to develop. It has taken a lot of manpower and a lot of consideration.

You can see what it would do to the entire system to require the carriers to change the method now as this bill would do under the cost allocation provision of determining how much goes to the passengers, how much to freight, how much to express, and mail. If we are going to utilize the services of the air carriers, I think it ill behooves us at this time to adopt a policy that will require the air carriers to change completely their system of bookkeeping and accounting.

Another of the important provisions is the general study. They talk to you about the general study under way and say it should not be assumed here that we should not have any more studies. The Senate Committee has $200,000 for a study that is under way now, the report to be expected, I believe, around March 1. You know what this does. It provides $300,000 for a study to be made by the Civil Aeronautics Board. This bill provides for another study to cost even more money than the study to be made by a committee in the other body, and someone a moment ago criticized the amount of money to be spent on that study.

Under this bill we set up another costly and expensive study to do what? To report to the Congress. The substitute I will offer here does not provide for that, but puts into effect the principle of separation of subsidy from mail pay. That is what you want. That is what the bill does. It does not require you to go through this onerous, troublesome, costly, and difficult method, which I do not think the Government ought to continue to impose upon the businessmen of this country, airlines, or others, unnecessarily.

Mr. HESELTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRIS. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. HESELTON. If I understood the gentleman correctly, he said there was no group in the country that was specifically supporting this bill H. R. 9184.

Mr. HARRIS. At the time the committee reported it.

Mr. HESELTON. Yet it is true now, is it not, that the Citizens Committee, which has been developed to implement the Hoover Commission recommendations, has supported this by number and has opposed the substitute the gentleman is proposing?

Mr. HARRIS. I heard the gentleman's statement a moment ago, and I assume it is correct. I would not disagree with him at all on the statement he made, because he always tries to be fair.

But we do have from the Air Transport Association of America a wire which came to the desks of all of us which I will include in my statement, to the effect that all of the airlines, all of them, big and small, in your local communities, international and domestic, support this substitute. I might say, so far as I know, of all the problems which we have had before the committee, and which I know the Association has considered, this is the second time that all of the airlines have been unanimous.

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRIS. I yield.

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. I believe it is also true that every certificated air carrier is opposed to the bill H. R. 9184 as it has been reported out of committee.

Mr. HARRIS. That is true.

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. With reference to the accounting system which has been set up by the airlines, is it not true that that has been set up under the regulations of the CAB and that it is contained in a 100-page booklet setting up this cost accounting system, which system the airlines are using, and which they have been operating under?

Mr. HARRIS. Yes. As I said a moment ago it took several years to get that system developed which they are now using.

Mr. TEAGUE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRIS. I yield.

Mr. TEAGUE. As the facts have been presented to us, if there are two investigating groups and if there have been so many protests against the bill, why did the committee report out this bill, as I understand, by a vote of 15 to 2?

Mr. HARRIS. May I point out to the gentleman I explained that this morning during the discussion of the rule, and since my time is limited, I will not have the opportunity to explain it now, but will be glad to explain it to him later on.

Mr. Chairman, there are two other provisions which I wanted to mention as to the differences here which are highly important. In the so-called Hoover report they said they were in favor of separation. Most of us are. So I cannot see that there is a great deal of controversy over that. If they are in favor of it, then this bill which I propose to offer as a substitute, H. R. 9305, does exactly what they want to accomplish.

Another point is the international airline principle, which I will be glad to discuss in more detail a little later on when I offer the substitute bill. But because of the fact that the international airline must have their rates developed under the United Postal Union Rate-Making Group, then it becomes a very highly intricate problem and if we include the international carrier as this bill reported out by the committee does, we run into a most difficult question of how our airlines overseas can compete with foreign flagships. I think those are some of the greatest differences between the two proposals which will be offered to you for your consideration. I am sure the membership will use their good judgment and develop whatever proposal they think to be the best.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. BECKWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. SASSCER] as much time as he may require.

Mr. SASSCER. Mr. Chairman, I was shocked to read in the public press this morning that the United States Court of Appeals for New York, in reversing the conviction of Judith Coplon in the recent spy case over a technicality in connection with the arrest, stated:

> The conviction must be reversed, but we will not dismiss the indictment, for the guilt is plain.

Apparently she was proved guilty in a fair trial and convicted by a jury for spying for Russia and plotting against the United States. The case was reversed because she was arrested without a warrant.

Where there was a fair trial, a conviction, and the court that reversed the conviction commented "the guilt is plain," and the conviction of a proved spy is still set aside on the grounds of a technicality, there is an urgent and immediate need that the powers of the Federal Bureau of Investigation to arrest without warrant be broadened by law in cases involving spying, sabotage, and other crimes against the national security and defense.

When the security of America is threatened both from within and from without, and American prisoners of war are being murdered in Korea, an intolerable situation like this decision from which one recoils in indignation cannot be permitted to exist.

I am writing to the Attorney General today urging that legislation to tighten such loopholes through which courts under strained technicalities can reverse decisions in spy cases such as this be prepared immediately and forwarded to the proper committee of the House for introduction.

If this is not done, I propose to draft a bill myself and introduce it. I hope that it will be promptly prepared by the Department of Justice, as they are more familiar with the technicalities of the decision and better able to prepare the necessary legislation.

Mr. BECKWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 minute.

Mr. Chairman, it has been mentioned that money is provided in this bill for a study. That is one of the real difficulties that the Civil Aeronautics Board has had in the past, so it has told the Committee on Appropriations; they say they do not have the money to conduct a study. The purpose of this $300,000 is to enable the CAB to hire more people and any special help that they must have in order to conduct the necessary study and then to send to Congress reports which it is felt the CAB should send in connection with mail pay and subsidies, reports which give estimates at least in regard to needs of the airlines in future years.

In other words, after the Johnson committee has performed its study, with $200,000, the Civil Aeronautics Board will doubtless have to have money to make additional study, because they will doubtless want to get experts to put into being the Johnson committee recommendations, should they be approved by Congress. I want to make that clear.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BECKWORTH] has expired.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER].

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. Chairman, I think we need to get back to the fundamentals of this legislation that is being considered by the Committee today.

Let us remember, first of all, that the various airlines of this country which carry the mail must do so. That is, the law provides that there is no choice on the part of the airlines as to whether they may or may not carry the mail. If they are required to by law and by the proper administrative authority, they have no choice.

The second thing that is fundamental in this matter is that the amount of air-mail pay is fixed, not on what it costs the air carrier to carry the mail but it is fixed by a kind of arbitration or conference between the air carrier and the Civil Aeronautics Board; and that must be paid from an appropriation that is charged to the Post Office Department.

That is a kind of anachronism, it seems to me. The whole situation came about, of course, because it was the desire of the Congress and of the people to develop our air transport in this country and internationally. That purpose is served, of course, by this air-mail subsidy. But now the time has come when the American people and the Congress especially ought to be able to see how much is compensatory pay for the air-mail carriers that carry our mail, and how much is just plain subsidy. That is the purpose of this bill. That is the purpose of this legislation.

Some arguments have been brought forward here today that this is a futile gesture that we are making, because the Senate is not going to do anything about this legislation. But, Mr. Chairman, that is a very poor argument. Since when has the House of Representatives guided its conduct by the conduct of another legislative body? Our responsibility is to meet this problem as it comes before us today in regular order. The mere fact that it is said the other body will not take up this matter and will not pass it because of certain things that exist over there should have no weight with us, so far as what we do with this legislation.

There has also been some talk that this will mean a severe blow to the airlines of this country. In fact, it has been implied that if this legislation is passed it is going to be very difficult for some of the airlines to survive, because it has been stated that the Air Transport Association is against H. R. 9184 and in favor of something else. There is not anything in this bill that will destroy subsidies. This bill does not eliminate subsidies to the air-mail carriers. It simply separates the cost of carrying the mail from that subsidy, so that the American people will know where their money is going, how much of it is compensation and how much of it is a gratuity to keep the airlines in operation.

It seems to me that the issue is clear enough that we ought to be able to pass upon it. I am not too technical about the specific provisions in this bill. I suppose it is true that every proposal that comes before us with the exception of tax proposals which come with a closed rule, every proposal is subject to close scrutiny and perhaps subject to some revision on the floor of the House. I am not going to quarrel on that account; the thing that I am speaking for today as emphatically as I know how is that the time has come in the field of the carriage of air mail to let the American people know how much is compensatory payments and how much is subsidy which is paid to the airlines for the purpose of keeping them in business.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished ranking minority member of the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and of its Transportation Subcommittee, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. WOLVERTON].

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Chairman, the fundamental question that presents itself in this legislation is very simple. The legislation seeks to provide a method of separating air-mail rates and subsidies. I know of no one who is opposed to the accomplishment of this objective.

Section 406 of the Civil Aeronautics Act now directs the Civil Aeronautics Board to fix rates for the transportation of mail by air, the rates so fixed being paid by the Postmaster General. In fixing such rates under the law as now in effect, however, the Board is instructed to take into consideration, among other factors, the contribution of air carriers to the maintenance and development of a sound air-transportation system. There is no requirement that the Board decide how much of a particular rate is in payment for the service of transporting mail and how much is for the effort and expense of developing the desired transportation system, and the Board has not done so, except perhaps in the few instances of carriers who have been found self-sufficient and therefore not in need of subsidy.

No other existing public-utility legislation has come to the attention of the committee which lumps a compensatory rate and subsidy in a manner similar to the way it is done in the Civil Aeronautics Act. Prior to 1936, steamship lines were subsidized through the mechanism of mail payments, but this system was replaced by the direct operating of mail payments, but this system was replaced by the direct operating and construction subsidies provided by the Merchant Marine Act of 1936. The Interstate Commerce Commission fixes only the fair compensation for the services rendered by the railroads in carrying the mail, which compensation is paid by the Post Office Department. There is no provision in the statute under which the Interstate Commerce Commission operates for compensation for the development of a sound national surface transportation system.

The unique provision in the Civil Aeronautics Act is to be found in section 406 (b). After enumerating specific factors that should be considered in determining rates for transportation of mail, subsection (b) goes on to direct the Civil Aeronautics Board to consider also "the need of each such air carrier for compensation for the transportation of mail sufficient to insure the performance of such service, and, together with all other revenue of the air carrier, to enable such air carrier under honest, economical, and efficient management to maintain and continue the development of air transportation to the extent and of the character and quality required for the commerce of the United States, the postal service, and the national defense."

This quoted "need" provision has meant that where a carrier has been unable, after honest, economical, and efficient management, to earn a fair return on the operations found by the Board to be required for the development of a sound air transportation system to serve national objectives, air-mail pay has been used to raise its total revenues to the point where it would have such a return.

In recommending separation of subsidy from air-mail pay, the committee did not intend to indicate that subsidy in the field of aviation was or is improper. This bill does not eliminate subsidy, but merely makes it possible to know how much subsidy there is. No one knows at present, because no serious attempt at such discovery has been made. We have continued to use the device of air-mail pay to support the development of air transportation, even though the industry has long since passed its infancy. In the 12 years since the passage of the Civil Aeronautics Act, and particularly in the 4-year period since the close of the war, the industry has experienced tremendous physical expansion. Many new routes have been certificated, many new points are being served, aircraft are larger and faster, there has been a tremendous growth in passenger and cargo traffic. We have now entered a period when it is essential to appraise carefully what has been done and what remains to be done. A determination of the amount of subsidy in the total compensation to air carriers is a prerequisite to such an appraisal.

Lastly, but nevertheless very important, is the objective of a more rational system of Government accounting. So long as subsidy is blanketed in the Post Office accounts and appropriations, neither the executive nor the legislative branch of the Federal Government is able to distinguish the amounts which are properly chargeable to the mail service as against those which are chargeable to the promotion of commerce and national defense. The Post Office Department should not be made to bear, as it does now, the cost of developing air transportation. The fact that payments by the Post Office Department to air lines has increased from $26,347,614 in the year 1939 to $124,420,223 in 1949 is sufficient to justify the giving of this matter careful consideration.

The proposal to separate the subsidy element from air-mail pay has the firm support of the executive branch, as well as the support of many private groups and persons. The great preponderance of opinion favors separation. In his 1951 budget message to the Congress—House Document No. 405—the President of the United States stated:

> At present, direct financial assistance to the airlines is provided through air-mail payments, which are set generally at levels adquate to cover deficiencies in the carriers' commercial revenues. Subsidy is thus merged with the fair compensation for carrying mail, making it difficult to evaluate the cost of this aid in relation to its benefits. The recent rise in total air-mail payments—to an estimated level of about $125,000,000 in 1950—has made it increasingly important that the subsidy element be separately identified. I recommend, therefore, the immediate enactment of legislation to authorize the separation of subsidy payments from mail compensation. Such subsidies should be paid from funds appropriated to the Civil Aeronautics Board specifically for that purpose.

The Hoover Commission's report on the Post Office Department, issued February 17, 1949, contains the following recommendation with respect to the separation of subsidy—page 17:

> We recommend, however, that the amounts of these subsidies should be paid to the Post Office by open appropriation from tax funds and not imposed upon the Post Office or the mail users in this hidden manner.
> By such course, the President, the Congress, and the public may know what the amounts of the subsidies are.

A report of the House Post Office and Civil Service Committee, Eightieth Congress, second session—Report No. 1958—made the following recommendation—page 4:

> It is the recommendation of the committee that the subsidy element in air-mail pay be separated. It has been suggested that this could be arrived at by accounting procedures in the Post Office Department. However, this procedure would not eliminate the basic objection which is that, under the present situation, we have an administrative board alloting public funds through which basic public policies are established without action directly by the Congress. The better solution is to make provisions for subsidies directly to the Civil Aeronautics Board.

Government agencies, including the Department of Commerce, the Post Office Department, and the Civil Aeronautics Board have endorsed separation.

As previously stated, there is no objection so far as I can ascertain to the separation of air-mail rates and subsidies. There is some objection to certain provisions of the bill, but these, in my opinion, can be taken care of by appropriate amendments. The effect of the bill on our foreign carriers does raise serious problems that, in my opinion, justify a remedy. I am hopeful this can be done in a manner that will not destroy the basic objective of the legislation. It is basically legislation that should have the approval of the Congress.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I yield 6 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES], a member of the House Committee on Post Office and Civil Service.

Mr. REES. Mr. Chairman, H. R. 9184 proposes to separate the subsidy from air-mail pay so that appropriations for those subsidies will be acted upon separately by Congress. I should like to call the attention of the Members of the House to the fact that this bill or similar legislation directed toward this policy, when finally enacted into law, will give effect to recommendations made by the Post Office and Civil Service Committee in 1948.

Pursuant to H. R. 176, Eightieth Congress, the House Post Office and Civil Service Committee, which I then had the honor to serve as chairman, conducted an extensive study of the postal service in an effort to find economies which would meet in part the mounting postal deficit. One of the subjects of this study was air-mail subsidy. This study was completed and the report filed on May 13, 1948, House Report No. 1958, entitled "Report on Air Mail Subsidy."

This report made the following recommendations:

It is the recommendation of the committee that the subsidy element in air-mail pay be separated. It has been suggested that this could be arrived at by accounting procedures in the Post Office Department. However, this procedure would not eliminate the basic objection, which is that, under the present situation, we have an administrative board allocating public funds through which basic public policies are established without action directly by the Congress. The better solution is to make provisions for subsidies directly to the Civil Aeronautics Board.

Since legislation affecting civil aviation is under the jurisdiction of a committee other than the Post Office and Civil Service Committee, it was only within our province to recommend. This recommendation, however, was supported by both the House and Senate Appropriations Committees, and a similar recommendation was also later made by the Hoover Commission.

The Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee has, after a careful and extensive study, recommended this bill which will separate the subsidy from air-mail pay. This measure probably requires amendment, but in view of the general agreement on the policy, I believe it is appropriate to outline the findings of the Post Office and Civil Service Committee upon which that committee based its recommendations to make this separation.

It is only fair to remind the Members of the House that the conditions upon which findings were based are related to situations existing in 1948. Some of these conditions have, of course, since been corrected. However, the cost of the subsidy then estimated at approximately $15,000,000 to $17,000,000 a year has increased until today it amounts to more than $40,000,000 annually.

The committee reported in House Report No. 1958, Eightieth Congress:

Present procedure makes available a large sum of money from air-mail pay for expensive experiments in aviation policy. Expensive operations such as feeder-line service resulted in profits remaining for the high-traffic areas while losses in the public-service areas are charged to the postal service. For example, one feeder line received in 1948, $1,893,658 for carrying 45,031 ton-miles of mail. A service-rate carrier would have transported over 4,000,000 ton-miles for this amount of money.

High salaries, stock warrants and options to officers, together with losses resulting from poor management and overexpansion are cost factors in establishing so-called need upon which mail pay is based. One carrier then undergoing a reorganization received $388,462.70 for flying 648,333 ton-miles of mail in 1946. In the first 9 months of 1947 this same carrier received $2,211,420.27 for carrying 441,232 ton-miles of mail. In other words, this carrier received over seven times as much money for carrying 200,000 less ton-miles of mail.

Two rates were paid covering air mail in some instances. As an example, on the New York-Miami run, mail is carried by two carriers. One receives 60 cents per ton-mile and the other receives 45 cents per ton-mile.

A high percentage of mail carried by feeder lines could be carried by trunk lines at a much-reduced cost.

The committee pointed out, for example, a trunk line and a feeder line serve the same area. The trunk line in 9 months of 1947 received $325,247.52 for carrying 543,978 ton-miles of mail. The feeder line received $752,153.68 for carrying 26,669 ton-miles of mail. In other words, the feeder line received more than twice as much money for carrying one-twentieth as much mail.

The practice of granting retroactive air-mail pay was a means of underwriting any losses whatever and, in effect, is a situation similar to "cost plus" contracts.

Under the present system, wherein rates paid to air lines for carrying air mail are subject to so many changes, it is virtually impossible to have any satisfactory approach to establishing air-mail rates or air parcel post rates which will provide revenues to equal the expenditures for carrying this particular class of mail. This situation is aggravated by the fact that increases in rates paid to carriers have no relationship to the service performed by the carrier for the Post Office Department.

In view of the foregoing, it is clear that there is an urgent necessity for the scrutiny of the Appropriations Committee and of Congress of the expenditure of many millions of dollars in the furtherance of our domestic and foreign airline policy.

It should be observed that this bill has the approval of a Hoover Commission report. If the Membership of this House believes, after due consideration, that the bill should be amended to make the legislation more workable and more satisfactory, then such proposed amendments ought to be considered in order.

The Congress and the country should know how much funds are expended for the carrying of air mail and how much is required to subsidize the air lines. This is fair to the people and certainly fair to the airlines. The value of civil aviation to national defense is extremely important and must be supported where required.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HUGH D. SCOTT, JR.].

Mr. HUGH D. SCOTT, JR. Mr. Chairman, H. R. 9184 lumps the international along with the domestic services, although the committee report accompanying the bill shows that the considerations leading the committee to recommend the bill were drawn largely from the domestic field. Actually, the problems in the two fields are quite different.

The Commerce Committee over in the other body believes that the need for subsidy to the domestic airlines arises largely from service to small communities with meager traffic. The need for subsidy in the international field arises from the low density of international operations, higher expenses for this and other reasons, the operation of routes not warranted from a commercial basis but important for considerations of national prestige, diplomacy, and defense, and, finally, from the competition of foreign-flag carriers on a much lower wage standard.

The problem of separation of subsidy from mail pay in the international field differs also in the existence of an easily available standard as to what constitutes compensatory mail pay. This standard is the rate fixed from time to time by the Universal Postal Union.

The Universal Postal Union is an organization of substantially all the governments of the world. It establishes the rates to be paid by each nation to carriers of another, whether by air or by surface, for the carriage of the first nation's mail. These rates are agreed upon every 5 years in a convention of the world's leading postal authorities—the next meeting to be held in the spring of 1952. At the Universal Postal Union convention held in 1947, rates for the carriage of first-class letter airmail were established at the rate of $2.86 per ton-mile—with a special rate of $1.43 per ton-mile for short-haul services within Europe—and for international air parcel post at 71½ cents per ton-mile.

Many countries, including France, Belgium, Switzerland, the Netherlands, Denmark, Norway, Sweden, Canada, and the Union of South Africa, use these Universal Postal Union rates as a basis for payment to their own carriers as well as to foreign carriers. Similar action is under consideration by Great Britain.

The United States might well follow this same course. Here is a measure of payment for the carriage of international air mail which all of the nations of the world, including the United States, accept as constituting fair compensation to a foreign carrier and which many of them accept as constituting fair compensation to their own carrier for the transportation of their mail. Certainly such an internationally agreed rate is as likely to be fair as the exceedingly complicated cost allocations required by H. R. 9184.

It may be argued that a cost-allocation method would result in a lower payment by the post office than the Universal Postal Union rates. This, however, would not save any money for the United States Government as a whole. Any decrease in mail payments to United States carriers by virtue of using a cost-allocation formula rather than the Universal Postal Union rates would be offset by a corresponding increase in the subsidy payments required. Actually money would be lost—for two reasons:

First. If the United States were to pay its own carriers at rates lower than the Universal Postal Union rates, foreign nations would demand that American-flag carriers carry their mails at the same rates. This would ultimately lead to a decrease in the Universal Postal Union rate structure. American-flag airlines carry much more foreign mail than foreign-flag airlines carry United States mail. Such a reduction would therefore result in a loss to the American-flag carriers of many millions of dollars annually, with a consequent increase in the subsidy required to be met by American taxpayers.

Second. If foreign-flag carriers are paid by their own countries for carriage of the mails on the basis of Universal Postal Union rates and American-flag carriers are paid by the United States on a lower basis, the subsidy of the United States carriers will appear larger because of the lower rate of mail payments. Our carriers already have higher subsidy needs than the foreign lines because of higher wage costs. Adding the unnecessary handicap of a lower rate for carrying the mail would artificially increase the apparent need of our carriers for subsidy. This would play into the hands of persons abroad and would tend to stimulate subsidy wars.

Other amendments may dispose of this problem before this particular section is reached, in which case it will not be necessary to offer suitable amendments. I hope, however, that the bill will be amended to provide for this very serious and important situation affecting American-flag lines overseas. I am anxious that the bill as finally perfected may be in line with Hoover Commission recommendations. I am equally concerned that we do not, in attempting to accomplish so worthy a purpose, actually stimulate subsidy wars and increase the subsidy cost to American taxpayers.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUGH D. SCOTT, JR. I yield.

Mr. HINSHAW. Did I understand the gentleman to say in his statement that he would be in favor of the substitute which the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. HARRIS] proposes to offer?

Mr. HUGH D. SCOTT, JR. I understood that certain amendments would be offered. I would rather see an amendment or hear it read first. I was not in the Chamber during a part of the address by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. HARRIS].

Mr. HINSHAW. Of course the amendment to be offered will be the amendment by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. HARRIS] as a substitute.

Mr. HUGH D. SCOTT, JR. I believe I would rather hear that amendment and any other amendments read again as they will be, if the gentleman has no objection to that.

Mr. HINSHAW. The amendment is the bill H. R. 9305.

Mr. HUGH D. SCOTT, JR. I was not in the Chamber when the gentleman offered the amendment. I heard only a part of the gentleman's statement.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURDICK].

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Chairman, the reason I will support this bill is that we will have a chance to find out what the subsidy amounts to. The question as to subsidies and the amount of subsidies is not properly before us in this debate. The reason I shall support this bill is that last year there was considerable commotion here about the fact that the Post Office Department was $500,000,000 in the red. One of the reasons it was in the red was that these subsidies are charged to the Post Office Department. If this will separate them and we make separate appropriations for the subsidies you will find that the Post Office is not in the red at all. If you take all these cats and dogs, which are charged up to the Post Office Department, out of the Post Office Department you will find the Department is in pretty good shape. If this bill will separate the subsidies so that we can appropriate directly for them, that should be done.

There are a great number of things this Congress can do to relieve the Post Office Department of a deficit. Is there any reason in the world why postage should be given to Congress, the State Department, the Agriculture Department, the Interior Department, the Defense Department, the Army, Navy, and all the other fighting forces, and charged to the Post Office Department?

All of these items can be appropriated in the bills pertaining to those departments and not charge everything to the Post Office Department. The result will be the same if these expenses are appropriated, in the above-mentioned bills. The result of the system we are following now is to create a great deficit in the Post Office Department, and then seek to curtail mail service and increase postage to make up a deficit that never should have been created.

This bill would stop the subsidies from being charged to the Post Office Department and it should be followed up with a change in system all down the line. We have no right to jeopardize the mail service and increase postage by making the Department appropriation for departments less and the postal deficit more. On the bill as it stands, Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Dakota has expired.

Mr. BECKWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 12 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY].

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. Chairman, I first want to thank the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BECKWORTH] for the work that he has done on this bill. He has devoted over a year of effort to it and any results that may be obtained by this bill certainly will be due in the most part to him.

Mr. Chairman, first I want to devote myself to the remarks made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HUGH D. SCOTT, JR.] about this business of American airlines carrying mail and cargo abroad. Under the Hall bill these lines are exempted, which means that $47,000,000 or nearly half of the amount of this bill is thrown out. I have this letter from the Civil Aeronautics Board, dated August 26, 1949, to the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce relating to the bill, S. 2437, which includes the same exemption of the United States international airlines, which is included in all the bills. Here is what the Chairman of the CAB, who, by law, is the constituted authority with reference to this legislation, said:

> We do not believe that separate treatment should be given to the various parts of the air-transport system. The problem involved in separating mail pay and subsidy for international carriers do not seem to be peculiar. Once established, the principle of separation can be applied to all carriers irrespective of their geographic area of operation.

It seems to me the Hall bill, which leaves these carriers out to the amount of $47,000,000, is directly contrary to the letter from the Chairman of the CAB, who says that these should be included, and it is a definite reason why the Hall bill should not be accepted.

To omit the United States international airlines—and as I said, the foreign air transportation amounts to over $47,000,000 in the annual post office deficit—to omit the international airlines from this separation as the Hall bill advocates would mean throwing into the wastebasket one-half of this important Hoover Commission report and would also conflict with President Truman's recommendation on separation. Such an exemption would also be discriminatory. It would leave some airlines receiving only compensation while the international lines, like Pan-Am, would under the old system be receiving both the subsidy and a compensation which would be charged to the Post Office Department.

Secondly, the Hall bill would limit subsidies to air-mail carriers. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. HARRIS] has spoken on that. He said that under the bill we are advocating a lot of new planes would be given the benefits of subsidies. One of the reasons we are giving these subsidies is to prepare these airlines for national defense. So few of them are ready. If they were called on to go to Korea, many would not be equipped for the job.

One of the reasons we want to give this subsidy is to prepare these planes for national defense. We do not just want to give it only to those which are carrying air mail. We want all certified planes to be eligible so that they can use this money to prepare themselves for our defense. But in the Hall bill subsidies will be given only to those carrying air mail. All planes should be eligible for this subsidy for national defense, if the CAB sees fit.

No. 3, the Hall bill omits the cost standard for air mail. This cost standard has raised much discussion here. Let me read from a letter by Secretary Sawyer, in whose Department is the CAB:

> The problem of cost finding in the field of air transportation is no more difficult than in other fields of transportation, in which cost studies have been made for years. Elaborate cost studies have been made by the Interstate Commerce Commission in connection with both rail and motor carriers, and I suggest that the techniques developed in these studies may well serve as useful guides to the Board in connection with the study of cost of carrying air mail, air passenger traffic, air freight, and air expense.

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield.

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. The gentleman would concede, would he not, that by the terms of this bill we are setting up a completely distinct and separate quotient for air-mail pay as distinguished from mail pay by the railroads?

Mr. KENNEDY. No. What I am trying to say—and I am quoting Secretary Sawyer—is that this could be set up just as well in the airlines as in other means of transportation.

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. But it is completely different from what has existed before, as well as what exists on the railroads.

Mr. KENNEDY. I refuse to yield further, Mr. Chairman.

Secretary Sawyer, under whose Department the CAB is located, says that it is similar and that it can be done, and I have no doubt that it can be done. Anyone who has had the experience in business that the gentleman from Minnesota has had knows that to carry on business you must use cost allocations.

Here is the way it is done when need is the only standard: Suppose we have two airlines going to Miami. A line does not get a subsidy because they run their airline very efficiently. They try to economize in every way. Under the old method, because they had balanced their books, they did not need a subsidy, and they would not get a subsidy. Another airline—B—running to the same place, operates with very elaborate expense; has two stewardesses, uses a limited number of seats, rolls out the red carpet, does a lot of advertising, and operates at a loss; they would go to the CAB and they would be given a subsidy. They go to the same place; they render the same service; but one airline might be economical and get no subsidy and another airline might waste a lot of money and the CAB give them a subsidy.

Now, what is fair about that? There is no possible reason why that should go on. Therefore, in this bill, we are really trying to give the public decent service, trying to keep the airlines in operation, but, nevertheless, trying to end the waste in the business.

Now, I have a couple of other objections to Mr. HALL's bill. It indefinitely postpones the effective date on which this would be put into effect. It provides this:

> Immediately upon the enactment of this act the Board shall act promptly with a view to revising on July 1, 1951, or as soon as practicable thereafter.

Now, these subsidies are supposed to have ended in 1938. They are still being paid in 1950. What does that mean: "As soon as practicable thereafter"? We have no definite date on which this act should go into effect, which is another thing that I think is wrong with the Hall bill. In our bill we state a definite date. We do not say "as soon as practicable thereafter." That is another objection to the Hall bill.

Now, I state that the Hall bill is the bill that the Air Transport Association, the Big Five who have been getting a substantial subsidy which the Post Office has been paying, between $30,000,000 and $60,000,000 for the last 14 years. The Hall bill is their bill. It not only takes out the airplanes that are going abroad and cuts in half what we are trying to do, but it has all these other sections to weaken what we are trying to do. My opinion is, and I think the opinion of the committee, 15 to 2, the President, the Hoover Commission, that H. R. 9184 should go into effect.

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KENNEDY. Before yielding, there have been statements made that even if this bill should pass the House it would not reach the Senate in time for the Senate to act on it. I received a wire this morning from Senator JOHNSON, Chairman of the Senate Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. This is what he said:

> While I cannot speak for other members of my committee, I will do my utmost to get H. R. 9184 through the Senate in this session if it is enacted by the House.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. HARRIS. The gentleman mentioned the Big Five.

Mr. KENNEDY. Yes.

Mr. HARRIS. I suppose the gentleman is talking about the four big airlines which he states are receiving between $30,000,000 and $50,000,000 in subsidy.

Mr. KENNEDY. That is right.

Mr. HARRIS. Is it not a fact that the so-called Big Four perform 80 percent of the service and receive only approximately 37 percent of the subsidy that is paid out?

Mr. KENNEDY. I may say to the gentleman from Arkansas that I do not object to subsidies; I think subsidies should go on. But I do believe they should be open; we should know how much they are.

Mr. HARRIS. The gentleman left the inference, as I understood, that the Big Five got the most of this subsidy.

Mr. KENNEDY. No, I did not leave that inference; I just say they are in favor of the Hall bill.

Mr. BECKWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield.

Mr. BECKWORTH. In view of what has been said about what the Senate might do will the gentleman read that wire again?

Mr. KENNEDY. Yes; I will. This is from Senator JOHNSON, a Senator from Colorado, chairman of the committee under whose jurisdiction this bill would fall. He said:

> While I cannot speak for every member of my committee, I will do my utmost to get H. R. 9184—
> The bill that is before this House now—> through the Senate in this session if enacted by the House.

Mr. HESELTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield.

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield.

Mr. HESELTON. Should it not also be said in explanation that the proposal now before us involves four of the airlines out of the so-called Big Five. What is intended to be done under this bill will probably take care of 80 percent of the business. What is there wrong about trying to take care of the other 20 percent?

Mr. KENNEDY. Before yielding further I wish to refer to a statement by Col. Edgar S. Gorrell, president of the Air Transport Association, made before the House Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries in 1938. Colonel Gorell at that time said:

> I say aviation undoubtedly is not going to be a permanently subsidized industry. In stating that aviation is not going to be a permanently subsidized industry, I do not want to have the impression created that the airlines are not entitled to such subsidy as they have today. They are grateful for the subsidy they receive at the present time, but they are trying to work at the present time out of the subsidy class. The domestic airlines received last year a total so-called subsidy of only $400,000.

Now they receive between $30,000,000 and $60,000,000. Twelve years later they have not worked out of subsidy but have gone into it deeper, and deeper, and deeper; and the Post Office has to pay the subsidy, not only the compensation for carrying air mail but pay the subsidy, between $30,000,000 and $60,000,000 a year.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. O'HARA].

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the unanimity of opinion, on which everyone agrees, that there should be a separation of air-mail pay from the subsidy. I hope some of our friends, and the gentleman from Massachusetts who just spoke, will give a little consideration to the other subsidies paid out by the Post Office Department. For example, the Postmaster General appeared before a Senate committee and stated that, as a matter of fact, the air-mail subsidy was the smallest subsidy paid out by the Post Office Department, and I quote from page 1296 of part 3 of the hearings, this last year, at which time he stated:

> It is the least subsidy that we have in the postal service. I do not mean to imply that we are not concerned about subsidies. I mean that it has not been the thing that has distorted the financial status of the postal service as much as other subsidies. The present subsidy on second-class mail is about $207,000,000. The present subsidy on third-class mail is about $139,000,000. The present subsidy on the penny-postal card and post card is about $57,000,000. The present subsidy on fourth-class mail is about $82,000,000.

So that when we talk about the importance of separation of air-mail pay and subsidies, while it is certainly practical if it can be done, I do not know if it is going to actually mean any saving to the taxpayers of the country. I think you all agree that that is the situation. Whatever they are allowed as an air-mail payment for carrying the mail, some of these airlines are still going to have to come in and be subsidized. They cannot operate otherwise. Others may be able to sustain themselves without a subsidy.

It is a strange thing when we speak about this we do not take other things into consideration. There is, I assume, some subsidy paid the railroads for carrying the mail. There are some subsidies, I assume, paid to the merchant marine for carrying the mail. Yet no one has been concerned about them. I think the committee might have made an over-all approach to all forms of transportation and insisted upon separation of air-mail pay and subsidy in all forms of transportation. I have always taken the position, that is, what should be done so that we know what we pay out in subsidy and what we pay out for the carrying of the mail.

I was very pleased to note from the remarks of my distinguished friend from Massachusetts that there is provision in this bill also to provide for 2,300 or 2,400 other carriers, which would permit those carriers who are not certificated at this time to carry mail, and permit them under this bill to come in and apply for a subsidy. So if you pass this legislation in its present form you may be sure that you are going to have a lot of these lines that are so operating come in for a subsidy. You will have that problem before you.

I think it is a rather serious thing, and if you are going to take up that subject, you should know what you are doing. That is what is in this bill. I think one of the moving things behind it is to get these unsubsidized carriers in under the tent.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I was interested in the gentleman's reference to the railroads. Who makes the contracts with the railroads for the handling of mail?

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. I do not know, but I would assume that it is the Post Office Department.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. The Post Office Department makes contracts with all carriers for the handling of mail just as this legislation proposes should be done in connection with the handling of mail by the airlines. Is there any particular reason that you know of why the air transport mail should be handled on an entirely different basis than the transportation of other mail?

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. No. Frankly I never would take that position. I think it should all be handled by the Post Office Department.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. The gentleman mentioned something about a subsidy on post cards. I have not been able to follow the gentleman's logic.

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. Well, that is the testimony of the Postmaster General.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. That is not the testimony. The evidence does disclose that a post card costs a little over 2 cents apiece, but there is no subsidy paid on post cards. The service rendered the public costs more than the public pays for it.

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. I cannot yield any more time for that kind of argument.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I will take time on my own. I had not expected to speak on this bill, but there has been a lot of camouflage and a lot of technical statements, and I intend to speak on it under the 5-minute rule.

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. I was quoting verbatim from the Postmaster General's testimony, and it is here if the gentleman wants to look at it.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Does the Postmaster General say that there is a subsidy paid to anyone for the transportation of post cards?

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. I am only quoting what he said.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Will the gentleman quote what he said.

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. I have quoted exactly what he said.

Mr. RIVERS. The gentleman means verbatim.

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. Verbatim. I will be happy to have the gentleman from Ohio take a look at the book, if he doubts my word.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I do not doubt the gentleman's word.

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. Now, let us get down to the fundamentals involved in this bill. We have another approach to this bill which is certainly something that should be considered, and that is the changing of the system of fixing the rate which is completely different than has been in existence. I think it is admitted that that is true. The subsection, if any of you have the bill before you, is that which is referred to as subsection 2, on page 3, which changes the present existing set-up. If it was as simple as to merely pass legislation that provided for separation of the air-mail pay from the subsidy, that could be done and should be done and, of course, as it will actually work out, will make some considerable difference. But, in this bill you are setting up something, by the provision I refer to which, if the Hall bill is not adopted, I shall move to strike out, which is the language which sets up a completely different cost system. No one in the hearings before the House committee was able to cite any precedent for this change at all; no one that I noticed in the hearings or that I heard.

Mr. HESELTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. HESELTON. In the hearings before the House committee, on page 10, Secretary Sawyer said this:

> The problem of cost finding in the field of air transportation is no more difficult than in other fields of transportation in which such studies have been made for years.

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. That does not apply to the making of rates for either the rails or the marine establishment for carrying the mail at all. It is not the same provision at all that applies to them. I do not know what will happen in the courts if this language should be questioned as to whether it is fair and reasonable, but if we are going to legislate upon it a change in the method should certainly apply to all forms of mail carriers, and not just to the air. I am sure even some of the proponents of this legislation would agree that that is true. But whether we ever get around to legislate concerning any other carrier will be another and a different problem.

Mr. REES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. REES. To what language does the gentleman refer with respect to their method of figuring these rates? Page 3?

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. Page 3, subsection 2, lines 4 to 11.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, as you can readily see, this is a most complicated matter, one on which even the members of our own committee disagree most heartily. We have had great difficulty in resolving just what ought to be done.

I think the first thing we here ought to do is keep in our minds the fact that the air-transportation system of the United States is, in actuality, an auxiliary of the national defense. It was so designed. In World War II one-half of all the aircraft that were operated by the airlines were turned over to the armed services. An additional 168 aircraft that were on order in the factories were upon their completion likewise turned over to the Armed Forces.

Some of you may remember that I had the honor of being the vice chairman of the congressional Aviation Policy Board in the Eightieth Congress. That Board made a very comprehensive study and learned that the armed services needed as auxiliary aircraft some 750 four-engine airplanes of the general type that are in service in commercial operation for future use. It is anticipated that in case the United States gets into an all-out war at least one-half of the commercial aircraft will again be taken by the armed services. Even then there is a lag of some three or four hundred airplanes which we do not now have.

The Civil Aeronautics Act was designed to further aviation. It was designed to create a system of air commerce as an auxiliary to the national defense in time of need. I might mention to you that some 77 aircraft were requisitioned from air carriers for the Tokyo airlift, along with four crews per aircraft and a sufficient number of mechanics. That was a marvelous undertaking. Some of those airplanes have not been returned. It is my understanding that in perhaps the very near future we may be called upon to send perhaps the entire four-engined fleet over there if we have to have a Dunkirk in Korea. Some of them may not be equipped for overseas flying.

But it is better to have them overseas without the equipment so that they may be able to get our men out of Korea than not to have them.

That is what it is all about. This situation simply means that we have to have as many aircraft in air commerce as we can, as an auxiliary to the national defense. How to pay them for their operations? We have hoped right along that passenger and freight and other cargo would pay for most of the cost of transportation by air and that mail would pay only a compensatory rate, a rate adequate for the service performed. The Civil Aeronautics Board came before us and testified that approximately 60 cents per ton-mile is now a compensatory rate. That rate, or very close to it, is paid to the four major airlines. The four major airlines are not being subsidized. I can name them to you. They are Eastern Air Lines, American Airlines, United Air Lines, and TWA. They are not receiving a subsidy today. They transport 80 percent of the mail. The balance, or 20 percent of the mail, is carried by all the other airlines.

The question of what is compensatory to an airline operating in the great Southwest, or the great Northeast, or any other part of the country with short hauls and stops, as many of them have, is a very difficult thing to determine. If you want them to perform the service for your town, wherever you may live, and if it is a town of adequate size and a center where much mail and some passengers can be collected, then you are going to have to pay them for that service, just as you have to pay the star-route man in accordance with the difficulty of his star route, its length, and weight of mail to be carried and so on.

That does not mean that you can take 60 cents per ton-mile and use that as a compensatory rate on what is referred to in the aviation business as the "milk run" service. It might be 80 cents or a dollar per ton-mile to carry the mail on a compensatory basis by such a carrier. That is where you run into complications. There is no complication with respect to the four major airlines which handle 80 percent of the mail. The complication comes in with the other 33 or approximately 33 which handle 20 percent of the mail to the rural areas, the farming sections of the great Southwest and Middle West, and the mountain States, both east and west. They are the ones receiving the subsidy. We want them to be in service. We realize that in order to have them serve our country both handling the mail and to be available in time of need we are going to have to subsidize them; but where you cut the line and say for this airline so much is subsidy and so much is not subsidy—that is the most difficult question that these people have to answer. It is easy to say any figure. Why, it would be easy to just set up a figure and say this is a compensatory rate, and this is subsidy. But you cannot do that. That is why these studies are going on.

I was surprised to hear the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts read a telegram from the distinguished chairman of the committee of the other body saying that he would be glad to get the bill through in this session of the Congress. That committee is spending $200,000 making its study, and I know personally that that study is not completed. It would seem to me quite silly for that committee of the other body to take any action on the bill passed by this body when their own study has not been completed. I say that with all due respect to the great gentleman who is chairman of that committee, but his telegram does not sound reasonable to me. It does not make sense under the circumstances.

Now let us go into the international carriage of mail, and let me discuss that briefly for you, and the question of separation of subsidies.

As has been said, the Universal Postal Union has established a rate of $2.86 per ton-mile for the carriage of mail in the international service, with the exception of a small area in Europe where the rate is half of that amount. Our own carriers would be very glad to receive $2.86 per ton-mile in the international service. They do not get that much. They get approximately 50 cents per ton-mile less than that. Their average of all services is at the rate of $2.35 per ton-mile, 51 cents less than the International Postal Union.

It was pointed out by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HUGH D. SCOTT, JR.] if we start now to try to figure what is compensation and what is subsidy, and set up a figure which actually is subsidy, then we start on a subsidy war with the European and other countries that operate these airlines, a rate war.

Let us realize one thing. All of the international carriers in the world, except those carriers which carry the United States flag, are Government owned or nearly so. They are not privately operated carriers. So our privately operated carriers therefore are in competition throughout the world with Government-owned carriers, who can hide any subsidy that they give to their carriers, through any kind of bookkeeping that they may want to set up.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 additional minutes.

We cannot hide it. We would be making a serious international mistake if we were to require a separation of actual compensation for carrying the mail, and any subsidy which might be being paid.

Now, the rate which I mentioned, $2.35, may sound high to you, but it must be remembered that in the international service, the air-mail carriers carry the load. They carry the load of a great many expenses that our domestic carriers do not have to pay. For example, it costs $150 just to land an airplane at the airport in Paris. Our carriers pay that sum of $150 just to land their planes. The French carrier also pays $150 to land an airplane, but in the case of Air France it goes out of one government pocket into the other, and it does not make a bit of difference. So that the French Government, if it chooses to do so, can raise the rate to $500 per landing, and it means nothing to them except the profit that they might get from foreign airlines. However, of course they would have to look out for any reprisals on the part of other governments.

In my humble judgment, after 12 years of studying this problem, I say it would be a great mistake for us to direct the separation of compensation from subsidy in the international carriage of mail.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HINSHAW. I yield.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the gentleman advise the committee of his attitude on the proposed substitute which I will offer, known as the Leonard Hall bill.

Mr. HINSHAW. Yes. I will be happy to do so, because that substitute does not require the immediate separation of compensation from possible subsidy in the international carriage of mail, and therefore, to that extent, it is a far better bill than the one that is before the commitee, H. R. 9184. If I must have a bill—and I think there should be no bill, as I said before—but if we have to have a bill, I prefer H. R. 9305, because that is something which will not so tangle up the situation that we will never get it unraveled.

Now I want to speak about one more thing in this H. R. 9184. That bill is so drawn that it would require the CAB to order the payment of subsidy to any certificated carrier in the United States. There are many certificated carriers. There are 2,400 nonscheduled certificated carriers of small size and about 60 more of a fairly decent size.

This bill will open up a Pandora's box for the payment of subsidies to all those carriers which are not now being subsidized. If you want to do that, then just vote for this bill, H. R. 9184; but we in the committee do not think it should be done; I certainly do not, and I believe a majority of the committee goes along with that viewpoint.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HINSHAW. I yield.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. I do not understand that the bill would require these subsidies to be paid, but that it permits their payment.

Mr. HINSHAW. Permits. Yes; permits. The gentleman certainly knows what that means. Any little outfit would make application, put up some ground for a particular amount. The Board could not say that it was illegal for them to pay out this money, so the company would bring pressure on Members of Congress to go down to the Board and see to it that the company got the subsidy. If that is what you want, then let us have it.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HINSHAW. I yield.

Mr. HARRIS. Is it not a fact that under the provisions of the bill now before the committee the Board is permitted to pay a subsidy to any carrier certificated, without a hearing if they so desire?

Mr. HINSHAW. Yes; they may.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HINSHAW. I yield, but please make the question brief.

Mr. JAVITS. Would the gentleman comment on the defense aspect of air transportation? Will the gentleman tell us whether or not he feels that the air transport industry would be better qualified for real effective defense work if it were treated solely on the basis of H. R. 9184 in the consideration of subsidies instead of being all mixed up in air-mail pay in this indirect way?

Mr. HINSHAW. No; I do not think so. We have certain carriers that are certificated to carry mail. There are 37 carriers domestically and quite a few more in Alaska. The total runs to about 60 that are certificated to carry the mail. The reason they are certificated to carry mail is because they operate on schedule and under particular rules. The Post Office Department, above all things, must have a schedule on which to operate, and these are scheduled carriers. All other carriers are nonscheduled carriers; they carry no mail. As far as national defense is concerned, we might subsidize the building of aircraft or purchase and lease them for a cheap price if you want to do that, but that has not come before the Congress as yet; it has not even come before our committee. There are a number of different methods to increase the number of aircraft in commercial service.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HINSHAW. I yield.

Mr. KEATING. I appreciate the fact that the gentleman is against any of these bills.

Mr. HINSHAW. Right at the moment.

Mr. KEATING. At the moment. This may be an oversimplification, but is it a reasonably correct statement that the principal difference between this bill and its substitute is that the substitute leaves the method of computing the subsidy as it is now, whereas his bill sets up a new standard?

Mr. HINSHAW. Yes; that is largely true.

Mr. KEATING. And the gentleman feels that the old method is a preferable method to the one set up in this bill.

Mr. HINSHAW. I feel this, that it took 3 years to draw up the form for making out accounting reports on carriers in the first place. Now you propose to change that completely in a few months. You cannot possibly do it without utter and absolute confusion. It is going to take considerable study by the Civil Aeronautics Board—it may not run 3 years, but it might run a year—in order to figure out a cost accounting system which would apply to any subdivision of compensation and subsidy.

Mr. KEATING. Had they not been studying this problem for some time?

Mr. HINSHAW. No; as a matter of fact, the Appropriations Committee of the House has constantly cut the budget of the CAB until they are now about 2 years behind in merely handling the cases that are before them.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HINSHAW. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. LUCAS. I would like the gentleman's opinion as to the effect of each of these bills. Which bill will save the taxpayers of the United States the most money?

Mr. HINSHAW. I think H. R. 9305 will save the taxpayers the most money because there is no additional subsidy authorized in that bill, whereas Pandora's box is open in H. R. 9184. H. R. 9305 stops right where we are and merely says: Divide it between subsidy on the one hand and compensation on the other. It does not say that you will add a dime. There is no gain, no loss, except in the time consumed in trying to figure it out.

Mr. REES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HINSHAW. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. REES. Does the gentleman realize the passage of this legislation will provide for every one of these airlines to carry the mail?

Mr. HINSHAW. H. R. 9184 provides that any airline can be subsidized.

Mr. REES. Provides.

Mr. HINSHAW. And be paid by the Post Office Department.

Mr. REES. If it is necessary for national defense. Is that not the fact?

Mr. HINSHAW. What has that got to do with separation of subsidies? That is new legislation in H. R. 9184. That is offering an entirely new subject which has not been considered by our committee.

I think it would be a mistake and a very grave mistake—I say that with every bit of sincerity I possess—if we should pass the bill H. R. 9184. It would be an error of the first magnitude. The other bill, H. R. 9305, which will be presented by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. HARRIS] is not an error. It is a little previous, as far as I am concerned, but it is not an error, and I hope that is what will be adopted.

Mr. BECKWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the balance of the time on this side.

Mr. Chairman, a great deal has been said about the number of additional carriers that might be brought in under the terms of this legislation. That has been emphasized over and over again. There are some Members who doubtless have confidence in the Civil Aeronautics Board; there are others who do not have so much confidence in the Civil Aeronautics Board perchance. I know that there is a new chairman of that Board down there at this time. He tells me he wants to do a constructive job. I believe this is true of the Board.

It should be borne in mind by the members of the committee that mere possession of a certificate would not entitle a single carrier to any subsidy. As a matter of fact, there is a prohibition against it. On page 5 of the bill we have this language:

> The fact that an air carrier has been granted a certificate of public convenience and necessity authorizing it to offer certain services shall not be deemed conclusive of the issue as to whether such services are sufficiently required in the interest of the national defense, the commerce of the United States, or the postal service, to justify the amount of subsidy that would be required to keep such services in operation.

In other words, a carrier might be in existence today and if the CAB did not feel or did not come to the conclusion, after studying the facts, that in the interest of national defense, in the interest of commerce, that particular carrier should be kept in existence, the Board would not have to keep that carrier in existence by paying subsidies. That sort of language might eliminate some people who today have certificates and prevent them from being eligible for any kind of a subsidy.

Let me refer to one other thing. It has been emphasized over and over that a study has not been made of the kind of subsidies other carriers receive, such as the merchant marine and so forth. Secretary Sawyer made a statement before the committee on that point on February 15. This is what he said:

> At the present time the air carriers are the only form of transportation which receives substantial subsidies through the mechanism of mail pay. Mail payments to surface carriers and to steamship lines are not generally regarded as containing any large element of subsidy.
> Prior to 1936 the steamship lines were subsidized through the mechanism of mail payments, but this system as replaced by the direct operating and construction subsidies provided for by the Merchant Marine Act of 1936.

In other words, he points out that in this particular instance, since these carriers are the ones that receive what he describes "as substantial subsidies through the mechanism of mail pay." It is necessary to identify those subsidies, more so than it is with reference to the other carriers which he mentioned in this very paragraph.

Mr. Chairman, I now yield 5 minutes to my colleague, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILDAY].

Mr. KILDAY. Mr. Chairman, I want to make it clear initially that I have no objection whatever to the payment of subsidies. It is not an innovation under our system to pay subsidies to new forms of transportation. It was done for the railroads in the form of grants of public land. As has just been mentioned by the acting chairman of the committee, it is done for marine carriers and, of course, it is done for airlines. I am particularly willing to pay a subsidy to the airlines because of their value to national defense. The gentleman from California [Mr. HINSHAW] referred to the fact that the airlines are of great value to national defense. He mentioned the fact that he served as vice chairman of the Congressional Aviation Policy Board. I had the privilege of serving on that Board as a minority member, it having existed during the Eightieth Congress. When a time of emergency arises such as we faced on the 25th of June with the aggression against South Korea, you cannot overestimate the value of the civil air transportation system of the United States to our military forces. Of course, subsidy has been paid; it has been authorized for the purpose of promoting national defense, as one of its purposes, in addition to building a new transportation system. On the other hand, I cannot see how the passage of this bill as reported by the committee can in any wise affect national defense. The gentleman from California did not say that it would, but he mentioned the value of air transportation, civil air transportation, in the event of a war emergency, and that might leave a reasonable inference that this bill might in some wise affect that.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KILDAY. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HINSHAW. The reason I said this bill would be bad for national defense is because right in the midst of an emergency it requires a complete change in the accounting system, which goes into great detail, of all the airlines, just at a time when all of their personnel are very badly needed in the interest of national defense.

Mr. KILDAY. I thank the gentleman.

There is nothing wrong in the payment of a subsidy to this new form of transportation in order to establish and build up the new transportation system and have it available for national defense in the event of a limited emergency, such as the Korean situation, or an all-out war. Therefore I have been amazed to find that those who have heretofore received the subsidy and those who now receive the subsidy object to it being placed squarely before the public that they are receiving the subsidy. There is nothing to be ashamed of in receiving that subsidy.

When we were in session in the Congressional Aviation Policy Board this matter came up and the Board made a very unusual recommendation, and I believe that it is in accordance with what the gentleman from California stated his position to be, that he does not want anything, but if you are going to have any bill, let us have the substitute. Those who have heretofore consistently opposed the separation of subsidy from air-mail payments have opposed any bill, but at the last minute, when we are about to pass the committee bill, then we get letters from practically every recipient of the subsidy that they endorse the substitute and not the committee bill.

Frankly, I am a little bit afraid of the bill advocated by those who have consistently and invariably opposed the separation of subsidy, but when they find an effective bill coming before the House they advocate unanimously the passage of the substitute bill. It is a flanking attack when they cannot win a direct attack upon the bill.

These recipients of the subsidy, as I say, have consistently opposed the separation. Let us see what the Congressional Aviation Policy Board recommended. It carries out the thought of the gentleman from California as expressed on the floor:

> Until the air transport system reaches more nearly self-supporting operations, no action should be taken to separate the subsidy payment from the mail-service payment.

I opposed that in the Aviation Policy Board. The gentleman from California advocated it. What does it say in plain English? It says that until such time as we quit paying the subsidy let us not separate it. In other words, so long as we pay a subsidy for air-mail transportation, let us not separate it. That has been the consistent position of those who oppose the committee bill and those who so recently have endorsed the substitute. It has been constantly a question of delay. So long as we can continue to study, continue to learn, it is perfectly all right with those who receive this subsidy.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KILDAY. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HINSHAW. I have stated that I favor the separation, and that I will support the bill H. R. 9305, but I think this is not the time to do it.

Mr. KILDAY. There has never been a proper time. A list was called of all those who endorse the principle of the separation of subsidy. But they say this is not the time. You are not going to find a time that will be suitable to those drawing the subsidy. It is a perfectly legal, moral, proper thing to do, to pay them a subsidy. It is in the very best interests of the United States, the development of its transportation, and the promotion of its national defense. There is no reason why the people of the United States should not know how much is going for the purpose of promoting our transportation system and promoting our national defense. We should take away the subterfuge of paying it as mail rates and creating an additional deficit in the Post Office Department.

Mr. BECKWORTH. Mr. Chairman, may I call the attention of the Committee to the fact that on page 18 of the report which accompanies this bill there is a very clear letter written to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. O'HARA] on August 31 which points out the objections the CAB has to the so-called Heselton bill. Any member of the committee sincerely eager to bring about what might be termed sound corrections, particularly if the Heselton bill stays before the House, will know in rather fine detail what in the opinion of the best experts we have, the officials of the CAB, would cause the Heselton bill to be acceptable. Insofar as that letter is concerned as applied to the Heselton bill, we would not be in the dark so far as knowing what those who have studied the situation most, the CAB, feel in regard to it.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. CANFIELD].

Mr. CANFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I agree with all that has been said here on the floor this afternoon about the necessity of these subsidies in the interest of national defense. I agree also with the very fine statement made by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES], who formerly headed the House Committee on the Post Office and Civil Service.

You will recall he told of repeated investigations made by the committee which developed discrepancies in these airmail payments—discrepancies which were hard to explain, and discrepancies which the committee could not understand. I speak as a member of the House Subcommittee on Appropriations handling Post Office and Treasury funds. This problem concerns our committee, too, but do you know we are not permitted to go behind these payments in any way? We are not permitted to question their fairness, or the justice or the equities thereof. They are presented to us by the Post Office Department as certified bills by the CAB—must bills—and we can give them no consideration other than to put them in the appropriation bill.

I believe the Hoover Commission knew what it was doing when it recommended this separation. The Hoover Commission was primarily interested in good government at a lesser cost. I believe this separation through this bill will promote better government at lesser cost, and a new and honest system of bookkeeping, which will show among other things that some of the carriers are being overpaid and some of the carriers are being underpaid. Are we not here this afternoon doing a little shadowboxing on this very important issue?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. BECKWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc.—

SECTION 1. This act may be cited as the "Air Mail Subsidy Separation Act of 1950."

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HARRIS: Strike out all after the enacting clause of H. R. 9184 and insert the following: "That subsection (b) of section 406 of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, as amended, is amended by striking out all after 'pursuant to law;' and inserting in lieu thereof the following: 'and the need of each such air carrier for compensation for the transportation of mail in foreign air transportation sufficient to insure the performance of such service, and, together with all other revenue of the air carrier, to enable such air carrier under honest, economical, and efficient management to maintain and continue the development of foreign air transportation to the extent and of the character and quality required for the commerce of the United States, the Postal Service, and the national defense.'

"SEC. 2. Subsection (e) of section 406 of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"'SUBSIDY FOR ESSENTIAL INTERSTATE AND OVERSEAS AIR TRANSPORTATION

"'(e) The Board is empowered and directed, upon its own initiative, or upon petition of any air carrier holding a certificate authorizing the carriage of mail in interstate or overseas air transportation, to authorize, after notice and hearing (in the same proceeding in which a rate is to be fixed under subsection (a) of this section for such carrier or in a separate proceeding, as the Board may deem appropriate), subsidy payments to such carrier in amounts determined by the Board to be necessary, when taken together with all the other revenues of the air carrier, to enable such air carrier under honest, economical, and efficient management to maintain and continue the development of interstate and overseas air transportation to the extent and of the character and quality required for the national defense and the commerce of the United States. Any such subsidy payment shall be made by the Board from funds appropriated to it.'

"SEC. 3. This act shall be effective July 1, 1951. Immediately upon the enactment of this act the Board shall act promptly with a view to revising, on July 1, 1951, or as soon as practicable thereafter, all mail rate orders which provide rates of mail compensation in interstate or overseas air transportation other than on a fair and reasonable basis. Compensation for the transportation of mail for periods before July 1, 1951, shall be fixed and determined pursuant to law in effect before such date. In the absence of a temporary or final order made under section 406 (a) and (b), as amended herein, the Postmaster General shall continue to make payments in accordance with the provisions of existing mail rate orders issued pursuant to the law in effect before July 1, 1951. Upon the issuance of a temporary or final order fixing compensation for periods on and after July 1, 1951, all necessary adjustments (including transfers of funds appropriated to the Post Office Department for the transportation of mail by aircraft) shall be made between the Board, the Postmaster General, and the air carrier, so that the provisions of this act are fully carried out, both as to the compensation due the carrier for the period on and after July 1, 1951, and the source of payment.

"(b) As an aid to the proceedings referred to in this section, the Board, immediately upon the enactment of this act, shall institute an investigation to ascertain the means and methods to be employed in administering the new method of compensation prescribed by section 406 of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938 as amended by this act. All air carriers authorized to carry mail in interstate or overseas air transportation under the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, as amended, shall be parties to such investigation.

"SEC. 4. As soon as practicable after the enactment of this act, the Board shall institute an investigation as to the feasibility and wisdom of providing for separate determination, appropriation, and payment of the amounts paid to air carriers as compensation for services rendered in transporting the mail in foreign air transportation and the amounts paid to them as subsidy for such transportation. All air carriers authorized to carry mail in foreign air transportation under the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, as amended, shall be parties to such investigation. The Board shall report to Congress on or before July 1, 1951, the results of such investigation.

"SEC. 5. For the purpose of carrying out its duties under this act, the Board is authorized (1) without regard to the civil-service laws or the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, to appoint and fix the compensation of such experts and consultants, and such clerical and stenographic personnel, as it deems necessary, and (2) without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes, to enter into such contracts and arrangements with organizations of experts and consultants as it deems necessary. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated to the Civil Aeronautics Board such sums, not in excess of $150,000, as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act."

Mr. HARRIS (interrupting the reading of the amendment). Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that the substitute bill has been discussed, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of it be dispensed with and that it be printed at this point in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Chairman, I agree with the statement of those who have said the discussion of this matter on the floor this afternoon has obviously been wholesome and very helpful indeed. I think the major points of difference have been fairly well discussed. Recognizing, of course, that there is a degree of technicality in connection with this problem and realizing how difficult it is to understand all the potential differences which might result in connection with these two proposals, I desire to point out briefly just what the main differences are which I believe would justify the committee in adopting the substitute. In the first place there has been much said about the application to international carriers. It has been said, and it is true that H. R. 9184 provides for subsidy separation for international transportation of air mail, exactly the same way that it covers domestic transportation of mail. The substitute, however, excludes from the subsidy separation compensation for transportation of mail internationally and provides for a study of that phase of the general problem and a report and some action by the first of July 1951.

The reason for that is that the bill H. R. 9184 will result in a subsidy war between governments which, in my opinion, will cost the United States millions of dollars.

Let me explain. The rates are set by the Universal Postal Union in convention. Our country is a party to that convention. Those rates are presently set at $2.86 per ton-mile. This has been established for a number of years. How does it apply? For instance, the Post Office Department pays that rate to Air France, for example, for carrying our mail to France. France pays TWA that same rate for carrying the mail from France to this country. Most of the foreign governments pay the same rate to their own carriers for carrying their own mail. It is considered to be a fair rate to be paid internationally and to their own carriers. But we do not pay our carriers the same rate, as the gentleman from California [Mr. HINSHAW] mentioned a moment ago. But if this bill, as reported by the committee, were to be adopted, it would be establishing the so-called fair cost and rigid standard method, where, obviously, as someone has said, the rates could very well be low to our own carriers, while at the same time we were paying the flag carriers a rate of $2.86 per ton-mile.

Now, what would be the result of that situation? It would mean that further subsidies would have to be paid. It would be likely that, in order to compete with the situation, foreign rates would be dropped and reduced, and further subsidies paid by foreign governments to their own carriers. Consequently, you get into a revolving subsidy war between governments, and it makes a very bad situation to have that.

In the first place, if a rate of $1.80 per ton-mile were fixed by the CAB under this bill, the Universal Postal Union would be sure to insist that the Universal Postal Union rate be reduced to something in the neighborhood of this figure. If this were done, it would cost the United States millions of dollars, because our carriers earn about $10,000 for the transportation of mail of other governments. Our Government pays about $2,000,000. Thus, if the Universal Postal Union rates were reduced, we would lose $2,000,000, to be offset by a gain of $700,000. The substitute provides that the CAB will make a study of this problem as it applies to the international groups, and come up with something definite in accordance with a policy that will meet the international situation that our international carriers must necessarily deal with. That is only right and fair.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARRIS. The other major difference is, someone has already said the committee bill would extend subsidy payments to all classes of air carriers. Not only to just a few but to hundreds and hundreds of them. I am glad that our acting chairman referred to the letter sent up under date of August 3, 1950, from CAB. CAB says in its very first objection that the committee bill should not have that provision in it. The substitute bill does not have it.

Another one, and a major one, is relative to the cost allocation provision and the new method of accounting. I would say to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILDAY], all of the airlines do come in and say they are for the substitute. The fact that this has come to a head has brought them together, but they do not want the committee bill, because it will say, "You have got to apply a rigid cost standard in separating the categories of service." Consequently, the board itself says, in its objection No. 3, that it would be an impossible task, and should not be imposed upon them; that they cannot do it. The substitute does not disturb that situation but leaves it just like it is. In other words, the seven objections of the Civil Aeronautics Board as you will find in this letter are met with this substitute bill I have offered. I believe it will come nearer to meeting the situation and bring to us the principle that this Congress obviously wants, a separation of subsidy and mail pay, and I trust the substitute will be adopted.

Mr. HESELTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the substitute.

First, because some of you may not have been here earlier when I first read this telegram I want to read it to you again.

The substitute is H. R. 9305. It was introduced by my colleague and the gentleman from New York [Mr. LEONARD W. HALL] on August 2. There were no hearings on this bill. It may be said later that there were no hearings on H. R. 9184. But there were hearings on the original bill which was introduced by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY]. That is the basic legislation upon which H. R. 9184 came before the committee; so there were extensive hearings on H. R. 9184, none on the substitute.

The telegram reads as follows:

> The Citizens Committee for the Hoover Report urges enactment at this session of H. R. 9184 to carry out the unanimous recommendation of the bipartisan Commission on Reorganization of the executive branch that subsidies be separated from mail compensation. Neither H. R. 9305 nor the various bills for further study would carry out the Hoover Commission's recommendation, but H. R. 9184, as reported, would do so. We urge prompt passage of H. R. 9184 without weakening amendments.
> National Chairman, Citizens Committee for the Hoover Report.

I should like to deal briefly with some phases of H. R. 9184 which have been referred to by my colleague the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY] in part, but certain points I think should be emphasized.

What does it do? In the first place, it omits the United States International Airlines on pages 1 and 2, lines 1 through 4, restores the word "need" as the test for making payment to airlines engaged in "foreign air transportation," a phrase defined by the Civil Aeronautics Act as meaning United States carriers operating between the United States and foreign countries. "Foreign air transportation" accounts for over $47,000,000 in the annual Post Office deficit.

Omitting our international airlines from the separation reform would mean throwing into the wastebasket one-half of this important Hoover Commission reform. It would also conflict with all recommendations on separation, which cover all carriers of air mail.

Such an exemption would also be discriminatory, in that it would leave some airlines receiving only compensatory mail pay without subsidy; whereas other airlines would be receiving mail pay under the old "need" system, which would include subsidy. By contrast, H. R. 2908 and H. R. 9184 separate the subsidies for all airlines carrying the mail.

Second. It limits subsidies to mail carriers, excluding from eligibility even to apply for subsidy 17 certificated airlines. It would mean that subsidies would still be associated with mail carriage. By contrast H. R. 9184 accomplishes a complete separation of subsidies from mail pay and makes all "certificated air carriers" eligible to apply.

The committee in its report has this to say:

> The Committee feels that with the complete separation of subsidy from air-mail pay made by the bill there is no logical basis for limiting the classes of air carriers eligible for subsidy to those holding mail certificates, particularly in view of the fact that subsidy determinations are to be made with respect to furthering not one national objective but three, that is, national defense, the commerce of the United States, as well as the postal service.

Third, the substitute omits the cost standard for post-office mail payments under which the Post Office Department shall not be required to pay the airlines more than the cost of service plus a fair return. This standard was strongly recommended by Secretary of Commerce Sawyer.

Fourth, the substitute omits cost allocation. Cost allocation is necessary to protect the Post Office, and it is the only way in which compensatory mail costs can be dependably separated from other costs. The cost-allocation system was outlined in the Hoover Commission task force report on regulatory commissions, and was specifically endorsed as being practicable by Secretary of Commerce Sawyer.

As has been pointed out, this substitute definitely postpones the effective date of separation by using the words "July 1, 1951, or as soon as practicable thereafter."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. HESELTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. HESELTON. Mr. Chairman, furthermore, the provisions relating to the transfer of funds permit the CAB to live off the Post Office budget indefinitely, without ever having to justify a separate appropriation for each subsidy, which the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. CANFIELD] so eloquently described to you as being absolutely necessary, if we are going to have a sound system of government.

Lastly, it provides for an indiscriminate use of funds by the use of the words "this Act" on page 5, line 15, in contrast with the term "this section" used in H. R. 9184. Any funds authorized by the House Interstate Committee for appropriation could be used not only for implementing studies but also for regular administrative expenses in connection with any of the mail-pay cases. The Appropriations Committee could feel properly that this is an attempt to bypass the regular CAB budget.

Mr. Chairman, I urge that the substitute be voted down so that we may return to consideration of the original bill which does have the support, as has been indicated, of everyone except a few airlines. This is an airline substitute.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HESELTON. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. JAVITS. The report, I see, says that this standard of cost has not been applied by the Government in recompensing the various services, including mail. What does the gentleman say about that? They say that is new.

Mr. HESELTON. It is new but I think it is necessary.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. HARRIS] which is in effect the bill introduced by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LEONARD W. HALL] on August 2 last. That bill will comply with the Hoover report just as effectively and far better, in my humble opinion, than will the bill of the committee.

Much has been made of the statement just read by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HESELTON] concerning the citizens' committee endorsing the bill, H. R. 9184. I do not think the citizens' committee is any more perfect than any other similar group. I would like to ask the Members of the House of Representatives whether they go along with all the recommendations of the Hoover Commission report? For example, does the House go along with the idea of consolidating all of the medical services into one great medical body—Army, Navy, Air Force, Public Health Service, and so on? No. I do not believe the House will go for that, and yet that is contained in the Hoover report. Not everything that they have reported seems to me to be right, although I go along with a very large and high proportion of it. The Citizens' Committee, as I believe it was explained by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY] is headed by the former chairman of the CAB, Mr. Landis. Is that correct, may I ask the gentleman?

Mr. KENNEDY. I said he had worked on some of these sections in the report.

Mr. HINSHAW. Yes; that is what I thought. Mr. Landis is a very estimable gentleman and not all of us have agreed with him in the past. He found himself in a position where it was necessary to resign his position as Chairman of the CAB, and another was appointed in his place.

I reiterate to you that this bill offered by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. HARRIS], satisfies in a far better way the Hoover Commission report than does the committee bill. I tried to explain a moment ago why it was necessary to eliminate the foreign carriage of mail from the separation of subsidy without further study. The gentleman from Arkansas explained very well indeed why we should not order an immediate separation of subsidy, if there is any, in the international carriage of mail. It is likely to cost an awful lot more money if we do that than it does at the present time. We carry most of the mail. Now let me tell you what happens to the money. The UPU rate for the international carriage of mail is $2.86 per ton-mile. When our carriers carry that mail out of France or England or some place else to the United States our Government is paid $2.86 per ton-mile by the foreign government. That amount of money paid to our Government is credited against the accounts of the airlines that carry the mail. At the same time we pay to our own carriers $2.35. Therefore there is a profit of 50 cents a ton-mile in that deal as it stands at present. But, if we go into this separation business and a rate war, then it is going to cost us some real money, and do not let anybody be fooled by that, because an international rate war on the carriage of mail can only hurt the United States, because we carry about 80 percent of the international mail. We are the ones that are going to get hurt. Let us not be fooled.

The gentleman from Arkansas is 100 percent correct in what he says. I realize that a lot of other people have studied this question and I do not presume that our committee knows all about it, but we ought to know more, and particularly some of us who have been engaged in that study for a long, long time. Therefore I suggest to you that this substitute offered by the gentleman from Arkansas is the proper bill at this time and I recommend it to you as a substitute for H. R. 9184.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. REES. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I know the members of this committee are anxious to pass the best bill they can. I believe we are all in favor of legislation to separate subsidies. I have failed to find anything in this bill or in the hearings that would inspire a rate war that has been mentioned. If I thought the passage of this legislation would inspire an international rate war, of course I would not support it.

I want to go along with the distinguished gentleman from Texas, who called attention to the need for supporting civil aviation, especially in times like these. I know this House is anxious to do that very thing, but let us not do it through the Post Office Department.

Mr. BECKWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BECKWORTH. I think it is very fair to assume that if one of the international carriers today is getting, we will say, $25,000,000 a year, of course that comes from the Federal Treasury, as we all know, in the way of a subsidy or compensatory pay but if it is decided that that same carrier should have $5,000,000 worth of air-mail pay, then what would occur, as I understand it, would be that the Government would give a subsidy, and you would call it a subsidy, of the other $20,000,000. So it all comes from the same source.

Mr. REES. I wholeheartedly endorse the splendid and effective statement made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILDAY]. We want to support civil aviation where needed in the war effort. If subsidies are required to do so then they should be paid.

The next point is this: There has been a great deal of discussion here to the effect that the method by which these rates are figured is extremely complicated. No one thus far, although maybe you will do it later on, has told us wherein the thing is complicated. If you look at subsection 2 on page 3, all it states is this:

> The rates determined and fixed under paragraph (1) of this subsection shall not exceed the necessary cost to the air carrier, under honest, economical, and efficient management, of the mail transportation services actually rendered or such services to be rendered (computed in accordance with the standards prescribed by the Civil Aeronautics Board pursuant to section 407 (d) (2)), plus a fair and reasonable return.

All I am asking is that if there is something complicated in that, something difficult to work out, I wish some Member familiar with this legislation who supports that view would tell us wherein it is complicated. I think a statement like this should be explained.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois, who has given this matter a great deal of study.

Mr. MASON. The explanation is that they would have to put in a cost-ascertainment program such as the Post Office has now, by which the income and the cost of carrying passengers, of carrying mail, of carrying freight, and of doing these other things would have to be kept separate. That would involve considerable change in their bookkeeping.

Mr. REES. It would make some change in the bookkeeping, but there certainly is nothing wrong with that proposal. Why should we not do that which the gentleman suggested, instead of just throwing the money in there in one lump sum? That is the question I am raising. I think the gentleman is right, we would have to do that sort of thing, but what is wrong with it, if there is anything wrong with it?

Mr. MASON. The thing in my mind that is wrong with it is that after it is done they must be allowed a cost-plus on top of that. That is right in the paragraph the gentleman was reading.

Mr. REES. I regret that I do not read the term "cost-plus" in this paragraph. I do not find it here. I think the gentleman has that in mind, but he does not find it in that paragraph (2).

Mr. MASON. It states, "plus a fair and reasonable return."

Mr. REES. That is right, but I do not see anything complicated about that.

Mr. MASON. The complication would be, What is a fair and reasonable return?

Mr. REES. Of course, that is a problem that has to be worked out now by the CAA. It seems to me that the paragraph I have quoted does set some general standards that should be taken into consideration in arriving at the amount that should be paid the airlines for their services. If additional payments or subsidies are required, they ought to be separated so that the Congress will have a chance to look at them. That is what I have in mind.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for five additional minutes, and to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I have asked for this time rather reluctantly, because I regret very much there has been any controversy over this rather important measure, or, rather, measures, because we now have a substitute bill before us which would provide for the separation of the cost of furnishing mail transportation service by airlines, both foreign and domestic, and the subsidies which have been paid to these domestic and foreign airlines primarily for the purpose of providing an air-transport system for use in time of war. There seems to be no division of opinion in the House itself as to the wisdom and necessity of dividing the funds paid for air-mail transportation between the actual cost of transportation, or a fair remuneration for the service of transportation, which is being rendered by the airlines, and the subsidies paid for other reasons.

Certainly every subsidy should stand on its own feet. The Hoover Commission in making a study of this particular problem, and the task force of the Commission in making a study and report thereon, expressed no objection to the payment of subsidies for military purposes. The only thing the Hoover Commission has recommended is that we divide, if you please, these airline payments so that the Congress and the American public may know that which is actually paid for the transportation of mail by air and that which is paid to subsidize the transport system for use in time of war or other national emergency.

Mr. BECKWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. BECKWORTH. Do you recommend as to the time when this should be done, to say put it off and off and off?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Certainly you should correct a bad situation as quickly as possible. Certainly there is no reason why this action should not be taken.

I want plainly to be very clear because I do not have the time available to discuss this matter in detail. But a vote for this substitute bill now before us will be a vote against about 50 percent or one-half of the Hoover Commission recommendation. It will mean that only 50 percent of the savings recommended by the Hoover Commission can be made. It will exempt entirely the foreign airlines. There is no reason in the world I know of why foreign air transportation should be exempted and domestic air transportation not exempted.

I know there has been discussion on the floor of the House as to the International Postal Convention agreements, and all of that. But I do feel the situation can be met within the framework of the recommendations of the Hoover Commission and within the framework of the so-called Heselton bill. It seems to me the logical way to proceed here is to take this original bill, and if there is any question as to whether it will work unfairly as far as the International Postal Convention regulations or agreements are concerned, to adopt any perfecting amendment which the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce may feel is necessary, but which will still carry out and put into effect the recommendations of the Hoover Commission.

I want to be very frank with my colleagues. I am not at all sure that this legislation before us can or will be passed upon by the Senate in this session of the Congress. Certainly I am hopeful that my colleagues here will not go on record as opposing at least half of the recommendations of the Hoover Commission in this instance, and destroy this particular attempt to clarify these laws and to bring about a better understanding, both in the Congress and throughout the Nation as to the cost of our Post Office Department, only to have no action taken on the bill at all, with the result that the Members of the House who vote for the substitute will be on record as opposing the Hoover Commission recommendations, and the reform which has been not only recommended to the Congress and the country by the Hoover Commission, but by the Secretary of Commerce, by the CAB, as I understand, by the Postmaster General, by the President, and almost everyone else in authority, and also by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce: I understand, by a vote of 17 to 2 in committee. I hope that in this great hysteria that has been sweeping us in the last week, that we will not lose our perspective and our balance entirely. I am suggesting to you that we vote down this particular substitute bill and take the time, if there is any need for amendment to the Heselton bill, as brought out by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to protect American rights under the international postal agreement to insert in the bill any amendments which will be in keeping with the recommendations of the Hoover Commission. I think it can be done. I think there is capacity within the great Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, of which I had the pleasure and the honor of being a member for a great many years, to bring in the necessary amendments. I understand that this whole question of the international postal agreements and the effect of this bill might have on the overseas air industry of this country came up after the committee had held its hearings. If that is so, then it is only proper and right that the committee have an opportunity, in conference or in any other way it chooses, to work out any needed amendments. I think it can be done, and I think it should be done. Certainly, we do not want to oppose the Hoover Commission recommendations as such. We do want to have a complete and full picture as to what is being paid for the transportation of mail by air, and what is subsidy. Certainly we are entitled to know that. I think the Congress wants to do it just that way.

Mr. BECKWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. BECKWORTH. The gentleman has made a fine contribution to the discussion, particularly the statement that some 50 percent of the recommendations of the Hoover Commission would be lost if the so-called substitute is agreed to.

I want to point out again also that we have a very analytical letter in regard to the so-called Heselton bill, pointing out some of the defects. I told the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HESELTON] at the time we passed his bill that I would favor some amendments, one of which would be to restrict it to the carriers that already have mail contracts. We would be hopelessly in the dark considering a bill on which no hearings had been held, with a letter here pointing out the defects inherent in the bill.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I thank the gentleman. I am hoping that we will vote down this substitute, and that time will be granted to reexamine the bill and to be certain that we not only put into effect the purpose and intent of the Hoover Commission recommendations, but that we do protect the proper interests of American air lines in connection with our international agreements.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN] has expired.

Mr. BECKWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, as I said a moment ago, the statement that has been made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN] who did much work as a member of the Hoover Commission, which took a great interest in this subject from the beginning, is a fine contribution to the debate. The big question that the House confronts right here is: Do we really mean to do the job or do we mean to call for additional delay?

In my opinion, the language in the bill is not so rigid as to prevent the Civil Aeronautics Board from having enough latitude in most respects to exercise its best judgment. I do not think that there is a doubt about that. The Civil Aeronautics Board, of course, objects to part of it. They pointed out very clearly—it is before you right now in the form of a letter which the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. O'HARA] received, and I certainly do think that letter is a fine contribution to this over-all problem. However, the fact that the letter mentions some seven objections does not mean that the objections are of the type which cannot be overcome. For example, it has been emphasized over and over that the question of the foreign airline being in this bill is one of the most significant and that it probably should not be in the bill. However, on October 24, 1950, the Civil Aeronautics Board prepared a report and submitted that report to the House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee. Here is what was said:

> We believe that the separation of subsidy payment from air-mail pay should also extend to foreign transportation.

This is the CAB talking.

> While it is realized that some additional problems will be encountered with respect to foreign transportation, the difficult thing, and to both domestic and foreign transportation is the allocation of joint costs to the several services that the carriers render. If it is felt that the accomplishment of the separation in the domestic field should come without further delay, it is difficult to see why the same reasons should not substantially hold for the foreign field.

In other words, they make their position clear on that.

A lot has been said about the question of the cost standard. I do not know when it became such a bad thing either in Government or in business to make the greatest effort possible to arrive at cost. In the case of the Mississippi River Fuel Corp. against Federal Power Commission, the court dwelt on that very same problem which faces such agencies as the Federal Power Commission. Here is what the court said:

> The regulated sales in this case, being the sales to utility companies for resale, are easily identified. The problem is to ascertain the costs incurred prerequisite to such sales, and so to be borne by those customers. This is a question of fact. Expenses (using that term in its broad sense to include not only operating expenses but depreciation and taxes) are facts.

I think that is quite a reasonable statement. Expenses are facts; they are not to be manufactured; they are facts, and that is exactly what the Civil Aeronautics Board in its undertaking to arrive at what the cost with reference to carrying the mail would be is attempting to find out. The Board will want to make the greatest effort possible to establish costs. I feel very sure this is true.

I want to say again that the committee has spent a good many hours on this. This is a question that has been before us in a number of ways for a long time. The Appropriations Committee has evidenced probably more interest in this problem than any other committee in or out of Congress. This committee has indicated it wishes to do something about this. Why? Because they do not want to be paying out money that is not easily identified.

Several members of the Appropriations Committee have talked to me about this problem. Some more than once. I know many of you have seen editorial after editorial about this matter. I feel we, the Members of this body, should make the best effort possible to bring out in the very clearest manner possible how this Federal money is being expended, in my opinion. To do less than this will be falling short of doing well a most important job.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. HARRIS].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Messrs. HARRIS and HINSHAW) there were—ayes 38, noes 87.

So the substitute was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

RATES FOR TRANSPORTATION OF MAIL AND SUBSIDY FOR ESSENTIAL AIRCRAFT OPERATION

SEC. 2. (a) Subsections (a), (b), and (c) of section 406 of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, as amended, are hereby amended to read as follows:

"RATES FOR TRANSPORTATION OF MAIL AND SUBSIDY FOR ESSENTIAL AIRCRAFT OPERATION

"Authority to fix compensatory rates

"SEC. 406. (a) (1) The Civil Aeronautics Board is empowered and directed, upon its own initiative or upon petition of the Postmaster General or an air carrier, to determine and fix from time to time, after notice and hearing, fair and reasonable rates of compensation for the transportation of mail by aircraft, the facilities used and useful therefor, and the services connected therewith (including the transportation of mail by an air carrier by other means than aircraft whenever such transportation is incidental to the transportation of mail by aircraft or is made necessary by conditions of emergency arising from aircraft operation), by each holder of a certificate authorizing the transportation of mail by aircraft, and to make such rates effective from such date, after the institution of the proceeding under this subsection, as it shall determine to be proper; to prescribe the method or methods, by aircraft-mile, pound-mile, weight, space, or any combination thereof, or otherwise, for ascertaining such rates of compensation; and to fix different rates for different air carriers or classes of air carriers, or different classes of service, or on the basis of any other reasonable classification of carriers, services, routes and route segments, or any combination thereof. The rates so determined and fixed shall be published by the Board and shall be paid by the Postmaster General from appropriations for the transportation of mail by aircraft.

"(2) The rates determined and fixed under paragraph (1) of this subsection shall not exceed the necessary cost to the air carrier, under honest, economical, and efficient management, of the mail-transportation services actually rendered, or such services to be rendered (computed in accordance with the standards prescribed by the Civil Aeronautics Board pursuant to section 407 (d) (2)), plus a fair and reasonable return.

"(3) The Board is authorized to issue orders, with or without hearing, prescribing temporary rates for the transportation of mail pending determination of final rates. Such temporary rates shall not be considered final for any period and shall be superseded by the final rates fixed for the periods during which the temporary rates were in effect.

"Recommendations as to rates

"(b) (1) Any petition by an air carrier for the fixing of rates under subsection (a) of this section shall include a statement of the rates recommended by the petition as being fair and reasonable.

"(2) The Postmaster General shall introduce as a part of the record in all proceedings under subsection (a) of this section (A) a statement of the rates recommended by him as being fair and reasonable, and (B) a comprehensive statement of all service to be required of the air carrier and such other information in his possession as he deems, or as may be deemed by the Board, to be material to the inquiry.

"(3) The burden of proof in any proceeding under subsection (a) of this section which is initiated by petition shall be with the petitioner.

"SUBSIDY FOR ESSENTIAL AIRCRAFT OPERATION

"(c) (1) The Board is empowered upon its own initiative, or upon the petition of a certificated air carrier, to make, after notice and hearing, subsidy payments to such air carrier in amounts determined by the Board to be essential (when taken together with all the other actual and potential revenues of the air carrier) to enable the air carrier under honest, economical, and efficient management to maintain and continue the development of air commerce to the extent and of the character and quality required for the national defense, the commerce of the United States, or the postal service. The Board is empowered to make subsidy payments for individual air carriers or classes of air carriers, or on the basis of any other reasonable classification of carriers, services, routes and route segments, or any combination thereof, and to prescribe the method or methods of such payments and duration of period for which applicable. The Board may make such subsidy payments effective from such date, after the institution of the proceeding under this subsection, as it shall determine to be proper. Payments under this subsection shall be made by the Board out of sums appropriated to the Board for such purpose.

"(2) Every petition for the fixing of a subsidy shall state and support in detail the amount the petitioner believes that he is entitled to under the subsidy provisions of this section and the carrier shall have the burden of establishing the amount of subsidy payment, if any, which is required for its operations under the standard established by this act. The fact that an air carrier has been granted a certificate of public convenience and necessity authorizing it to offer certain services shall not be deemed conclusive of the issue as to whether such services are sufficiently required in the interest of the national defense, the commerce of the United States, or the postal service, to justify the amount of subsidy that would be required to keep such services in operation."

(b) The amendment made by subsection (a) of this section shall apply only with respect to (1) the transportation of mail, or (2) operations in air commerce, occurring on or after July 1, 1951.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the first committee amendment.

"(3) The Board is authorized, with or without hearing but upon a showing by the air carrier or carriers concerned of essentiality and urgency, to make, with respect to the period beginning July 1, 1951, and ending March 31, 1952, or with respect to any part thereof, temporary subsidy payments pending the determination of final subsidy payments. Temporary subsidy payments so made shall not be considered final, and when final subsidy payments are determined, they shall cover any period with respect to which a temporary subsidy payment was made and shall supersede such temporary payment for such period."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota: Page 3, strike out subparagraph (2), lines 4 to 11, inclusive.

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, if some of you are interested in the views and criticisms of this bill which have been made by the CAB, you will find them in the minority report on this bill.

The provision proposed to be stricken would require the Board to fix mail compensation rates which would not in any case exceed the necessary cost of the service plus a fair and reasonable return. No one in the hearings before the House committee was able to cite any precedent for this rigid provision. It does not apply to the making of rates for the transportation of mail by rail or by steamship. The difficulty with imposing such a rigid standard results from the fact that 80 percent of air transport costs are joint costs which must be allocated on the basis of arbitrary formulas among the four classes of traffic. In addition, the transportation of mail carries with it extraordinary burdens upon the carrier which cannot be reflected in the carrier's cost-accounting system, as would be required by this provision. While it was asserted before the committee that the Interstate Commerce Commission bases railway mail compensation upon cost, it is clear that the Commission does not, but uses the various cost studies presented before it as guides. In the 1919 decision and in the 1928 decision, the Commission did not even make a finding as to the cost to the rail carriers of transporting the mail.

This provision is an unfair burden to impose upon carriers, because it limits them to compensation for only those costs which they can prove. In view of the high percentage of joint costs and the extreme difficulty, recognized by everyone, of allocating such costs satisfactorily, it is entirely likely that carriers would not be compensated for their full costs, nor would they be appropriately compensated for the special burdens imposed upon them for the transportation of mail. Room must be left for administrative judgment as indicated by the ICC in the 1928 decision, as follows, and I quote from this decision because I think this language will give you some indication of the amount of burden imposed in such cases:

In connection with the cost studies under any of the plans for dividing the train space, it should be borne in mind that in computations of this character, where the direct allocations are relatively small and the great bulk of expenses and investment are necessarily divided, subdivided, apportioned, and reapportioned, upon various theories and assumptions, the results cannot be accepted as an accurate ascertainment of the costs of service. At best, they are approximations, to be given such weight as seems proper in view of all the circumstances under which they have been obtained, and the theories underlying the assumptions and the various steps in the computations (Railway Mail Pay, 144 ICC 675, 691 (1928)).

I do hope sincerely the membership will support this amendment to strike this provision from the bill, because it is one of the things which affects an industry. All they want is the same fair treatment and the same consideration which our other carriers of mail receive and not a different and distinct one which nobody knows the meaning of except that it is extremely rigid and extremely harmful. After all, these air lines are entitled only to what is a fair rate both for carrying passengers and carrying mail or for performing any other services for the public or for the Government. But they certainly should not be hamstrung by a distinctly different rule than is applied to other carriers of mail.

Mr. HESELTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, in my judgment this amendment would defeat the purpose of your committee and would leave us exactly where we are, or possibly even in a worse condition. Secretary Sawyer testified before the committee. I want to read three paragraphs from his testimony:

The general thinking in the Department of Commerce on the question of separating subsidies from payments for transporting air mail was set forth in my letter of August 9 to the chairman of your committee and was reiterated in the transportation report which I subsequently prepared for the President. In substance this position, which has met the general approval of the administration, is that a separation of subsidy payments to air carriers and payments for carrying air mail should be made at the earliest possible moment. I think that the carriers should receive a fair compensation for carrying the mail. This means a rate sufficient to cover the actual cost of carrying the mail plus a fair return on that part of the investment devoted to mail service. Any Government payments to the carriers in excess of this amount should be labeled for what they are—subsidies.

If the present system of payments, which includes large elements of subsidy, is to be revised, it is clear that a new standard must be developed for the air-mail payments which are to be made exclusive of the separate subsidy payments. I am inclined to think that the fully distributed cost standard represents the most satisfactory one.

Then again he says:

The problem of cost finding in the field of air transportation is no more difficult than in other fields of transportation in which cost studies have been made for years. Elaborate cost studies have been made by the Interstate Commerce Commission in connection with both rail and motor carriers; and I suggest that the techniques developed in these studies may well serve as useful guides to the Board in connection with a study of the cost of carrying air mail, air passenger traffic, air freight, and air express.

Then, Mr. Chairman, I turn to a quotation from the Hoover Commission report, and the Task Force on Regulatory Commissions. That was in February of 1949. It is as follows:

We therefore recommend that the act (Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938) be amended so that the subsidy will be administered by the following method for the future:

1. The mail rates should no longer include any need or subsidy element but should be based on the service rendered. They should reflect a fair allocation of costs between mail, passenger, and freight services. Doubtless the allocation will start as an approximation but should lead to better techniques of cost analysis.

Then on April 24, 1950, the CAB itself sent to the chairman of the committee a memorandum, and the following is a quotation from it:

The Board is anxious to see wholly adequate allocation of costs among the classes of traffic put into effect as soon as possible.

The bill H. R. 9184 by this section, section 2, defines compensatory mail rates as necessary cost plus a fair and reasonable return. The subsidy is everything over and above that. Anyone who can justify—I am talking about the airlines themselves—before our Appropriations Committee, additional payments, call them subsidies, grants-in-aid, or any other word, in terms of an adequate system of commerce, in terms of proper carriage of the mail, and perhaps, most important, in terms of national defense, will be given to them. But if we take this section out, we might just as well rise and throw the bill in the ash can.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HESELTON] has expired.

Mr. BECKWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, this is a very important part of the bill. It is the part that relates very much to the question of the cost standard in arriving at what the mail rate should be. The CAB, rather emphatically, through some of its representatives, told us that unless that kind of standard is used is will be quite difficult to achieve a clear-cut separation between compensatory air-mail pay and subsidy. Certainly this is my understanding.

I repeat, Secretary Sawyer said earlier that a cost standard should be used. I read from his statement. It is the cost standard that a number of the officials of the CAB have indicated is very necessary if real separation is to be achieved.

I sincerely believe it would be a mistake to delete this from the bill. It is possible—and, as a matter of fact, I have an amendment that I have considered offering—it is possible that we may change it in such way that the provision as it appears in the bill would be less objectionable, if it is so desired, but I hope the committee will not delete this important provision from the bill.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BECKWORTH. I yield.

Mr. HALLECK. Is it the gentleman's intention to move that the Committee rise before this amendment is voted upon?

Mr. BECKWORTH. I meant to have the amendment voted on first.

Mr. HALLECK. I want to be heard, then, if that is the situation.

Mr. BECKWORTH. Mr. Chairman, it is my understanding the majority leader and the minority leader wish that the Committee do now rise.

I move, Mr. Chairman, that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and Mr. COOPER having assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. BONNER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 9184) to provide for the separation of subsidy from air-mail pay, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

EXTENSION OF RENT CONTROL

Mr. LYLE, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following resolution (H. Res. 876, Rept. No. 3150), which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9763) to amend the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended. That after general debate which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. McDONOUGH asked and was given permission to extend his remarks.

Mr. ROGERS of Florida asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include an article written by Mr. John S. Knight, editor and publisher of the Miami Herald, entitled "An Appraisal of Our Position Today."

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in four separate instances.

Mr. KEATING asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include extraneous matter.

Mr. McSWEENEY asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks.

Mr. O'SULLIVAN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in two separate instances and in each to include extraneous matter.

Mr. HARRIS asked and was given permission to revise and extend the remarks he made in the Committee of the Whole today and to include a telegram.

Mr. BOYKIN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include two editorials.

Mr. DONOHUE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include therein an article.

SPECIAL ORDER

Mr. HUGH D. SCOTT, JR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to transfer the special order I have for today over until tomorrow after disposition of matters on the Speaker's desk and at the conclusion of any special orders heretofore entered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

SPECIAL ORDER

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] is recognized for 25 minutes.

A REPORT ON SPAIN

Mr. HALE. Mr. Speaker, this autumn I spent in Spain the period from October 26 to November 14. While there I had an opportunity to talk to a good many people from General Franco's Foreign Minister, Señor Atajo, and our own able Chargé d'Affaires, Mr. Paul Culbertson, down to various people who might reasonably be denominated common men. I should like to record some of my impressions of this visit while they are still fresh.

On Friday, October 27, I had my interview with the Foreign Minister, which was at his request. What was principally on the Minister's mind seemed to be not so much whether Spain was going to get any money under the ECA program, as whether the Special Committee of the UN at Lake Success would report in favor of the rescission of the resolutions of 1946 under which member nations were to recall their Ambassadors and Ministers Plenipotentiary from Madrid and the Franco government was debarred from membership in ambassadorial agencies established by the UN. I was in Spain throughout the period of the discussions in the special committee at Lake Success and I found the keenest interest manifested among Spaniards everywhere about the outcome of this debate. When the final outcome both in the special committee and in the Assembly of the UN proved favorable to Spain it was evident that there was widespread satisfaction throughout the country.

Whatever the defects of the present Spanish Government, and I should certainly not wish to minimize them, in my opinion nothing can possibly be gained by humiliating the Spanish people or by subjecting either them or their Government to moral isolation. The Spanish people have many noble qualities. Their history abundantly shows that they have been capable of extraordinary achievements. In the fifteenth century they reconquered their own country from the Moors and drove the Moors back into Africa. This in itself was one of the most remarkable achievements in history. Christopher Columbus may not have been born a Spaniard but his voyages were Spanish enterprises. In the sixteenth century Spain with only a comparative handful of men conquered a good part of the Western Hemisphere. In some parts of the American Continent their conquests were from American aborigines, who had achieved a high degree of civilization. Witness the Aztecs, the Mayas, and the Incas. Spain retained all her American conquests for about three centuries. Spaniards can still, in my opinion, render a significant contribution to European civilization, particularly in connection with the struggle against international communism about which most people in Spain feel very deeply.

I am not at all unmindful of all that has been said and of all that can still be said against General Franco and against his regime. The Government of Spain is a dictatorial government with many of the faults of a dictatorial government. However, in an international competition for the most brutal dictatorship, General Franco would not, in my opinion, get better than tenth place.

There is no such repression and cruelty in Spain as are found in Russia and all the satellite countries. While the Spanish press is rigorously controlled and its references to Franco are mawkishly laudatory, the people of Spain talk freely in private. The Spaniard is very friendly with Americans and discusses Spanish affairs without apprehension. This is in great contrast to the Russian, who dares not even to be seen talking to a foreigner. Many people with whom I talked in Spain voiced their aversion to the Franco regime. In fact outside government circles I encountered no one who seemed deeply enamoured personally of El Caudillo, or the leader, to use the common Spanish term for Franco.

Nor did I encounter anyone in Spain who expressed the opinion that on an election by secret ballot with full adult suffrage, Franco or his party would be returned to power. Presumably General Franco does not think this himself or else for the sake of a clear popular mandate he would probably take the political risks involved. However, I encountered no trained or careful student of the Spanish scene who would undertake to say that the overthrow of the Franco government whether by violence, by death, or otherwise, would result in better government for Spain or greater happiness for the Spanish people. If the Franco government were to fall, there seem to be three things that might happen. The army might seize power and a new man on horseback might succeed Franco. Or else the Communist might be agile enough to seize the government even though they constitute an insignificant minority of the Spanish population. The third possibility, and by no means a remote one, is a new outbreak of civil war. Nearly everyone in Spain is afraid of this.

The recent civil war is credited with causing the death of around a million Spaniards, or about 4 percent of the total population. This would be equivalent to the death of 6,000,000 Americans. I believe I am correct in saying that no nation in either of the two world wars sustained comparable losses. In addition to the loss of life, such a civil war leaves, of course, a legacy of bitterness that it will take generations to down. We in this country have some idea of the consequences of fratricidal war.

While the Spanish republican movement enlisted in its ranks intellectuals and true liberals like Ortega and Ayala, it was early exploited by the Communists who very skillfully camouflaged themselves as democrats. Many people believe indeed that the Spanish revolutionary movement was exclusively a Moscow product. I am in no position to say precisely what the ultimate truth may be on the point. I think it is a fact, however, that the success of the Nationalists and Franco's elevation to power prevented a Communist government and regime in Spain. But for Franco's victory Spain would today in all likelihood be in the ranks of the Soviet satellite powers. The Spanish people would certainly be worse off than they are now and the country would be completely impermeable to American friendship instead of being, as at present, very well disposed to the United States. In fact, Franco and Chiang Kai-shek were probably the first two leaders in the world to grasp the significance of international communism. For being in this respect clear-headed they received the universal obloquy of fuzzy-minded people everywhere.

While I am undertaking no defense of the Franco administration, it seems fair to point out that many faults charged to Franco long antedate his regime. If his regime were to come to an end, these conditions would probably not be corrected. Take, for example, the question of religious toleration. Spokesman of the Franco regime claim for it the virtue of religious toleration. How just their claim is I do not know. I confess that as a Protestant I should not like to have to live and worship in Spain. But bear in mind that for 7 centuries the Mohammedan Moors were living in Spain, and for 7 centuries Moor and Christian were struggling for the mastery of the peninsula. After the expulsion of the Moors there was the cruel Spanish Inquisition which was not suppressed until 1812. In the thirties of the last century, an English consul at Málaga made something of a name for himself by building a cemetery in which Protestants could be buried. Prior to that time their bodies were tossed on the beaches to be eaten by birds or washed out to sea. So, religious intolerance, if it does exist, in Spain is nothing new.

If Spain has no long tradition of religious tolerance, neither has it much tradition of democratic institutions. The Spanish kings had things pretty much their own way. Some of them were more humane than others, and some like Philip II were notably religious men. But Peter the Cruel rivaled Ivan the Terrible. After the end of the Spanish monarchy there came Primo de Rivera who was a dictator in his day. While in the later years of the monarchy there was an elected Cortes or Parliament, the Spaniards never showed much talent for democracy. Indeed Latin countries generally lean toward dictatorships. If France has learned the lesson of civil rights and political freedom, it still has a hard time to achieve political restraint as known in this country. The wine of political freedom is still pretty heady north of the Pyrenees.

As it happens I carried in Spain a 1901 edition of Baedeker's Guide to Spain and Portugal which contains a warning to foreigners:

The stranger—

Baedeker says—

should avoid turning the conversation on serious matters and should above all refrain from expressing an opinion on religious or political questions.

I have since learned that this sentence appeared in the edition for 1889. This shows clearly that Spain's political and religious infirmities are not the product of the Franco regime. They are not even of recent origin.

Probably no man ever understood Spain or the Spanish mind better than the great Spanish artist Francisco Goya—1746–1828. In the Prado Gallery in Madrid there hangs a canvas of his entitled "The Panic or the Giant" in which frightened and struggling pygmies of men are shown beneath the dark and gigantic figure of a man in the background. I can only guess what was in Goya's mind when he filled this canvas but he seems to have been showing very graphically the difficulties of the Spaniard even in that epoch with popular government.

Notwithstanding what may be considered defects in the Spanish heritage, I believe it to be a fact that Spain hates communism more than most European countries. The Communists in the recent civil war committed nameless atrocities. And the Spaniard knows that if the Russians occupied Spain there would be looting and assassination without stint or limit. I feel positive that the Spaniards would resist Russian invasion. Whether they would go beyond the Pyrenees to fight Russia may be another question, but if the democracies could hold even Spain and Portugal in a general European debacle it would mean a good deal.

Franco is often blamed for making unsavory friends in the Spanish Civil War, but then we did not hesitate to ally ourselves with the Kremlin in order to defeat Hitler. In fact we went a long way out of our way to court Soviet friendship. The rule in cases of this kind was laid down by Winston Churchill when he said, "If Hitler invaded Hell, I would make at least a favorable reference to the Devil in the House of Commons."

Spain like Yugoslavia had a severe drought this summer. From this the country suffers acutely. Most of the Spanish electric generating facilities are hydro-electric. The consequence is that the country is severely short of electric power at the present time. Cities and towns are without power in the daylight hours and one must often read by candlelight in the evenings. I really do not understand how Spain manages its food refrigeration problem, because it has no natural ice industry. Of course rural electrification under these circumstances is out of the question.

Without professing to be an agricultural expert I will venture to say that Spain badly needs a great deal of work in soil conservation, reforestation, and irrigation. The educational standards of the country are far from satisfactory. There is still a great deal of illiteracy. It is to the credit of the Franco government that they have proceeded with the really magnificent construction project of Madrid University, largely destroyed in the civil war. This evidences a concern for public education, but I dare say that the greatest educational need of Spain is on the level of the little red school house, not of the university.

All these Spanish problems are, needless to say, the responsibility of the Spanish Government, whether it happens to be the Franco administration or some other administration. The United States cannot solve them and of course should not be expected to solve them. On the other hand if we do extend credits to Spain under the ECA, the credits could certainly be put to constructive use in what might well be self-liquidating projects. In my interview with the Foreign Minister I was careful to tell him that in my opinion the Truman Administration would not carry out the mandate of the Congress with respect to the credit. I am very pleased indeed that events have shown that in this opinion I was entirely mistaken.

What urgently needs to be done at the present time, however, is not to loan money to Spain but to do our utmost to repair the feeble and foolish gesture of the United Nations by ending the diplomatic blockade instituted against Spain in 1946, originally at the behest of the Soviet Union. The Soviet Union has been the principal enemy of Spain and the prime instigator of the policy of isolating it. Trotsky, the protagonist of world revolution, boasted 25 years ago that Spain would be the first western European nation to go Communist and France the next. The Soviet Union has always abetted bitter warfare against the Catholic Church, the destruction of churches and the execution of priests. In this country we have unwittingly swallowed a great deal of Soviet propaganda against Spain. Fortunately the United Nations has now reversed itself and there is no further obstacle to full diplomatic relations with Spain.

When I was in Spain I learned of President Truman's statement at a press conference that he had not given consideration to the question of an Ambassador to Spain and that he was going to take a good long time to think about it. This attitude on the part of the President is most unfortunate and has created a most regrettable impression in Spain. At the earliest possible moment we should send to Spain an Ambassador of the highest qualifications and not a "lame duck" or a Democratic politician in need of a job. The President could certainly do far worse than to promote to Ambassadorial rank our present able Chargé d'Affairs in Madrid who knows Spain thoroughly and is capable of treating it both sympathetically and critically. However, I am not trying to sponsor any particular appointment but simply emphasizing the great importance of full and immediate resumption of diplomatic relations. Spain should be brought back where she belongs into the orbit of western European culture. Twenty-eight million Spaniards should be made to feel that they have their share in the life of Western Europe and the future of Western Europe.

Just now much is being said and written about the importance of Spain as a possible ally in our struggle against communism. It is perfectly true that Spain's geographical position is most significant and Spanish ports and airports would be invaluable in event of a Russian invasion of Europe. From what little I saw of Europe in the few weeks that I was there I cannot say that the prospects of a united front against Russia seemed to me any too good. So if we wish to take a cold and calculating attitude about Spain we shall certainly find every cause for friendship with the country. From the standpoint of our own self-interest nothing can be stupider than our treatment of Spain. It is a part of the awful perversity which seems always to prompt us to caress our enemies and repel our friends. But quite apart from considerations of self-interest and mutual defense in the struggle against communism, Spain has a spiritual and cultural potentiality of which we cannot afford to lose sight. Evidence of friendship for the Spanish people would not in my opinion aggravate the defects of the Franco regime. On the contrary, it might tend to make Franco less defiant of American public opinion and even possibly more liberal in his administration of the Spanish Government. I do not like to be cynical, but I gravely fear that friendly Spain will continue to receive our rebuffs while we seek to placate Red China.

Mr. Speaker, in a recent edition of the New York Times there appeared a letter to the editor by Philip Marshall Brown, entitled "Restoring Spain's Status." It is an excellent letter. I ask unanimous consent to include it with my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. COOPER). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maine?

There was no objection.

(The letter is as follows:)

RESTORING SPAIN'S STATUS—EXCLUSION FROM AID AND FROM UN SAID TO SERVE SOVIET DESIGNS

To the EDITOR OF THE NEW YORK TIMES:

The feeble gesture of the United Nations in ending its futile diplomatic blockade of Spain, made originally at the behest of the Soviet Union, is a belated acknowledgment of an unjust affront to the dignity of a great people. They are entitled, however, to a more ample and honorable reparation. Never has any nation been subjected to such misrepresentation and abuse.

Now that prejudices and passions are abating somewhat in the face of the Communist menace it is becoming possible to evaluate this deplorable situation more clearly. I firmly believe that a dispassionate survey will clearly establish the basic facts.

The principal enemy of Spain and the prime instigator of the policy of isolating the people of Spain has been the Soviet Union. As Trotsky, the protagonist of world revolution, boasted 25 years ago, the Soviet Union confidently expected that Spain would be the first Western European nation to go Communist, and that France would be next. To accomplish its purpose it employed in Spain for the first time the thinly disguised subterfuge of the popular front, which eventually resulted in the control of the republican government by the Communists.

It organized the camouflaged Abraham Lincoln Brigade, having its headquarters in Washington in order to lure many American liberals to sacrifice their lives in the Spanish Civil War.

It abetted the bitter warfare against the Catholic church, resulting in the destruction of many churches and the execution of many priests. Because of the intervention of Hitler and Mussolini to thwart Communist designs in Spain the Soviet Union raised, and continues to raise, the false issue of fascism as the greatest enemy of democracy, though willing to enter an alliance with Hitler to fight England and France.

By skillful propaganda the Soviet Union was able to wreak its wrathful vengeance on Spain for the fiasco of its intervention on using the United Nations to punish the entire Spanish Nation. The exclusion of the people of Spain from participation in the Marshall plan and from aiding in the reconstruction and defense of Western Europe could only serve the sinister designs of the Soviet Union.

The United Nations was led to adopt the unjust principle of intervention in the internal politics of independent nations. It became a forum for fomenting discord rather than for mutual understanding and respect.

The mad attempt to dictate to the Spanish people the kind of government they should have could result only in what is termed in their language "contraproducente"—that is, it would constrain these proud, self-respecting people, irrespective of their private convictions, to rally to the support of the Franco dictatorship. They can hardly be expected to consider the action of the United Nations in lifting its diplomatic blockade as much more than a clumsy apology.

In the light of the strangely ignored facts of this situation the United Nations, now that it is resisting the designs of the Soviet Union, would seem called on to make complete amends to the people of Spain and recognize their rightful place in the great family of independent nations.

PHILIP MARSHALL BROWN.

SPECIAL ORDER

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. DAVIS] is recognized for 20 minutes.

(Mr. DAVIS of Georgia asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks and include certain newspaper articles.)

Mr. DAVIS of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, outstanding among the men who are in positions of leadership in America today is Erle Cocke, Jr., newly elected national commander of the American Legion.

He was a gallant soldier in World War II.

He had the unusual experience of being lined up for execution and shot down by a Nazi firing squad and being left for dead.

His last act before the Germans riddled him with lead was to knock down one of his executioners.

He spent 14 months in 27 different hospitals, undergoing 17 operations. He lost 90 pounds as a prisoner of war.

He has exhibited intense love of country in many ways. In 1945, while he was still hospitalized, he went on the road in a stretcher conducting a war-bond drive. This drive was so successful and so many bonds were sold through his efforts that the Treasury Department awarded him a Distinguished Service Certificate.

He had already been awarded the Silver Star, the Purple Heart with three clusters, Bronze Star with clusters, and French Croix de Guerre. Major General McAuliffe recommended the Distinguished Service Cross for him on the field of battle.

In recognition of his distinguished service to the country in war and in peace, he was elected this year, by unanimous ballot, to the highest position which the veterans of our country can bestow upon a buddy, national commander of the American Legion.

This is a position which also calls for bravery, courage, determination, tenacity, and good judgment. It is not a position to be filled by a namby-pamby or a politician, but is a position which calls for courageous leadership. Erle Cocke possesses all these necessary qualifications. He is demonstrating now, as he has demonstrated in the past, that he does possess them.

On yesterday, December 5, 1950, he spoke at a luncheon to the Public Relations Society of America, in New York City.

It is a timely speech.

It presents stark truth without embellishment.

It is a speech which the President, the Congress, and the people will do well to heed.

He is correct when he says that we need a reconstituted Department of State. It is an impossibility to whitewash our Department of State with its fumbling and bungling. I have urged since last January that the Secretary of State be replaced. We need desperately in that position at this tragic moment a leader behind whom all the American people, civilian and military, can wholeheartedly and enthusiastically rally.

Commander Cocke is correct when he urges the adoption of universal military training.

He knows that he probably is alive today only because of the basic military training which he received before going into combat on the battlefield, and that this training probably spelled the difference between life and death in his case.

He is correct in urging that we immediately go on a full war mobilization basis, that we use the A-bomb only for primary targets, that we speed up with urgent haste our civil defense, and that we brand Soviet Russia as world aggressor No. 1.

I have urged the adoption of universal military training for many years, even back in the days when its advocates were smeared with such terms as "warmonger," "un-Christian," and similar smear terms. The American Legion as a body has for years urged the adoption of universal military training legislation.

The American Legion at its convention in Los Angeles urged a reorganization of the State Department.

What calamity must befall us before this needed action will be taken?

As a part of my remarks I insert herewith Commander Cocke's speech delivered yesterday in New York City:

PUBLIC RELATIONS FOR FREEDOM

My fellow Americans, my purpose in accepting your most gracious invitation to speak at your luncheon here today is twofold and urgent. I am going to use your pulpit here as a sounding board to speak for America. For that reason, because time has assumed a dreadful preciousness for all good Americans, I am skipping the customary amenities and build-ups to speak straight from the shoulder.

First I want to shock you because you have creative minds, for the biggest job you have ever tackled, public relations for freedom.

I want to do both of these things for America, the land we all love.

As a combat veteran who has shed his own blood for this Nation I am going to speak frankly with brutal realism and use GI language. I know what it means to be captured by the enemy, to be shot, and to fight for my life. The plight of our fighting men in Korea is never out of my mind.

I say to you with all the emphasis at my command that our country is in a hell of a mess today.

We have reached today a complete bankruptcy of American statesmanship and American leadership.

Even as I am speaking to you now, there are unfolding two of the starkest, darkest, and most tragic dramas in all American history. We have not lost the cold war with communism. We are losing the shooting war.

In Korea we are facing a Dunkerque.

In Washington another Munich is in the making.

In the name of our gallant war dead in Korea, in the name of my own buddies who fell in World War II, and in the name of the thousands who gave their lives in World War I, I ask you: "How come we are in such a mess? Why is this possible?"

Defeat and appeasement are pushing us toward a national catastrophe.

Many of our people all over this Nation are asking urgently what they can do to arrest this headlong rush to disaster. They are trying hard to come up with constructive suggestions which range from immediate use of the A-bomb in Korea to putting ex-Japanese soldiers into the battle.

My fellow Americans, I say to you that the time for constructive suggestions has passed. We are too deeply enmeshed. If we are to save America today, we must start with an uproar of condemnation.

We need surgery at once before we can start any cure.

Our first job—our immediate job—is to destroy the type of fallacious thinking that has permeated our Government at the policy-making level in our foreign affairs and which has led us into our present perilous predicament.

To spell it out, we need a reconstituted Department of State. We must have a new Department of State from which has been amputated the appalling ineptness to cope with the world Communist menace. Whether that ineptness springs from failure to understand the real nature of communism or from actual sympathy with Kremlin-inspired economic and political doctrines make absolutely no difference. Both are equally dangerous to our survival as a free nation.

The monumental stupidity—to put it as kindly as I can—of our State Department is solely responsible for the appalling success of expanding world communism under Soviet Russia's direction. We cannot lead from strength as long as our foreign relations are in hands that are weak and in which we have lost all confidence. We are up against the starkest realists in the world in Joe Stalin and his Politburo gang. We can only fight them with equally practical realism and not with our heads in the clouds of impractical idealism.

Let us draw a realistic picture of our military and diplomatic situation today.

Our troops in Korea are being overrun. They are fighting in below-zero weather against Chinese Communists in an undeclared war. Our casualties will shock our people. The whole Korean front has fallen apart. Our Army is in retreat and where that retreat will stop no one at present can say. We might as well condition ourselves to eventual evacuation from Korea—if we can and if we have anything left to evacuate.

In this fateful moment of American history we turn in vain to our chief allies, Britain and France. They do not offer any troops to stay the Red tide. They do not even offer the stout words of brave men and nations. Their Prime Ministers rush into a huddle to work out a deal with Red China that will cost them nothing and might for a little longer extend their respective leases on Hong Kong and on Indochina. It involves American agreement to abandon both Korea and Formosa and to admit the celestial Communists to the United Nations and to a seat on the Security Council. In return we would get Soviet Russia's promise of peace, good only until the Kremlin decides on the next move of aggression. While all this British-French conniving is going on, their press ferociously attacks our General MacArthur.

British Prime Minister Clement Attlee flies to Washington. He rides Neville Chamberlain's old umbrella. At this very moment he is opening conversation in our Capital City to persuade the United States into a disastrous appeasement.

Attlee and Prime Minister Rene Pleven of France appear to have forgotten the humiliating lesson of the Munich appeasement. In that infamous deal, England and France sold millions of Czechoslovakians into Nazi slavery for what Chamberlain proudly proclaimed as "Peace in our time." It turned out to be an uneasy peace that didn't last even until the year ran out.

America, too, has had a bitter experience with appeasement. From Yalta until June 25, 1950, it has been just one humiliation after another for this country as our State Department feverishly worked at appeasing Soviet Russia at every turn.

The chief spokesman for our State Department on November 29 waved the appeasement wand again when he emphasized that America was always ready to negotiate. This brought Attlee aflying.

Since VJ-day Soviet Russia has piled up an infamous record of breaking 69 solemn treaties and pacts. She has cast 43 vetoes in the United Nations Councils. Her record of perfidy is 100 percent in keeping with the Communist axiom first laid down by Lenin that any means justifies the end of promoting communism. By her basic philosophy, her public pronouncements, and her shameful record, Soviet Russia has removed all basis of honor, integrity, and trust on which men of good will could find any area of understanding and agreement with her in which any confidence could be placed. Only stupid fools would accept Russian promises and pledges. They are absolutely worthless.

The American people will not stand for any further appeasement.

The proposal to abandon Korea and Formosa and to admit Red China into the United Nations is monstrous. The price of any questionable peace so obtained would be slavery for new millions now and the tearing down of bastions of freedom which can help to shield America itself from future onslaught. Appeasement means surrender. Surrender only leads to further surrender. Every surrender means the further weakening of the shrinking forces of freedom and the further strengthening of warlike communism.

The conference which Mr. Attlee is opening in Washington today with our top State Department officials can turn out to be the worst kind of diplomatic trap for our people to confirm the present Communist aggression and pave the way for more.

Once we abandon Korea and Formosa we are making sure that all of Asia will be lost to communism. This will complete the first stage of the timetable for world conquest as first laid down by Lenin himself. In 1923 Lenin laid down the basis for Soviet Russia's domination of the whole world. He said:

"In the last analysis, the outcome of the struggle (between capitalism and socialism) will be determined by the fact that Russia, China, and India constitute the overwhelming majority of the population of the globe. And it is precisely this majority of the population that during the past few years has been drawn into the struggle for its emancipation with extraordinary rapidity, so that in this respect there cannot be the slightest shadow of doubt what the final outcome of the world struggle will be. In this sense the final victory of socialism is fully and absolutely assured."

That fellow Lenin was quite a hand at peering into the future. Thus far he is doing better than Hitler did in his Mein Kampf.

Several years later Lenin made another prophecy, and we had better take it seriously. You can find it on page 172 of volume 10 of the Selected Works of Lenin.

"First we will take eastern Europe, the masses of Asia. Then we will encircle the United States, which will be the last bastion of capitalism. We will not have to attack it. It will fall like an overripe fruit into our hands. Let us prove to the bourgeoisie there is not, nor can there be, a sphere or field of work that cannot be won by the Communists."

Those are the words of Lenin. They are the handwriting on the wall that anybody but our State Department can read.

"First we will take eastern Europe." This is an accomplished fact.

Then the masses of Asia. China has become Red China. Now Korea is falling. Tibet is being invaded. Indochina is under attack. Burma is in deadly danger. India already is sympathetic to the Reds. Formosa is a marked island. Communist infiltration is spreading through the Philippines so badly that only a couple of weeks ago the national executive committee of the American Legion, after hearing a report from a key Legionnaire who flew from Manila to Indianapolis to make it, called on the United States Government to rush economic and military aid to the Filipinos immediately.

How did the Communists achieve the conquest of China?

That is the foul story of the failure of our State Department. It is an eloquent if tragic demonstration of its ineptness in even understanding the true nature of expanding world communism and the scope of the Red objectives.

The trouble with our recent China policy has been that it was not made by statesmen but by biased underlings who have a flair for the ideologies of impractical idealists who, in turn, are strongly influenced by the propagandists of the Kremlin. Five of these so-called young career diplomats were in China during 1944 and 1945 and virtually molded United States policy. Our problem at that time was to keep China in the war against Japan for the Pacific conflict was not yet over. China under Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek had already rendered us invaluable services by its resistance to the Japanese invaders. Chiang Kai-shek and his Nationalist armies had thereby effectively tied up more than 1,000,000 Japs in China.

The principal functions of our State Department officers in China were to maintain good relations with the Chinese and keep our Government informed of the situation there. From the Ambassador down to the lowest field officer, these representatives of ours were expected to work together as one team. This, however, was not the case. The five State Department representatives pursued a policy strictly of their own making.

They saw in the Chinese Communist rebellion a new force of democratic nationalism which had as its principal aim agrarian reform. They therefore insisted in their reports that the Chinese Communists were not real Communists but only agrarian reformers. They could not see that the Chinese Communists were in any way connected with or working under the direction of Russian communism, nor could they see why representatives of the Chinese Communist Party should be excluded from participation in the Chinese Nationalist Government on equal terms although the Communists insisted on their right to maintain an independent army of their own. They sent dispatches to our State Department praising the Communists and criticizing the Nationalists. These dispatches were permitted to flow into the State Department without passing through the hands of the ambassador. Therein lay the strength of the strongly biased young men who sought to influence our country's policy against our wartime ally, Nationalist China.

These tactics caused the resignation of Gen. Patrick J. Hurley as our Ambassador to China. His protests were ignored. The campaign to discredit the National Chinese Government continued. The State Department field officers found it easy to get abundant ammunition in a country that had been disorganized by 8 years of war. They made the utmost of their opportunity. They deliberately misrepresented the situation in China in such a way as to influence American policy to abandon the National Chinese Government and cut off all aid and funds to Chiang Kai-shek.

While we were cutting off all assistance to the Nationalists, Soviet Russia gave all-out aid to the Chinese Communists. The result was that all of China today is communistic. Lenin's 1923 prediction has become true. Grim and tragic developments in Korea demonstrate how completely wrong, biased and stupid the State Department's special field representatives in China were. Yet these men who have caused such tremendous harm to American security interests and to the world-wide cause of freedom are still powerful in the policy-making councils of our State Department. They are a menace to the safety of our Nation. That is why our first job must be to revamp our State Department.

Let us have no further illusions about this clash between democracy and communism. It is a collision between the United States of America and Soviet Russia. We are standing practically alone. The United Nations thus far is only a legalistic unit. It will fold up completely unless America marshalls her strength so she can be strong enough to stand up to the big word bully, Soviet Russia, and say "lay off," and be able to mean what it says.

American "Operation Survival" calls for quick, urgent action:

1. Shake up and revamp our State Department.

2. Go immediately on a full war mobilization basis.

3. Adopt universal military training for our youth to start building soundly for future defense needs so we can have adequate protection at a cost we can afford.

4. Use the A-bomb only for primary targets. There are no primary targets in China or Korea.

5. Speed up with urgent haste our civil defense.

6. Brand Soviet Russia as the world aggressor No. 1 and start proceedings for expelling her and her satellites from the United Nations.

These are "musts" if we are to stop the sickening slide into national disaster.

Instead of criticizing Gen. Douglas MacArthur, we should all get on our knees and thank God that we have a MacArthur. He has been the main bulwark against rampaging communism in the Far East. It is our patriotic duty to back up and support MacArthur loyally and vociferously. The time has come when we must quit appeasing and stop being apologetic for America. We need aggressive Americans. With God on our side, right will triumph over might. We have a righteous cause. It is freedom's cause. Our job is to know the end, to find the way and to encompass the strain and resist any temptation to slacken the pull and to make the individual and collective sacrifices that will give us the final victory. In these goals lies the end of bewilderment and of anxious waiting. I give you these as the public relations program for freedom. You men and women of this society have the creative minds and the vision. Take inspiration from our battered but unbowed troops in Korea to have the courage to do what is right, for in this trinity of American virtues lies our only salvation.

For this we fight—for God and country.

SENATE

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 7, 1950

(Legislative day of Monday, November 27, 1950)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

Rev. Howard Bryant, of Birmingham, Ala., Southern Baptist missionary to Chile, Antofagasta, Chile, South America, offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our Heavenly Father, we bow before Thee today recognizing that Thou art the Supreme Ruler of the Universe, the giver of all good things of life, even life itself. Thou hast been so mindful of us all the days of our lives; so often we have failed to own Thee as the author of all that is fine and beautiful in this world; for which we humbly ask forgiveness.

In these days of so much confusion and chaos, when our finite minds do not know which way to turn, we come to Thee and ask that Thou wilt bring quiet and peace to our souls and minds, that Thou wilt help us this day to walk according to Thy divine will.

Bless this, our Nation, O God, as it assumes the place of leadership Thou hast entrusted to it among the nations of this world to bring permanent peace.

Unite our hearts and strengthen our spirits for the tasks of this day, forgive us our every transgression and lead us in the path of righteousness. We ask all this reverently in the name of Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

RENEWAL OF PROGRAM OF VOCATIONAL REHABILITATION FOR DISABLED VETERANS

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, on Monday of this week, the President of the United States sent a communication to Congress requesting the early enactment of legislation extending the program of vocational rehabilitation for disabled veterans to the disabled veterans of the present Korean campaign.

This program of vocational rehabilitation, originally authorized by Public Law 16 of the Seventy-eighth Congress, has proved to be a program of utmost benefit to the disabled veterans of World War II, and the President is on sound ground in recommending its extension to those veterans who have become disabled while serving their country in the current campaign.

A number of my colleagues on both sides of the aisle have joined me in sponsoring a bill to carry out the objectives set forth in the President's communication. Therefore, on behalf of myself, the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY], the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY], the junior Senator from New York [Mr. LEHMAN], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. DONNELL], and the senior Senator from New York [Mr. IVES], I introduce for appropriate reference a bill, and hope it will be speedily approved during this session of Congress.

I ask unanimous consent that the bill, together with the President's communication be printed at this point in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be received and appropriately referred, and, without objection, the communication from the President and the bill will be printed in the RECORD. The Chair hears no objection.

The communication from the President is as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, December 4, 1950.

Hon. ALBEN W. BARKLEY,
Vice President of the United States,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. VICE PRESIDENT: I wish to recommend action in the present session to renew the program of vocational rehabilitation for disabled veterans, which was in effect during and after World War II. Since the Armed Forces are now beginning to discharge men disabled in the current hostilities, renewal of these benefits has become a matter of urgency, warranting action before the present Congress adjourns.

During the last war, as at the present time, the first men to be released by the Armed Forces were those who had been wounded or otherwise disabled and were no longer able to serve on active duty. These men were—and are—entitled under permanent law to full medical treatment and to monthly compensation varying with the degree of disability. In addition, disabled veterans of World War II were given help by the Government in gaining the qualifications needed for civilian employment. In some cases, this meant completion of professional training interrupted by the war. In other cases, old skills had to be brushed up, or new skills acquired.

This program was authorized by Public Law 16 of the Seventy-eighth Congress. Under this law, every disabled veteran who needed vocational rehabilitation in overcoming the handicap of his disability, was enabled to undertake any type of education or training for which he had aptitude and interest. The colleges and universities and the trade and vocational schools all cooperated in the program, and many special courses were established. Arrangements were also made in many cases for training on the farm and on the job.

While the disabled veterans were in training, their tuition was paid by the Government, and the Government financed their subsistence and school supplies.

In this way, thousands of disabled veterans were reequipped for jobs in civil life. In a great many cases, these men were able fully to overcome the loss of earning power which had resulted from their disability. In all, more than 550,000 disabled veterans have participated in the rehabilitation program authorized by Public Law 16.

However, the benefits of Public Law 16 are not available to men who began their military service after July 25, 1947. This means that most of the men disabled during the current campaign in Korea will not receive the kind of rehabilitation benefits which were extended to the disabled veterans of the last war unless new legislation is enacted. I hope that such legislation will receive favorable action by the Congress before the close of this session.

Disabled veterans will need rehabilitation assistance first of all. Later they may also need other kinds of help in readjusting to civilian status. The next Congress will have an opportunity to give full consideration to their longer-range needs and to those of the able-bodied men, now in service, who will eventually be returned to civil life. In planning to meet these needs it will, of course, be essential to relate any new benefits to the readjustment problems which will actually face our future veterans. It will be necessary to review with care the experience gained in the veterans' readjustment programs after World War II. This will take time.

Meanwhile, however, there is no reason for delay in meeting the immediate needs of the disabled servicemen who are now being released by the Armed Forces.

Very sincerely yours,

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

The bill (S. 4229) to extend to certain persons who served in the military, naval, or air service on or after June 25, 1950, the benefits of Public Law No. 16, Seventy-eighth Congress, as amended, introduced by Mr. THOMAS of Utah (for himself and other Senators), was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That service in the active military, naval, or air service of the United States on or after June 25, 1950, and prior to such date as shall thereafter be determined by Presidential proclamation or concurrent resolution of the Congress, shall afford basic entitlement to vocational rehabilitation under Public Law No. 16, Seventy-eighth Congress, as amended, needed to overcome the handicap of a disability incurred in or aggravated by such service for which compensation is payable under the provisions of subparagraph I (c), part II, Veterans Regulation No. 1 (a), as amended (or would be but for receipt of retirement pay), subject to the applicable provisions, conditions, and limitations of Public Law No. 16, Seventy-eighth Congress, as amended, except as follows:

(1) Vocational rehabilitation based on service as prescribed in this act may be afforded within 9 years after the aforesaid termination of the period beginning June 25, 1950.

(2) Notwithstanding the fact that vocational rehabilitation may have been previously afforded under Public Law No. 16, as amended, or that education or training may have been afforded under title II of the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944, as amended, additional vocational rehabilitation may be provided hereunder to the extent necessary by reason of a handicap due to disability incurred in or aggravated by service, as provided herein.

(3) Any person eligible for vocational rehabilitation under this act who, at the time of such service, was not a citizen of the United States, shall be afforded such benefit only while a resident of the United States.

USE OF ADDITIONAL SOUTH KOREANS TO RESIST AGGRESSION IN KOREA

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I have before me two brief communications. I think the Senate should have the information contained therein.

The first is addressed to me:

NEW YORK CITY, December 6, 1950.

Senator WILLIAM KNOWLAND,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR KNOWLAND: I have the honor to enclose herewith a cablegram I have received today from the president of the Republic of Korea. It is self-explanatory.

The urgent problem in Korea today is how to meet the challenge posed by the great manpower which the Chinese Communists have put on the battlefield. With all the superiority of the United Nations fire power, an increase in manpower of the Allied forces will definitely turn the tide now for victory. This, however, to be effective, must be actuated immediately.

Among the 20,000,000 people living in South Korea, there are several million people that could be had between the ages of 17 and 45. Of these, over 2,000,000 young people had military training in their schools and colleges during the last 2 years. Undoubtedly many of these are already in the armed forces in Korea, but many others are not yet in arms. These, together with the others in the age bracket of 17 and 45, will constitute a formidable number of soldiers to stand against the invader. This definitely can be done. When promptly armed, these people will be able to save all of us from the present difficulties.

The fighting qualities and abilities of the Korean people have been already well proved on the battlefield. They have deep faith and trust in the integrity and will of the United Nations in this crisis. They hate communism. They are determined to defend their soil to the last. There cannot be any better material with which to turn the present crisis into a firm victory.

I shall be glad to hear from you at your earliest convenience, and personally discuss this matter with you.

With highest esteem.

Yours sincerely,

B. C. LIMB,
Minister of Foreign Affairs,
Republic of Korea.

Attached to that letter was a cable from President Syngman Rhee to Mr. Limb, in which he said:

B. C. LIMB,
Minister of Foreign Affairs,
Republic of Korea,
New York City:

Your suggestion equip, arm million Koreans is earnest desire of our people. They want to fight Chinese hordes invading our land. Arms and ammunition needed. Can be ready in short time. Manpower without weapons is helpless. Immediate supply adequate weapons alone will safeguard peninsula. Let American Government know arming Koreans will save many American lives.

President SYNGMAN RHEE.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Are there any further routine matters to be presented in connection with the transaction of routine business? Apparently there are none.

EXTENSION OF RENT CONTROL

The Senate resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 207) to continue for a temporary period certain provisions of the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes of the time under my control to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH].

The VICE PRESIDENT. There are 92 minutes left. That time is equally divided between the proponents and opponents of the measure. The Senator from New Jersey is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. President, on the pending legislation, the Senate joint resolution to extend the rent control law, I wish to say that I am one of those who have had a great deal of difficulty in arriving at a conclusion, but having arrived at the conclusion to support the rent control extension measure, I wish for the RECORD and for the benefit of my colleagues to present a statement which I have prepared.

Mr. President, on June 12 of this year, just 13 days before the invasion of South Korea, I voted against S. 3181, providing for a 6 months' extension of Federal rent controls to December 31, 1950. I said at that time that "in my judgment, the scope of the rent-control problem has now been clearly reduced to the point where it can and should be handled exclusively by the States and local communities." I still feel that the position I took at that time was a sound one, although the majority of the Senators voting did not agree with me, and S. 3181 was passed by this body.

I do not think I need to dwell on the fact that conditions have radically changed since June 12, 1950. Certainly we are facing one of the gravest crises in our history and it is clear that we must mobilize our production and our Armed Forces with the greatest possible speed. We do not yet know the full extent of the controls over our economy that will be necessary to do the job that needs to be done. But we do know that a substantial proportion of our productive strength will have to be diverted to the mobilization program, and that stringent measures will have to be taken to prevent ruinous inflation.

I believe, Mr. President, that we should have an entirely new approach to the rent-control problem designed specifically to meet the present emergency. There has obviously been insufficient time fully to consider such an approach in the past few weeks, and we cannot realistically expect a practical solution to meet this problem until early next year.

Meanwhile there is at least a strong possibility that there will be a considerable shifting of war workers and Armed Forces personnel during the next few months, with inevitable concentrations in areas where rental housing will be insufficient to meet the expanded demand. This applies particularly to my own State of New Jersey.

We have a number of camps where Armed Forces will be congregating, and we have production areas, too, where the same thing will happen.

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I yield.

Mr. BRICKER. I should like to ask the Senator if any of those communities at the present time are under rent control.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I cannot answer the question because they are in different parts of the State, and it has not yet been anticipated what load will be put on them. That is what is troubling me in connection with this problem.

Mr. BRICKER. Does the Senator know whether any of those communities that might presently be under rent control have refused or have failed to ask for the six months' extension provided under the present law?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I do not know; and I do not know how the issue will be faced in view of the influx of people into the areas. That is what is troubling me.

Mr. BRICKER. The Senator does not know just what effect the two months' extension will have upon the local communities in his State?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. The statement I am now in course of making indicates my feeling upon that point; because recent State legislation is involved in the problem, and I am now going to discuss that briefly.

Mr. BRICKER. I thank the Senator.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. President, in cases where the local areas have not passed resolutions requesting continued control—perhaps because they could not foresee the influx of new residents subsequent to December 31—the upward pressure on rents would be strong and might well impede the war production and mobilization program.

At this point, Mr. President, I should like to correct a statement I made during the debate on this question yesterday. At that time I stated to the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. CAIN] that it was my understanding that the standby rent-control law in New Jersey would become operative on January 1, 1951, if the Federal rent-control law expired on December 31 of this year. Upon further investigation I find that this standby law in New Jersey will not become operative until July 1, 1951, regardless of the results of the pending measure, since this law provides that State controls shall take effect only upon the complete expiration of all Federal controls and since a number of communities in the State have passed resolutions requesting continued Federal controls until June 30, 1951.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I am glad to yield further time to the Senator from New Jersey.

At this time I should like to make a statement, and ask that it be made in my own time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from South Carolina for that purpose?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I am glad to yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. MAYBANK. The Senator from New Jersey asked me this morning what would be done about the so-called Cain amendment. I told the Senator that the United States Conference of Mayors has taken up that matter with me. I told the Senator further that unless it was necessary to make some changes in the amendment, I, as chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency and on behalf of the proponents of the legislation, would accept the amendment. I wish to tell the Senator that the committee staff have studied the amendment, and state that it is in keeping with the letter received from the conference of mayors. Therefore, so far as I am concerned, as chairman of the committee, it is my intention to accept the Cain amendment.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I am glad to have that statement from the Senator from South Carolina. I had understood that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington was going to be accepted. I think it is a most important clarifying amendment.

Mr. MAYBANK. I wish the Senator to know my position at this time.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I thank the Senator from South Carolina.

Let me emphasize, Mr. President, that I am impressed with many of the arguments of my colleagues who are opposing the extension of Federal controls. I believe they have correctly pointed out serious inequities in our present rent-control program. I agree with them that we must have a completely redesigned approach to fit the emergency conditions that are facing us and to coordinate rent controls with whatever controls may be found to be necessary over wages and prices.

Until such a new approach can be developed, however, I do not think we can afford to take the risk of leaving rents uncontrolled in many areas—and that is the case in my State—where a sudden influx of war workers or Armed Forces personnel may cause rents to rise sharply. For this reason I believe it is in the public interest to extend Federal rent controls for 2 months as provided for in Senate Joint Resolution 207, and I shall support this measure.

I have just been advised—and this may be helpful to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER], who asked me a question a moment ago—that the situation in New Jersey is as follows: 113 municipalities have voted to extend Federal control; 366 municipalities have taken no action, and therefore would be without controls if the Federal law expires; 164 of these have populations of 1,000 or more; 88 municipalities have definitely been decontrolled; 567 is the total number of municipalities in New Jersey. We may note, therefore, that 65 percent of the New Jersey municipalities have thus far taken no action; and if they take no action by December 31, they will be without rent controls after that date. Many of those municipalities have no way of knowing when the emergency may hit them.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Minnesota [Mr. THYE].

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, before the present critical international situation developed, with the probable need of emergency economic controls, my conviction was that the Federal decontrol of rents as provided in the existing law adequately met the situation, especially since it permits local governments to act for continuation of Federal rent control, in areas where needed, for 6 months of next year.

The national situation has changed to such an extent, however, that I believe it would be wiser at this time to continue the present Federal rent-control provisions for 60 days, to allow for a further survey of the problem.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me, in my time?

Mr. THYE. I am glad to yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. I wish to commend the Senator's advocacy of a further study. The reason why the 60-day extension proposal is before us is that I do not believe that at this short session of Congress we could write a new rent-control bill. I agree with Senators on both sides that there should be a new rent-control bill, based on the defense situation and the needs of war workers. However, I do not think that at this short session we have time to write such a bill.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, may I say to the able chairman of the committee that is the one reason why I recognize the need for the enactment of this measure, namely, to permit us to hold on to what we have, and during that time to take another look at the question.

We must consider the effect of the diversion into defense needs of materials which would otherwise go for home building, and the relationship of rent control to other legislation intended to curb inflation and provide for the economic strengthening of the country in the present crisis. Leaving the rent-control law unchanged until we have given these matters further consideration would also be reassuring to the young family men called back into the service and to the fighting men at the front who would worry about the status of their families living in rented quarters.

If Congress decides that further rent-control legislation is necessary beyond the 60-day extension period, Congress must then fairly recognize the increased cost of maintenance of property and other problems of those owning rental property, and provide deserved adjustments to which property owners are entitled.

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, I yield 10 minutes to my colleague, the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT].

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, what puzzles me is the calm assumption that we have any right to regulate rents. Rents are the affair of the local communities and the States. There is no authority on the part of the Federal Government to regulate rents simply because we think someone is overcharging someone else in a community. That situation does not give the Federal Government the right to fix the rents in that community.

There is only one justification for Federal control of rents, and that is war. It is only under the war power of the Constitution that the Federal Government has any right whatever to regulate rents.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. MAYBANK. However, let me say that I believe that we are at war; I believe we are in war today. That is why I voted to report the joint resolution from the committee.

I may be mistaken, but I thoroughly agree with the Senator from Ohio that the control of rents is a local matter. The extension here proposed would simply let it remain for an additional 2 months as a local matter.

I think what the Senator said the other day about writing a new bill is eminently correct. But I do not think we have time to do so at this short session.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, upon what war is this rent-control measure based? It is based on the last war, which began 9 years ago, not on this war.

Last year the Congress decided that war was over and that therefore the rent-control law should expire. However, now it is proposed that we say, "No; we must continue this law in various communities, even though the governing authorities in those communities have decided that they do not want to continue this particular rent control."

In other words, Mr. President, we are not only assuming Federal jurisdiction, but we are saying that we do not care what the local communities want. We are saying that, regardless of what they want, we are going to impose rent controls on communities whose governing authorities have shown clearly that they do not want rent controls.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. I should like to call the attention of the distinguished Senator to the fact that, under this measure, any community which wishes to decontrol during the 2 months' period can do so. This is a municipal-control measure. We accept the amendment submitted by the Senator from Washington [Mr. CAIN]. I am hopeful that communities into which families do not move because of the present war situation or emergency situation will decontrol.

The Senator from Ohio says this measure is a Second World War measure. I admit that, and I admit that we should write a new law, because in the next few months the shifting of families and populations because of the present war will be far greater than that which occurred in the United States during the last war. We should write a new law.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, not only is this measure a Second World War measure but it is shot through with exceptions.

The main purpose of the former law was to control inflation; but this measure is no longer an anti-inflation measure. More than half the dwelling units in the United States are decontrolled today. This measure is shot through with exceptions of so many different kinds that it has become purely a discriminatory measure against a limited number of property owners who are still having to base their rents primarily on conditions which existed 8, 9, or 10 years ago.

As a measure of the last war, the joint resolution should be entirely out. As a measure of the new war the joint resolution does not even purport to be such a thing. It does not provide for a continuation of any general controls. It simply provides for continuing a few of the controls of the last war in the case of a limited number of dwellings as a means of holding on to the power to control rents. Mr. Woods and his administration have not wanted to give up that power at any time. Last year they fought against discontinuing it.

After thorough consideration, we in the Senate decided that the Second World War rent controls should come to an end. The condition existing at the time when we made that decision exists just as surely today, and the decision we reached at that time is just as sound today as it was when we passed the bill only a few months ago under the able leadership of the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. I appreciate what the Senator from Ohio has said about me, and I wish to say that I really intended and hoped the last bill would be the end of rent control. However, 2 days after the President signed that bill, what was called the police action in Korea began. I never have called it a police action; I have called it a war, and today we are in a war.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, the fact is that we have passed a bill authorizing the President to say that the new war has reached a point where inflation is a danger and that controls should be imposed. However, the President has not seen fit to do so; in his opinion, we have not reached the point where price controls and wage controls are necessary. If they are not necessary, then rent controls are not necessary, because they are a part of the entire control picture.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. I thoroughly agree with the distinguished Senator from Ohio that in this country we have reached the point where a national emergency should be declared and where something more than rent control should be provided. Inasmuch as the Senate has confirmed the nomination of the Price Administrator, as it did last night, and has confirmed the nomination of Mr. Valentine, the Economic Stabilizer, as it did the day before, I am hopeful that something will be done.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, the way to approach rent control at this time is to wipe out what we have done, wipe out the inequities that have developed for years in this entire picture, until it has become simply a case of discrimination; and then let us begin from the beginning.

After all, we are writing an excess-profits-tax bill now, and that is just as complicated as any rent-control measure could be.

If Senators wish to have a second rent-control bill drawn up, there are many changes which should be made, in my opinion.

I see no advantage whatever in continuing on the last war basis, for 2 months more, and against the wishes of local communities, rent controls on a limited number of dwellings, about one-fifth of the total number of dwellings in the United States.

If we write a new rent-control bill, we should write a bill which will be as equitable and as much in accord with the situation as is possible. That is what we should do if we are going to have rent controls.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I thoroughly agree with the Senator from Ohio that the time is growing near when a new rent-control bill, based on the defense situation in this country, should be drawn up. However, I do not think we can do that now, in the limited number of days available to us during this short session, because such a bill would have to be passed by both Houses of Congress, and then go to conference.

All during the last war I served on the Banking and Currency Committee with the distinguished Senator from Ohio. I honestly believe that, as a stop-gap measure, what we should do is to pass the pending measure providing for a 60-day extension.

The Senator says we are going to force cities to continue rent control. Mr. President, any city can decontrol itself if it wishes to do so. I am going to accept the amendment of the Senator from Washington [Mr. CAIN], and I am hopeful that the cities that are not involved in the war effort and do not need rent control will decontrol themselves. No one wants controls where they are unnecessary. But thousands and thousands of people who are engaged in war work and thousands and thousands of families, in my judgment, are going to move before we can pass a new rent-control measure. I want the record to show this, because I thoroughly agreed with the thoughts expressed by the Senator from Ohio some months ago. But let us remember that our reason for not including rent control in the over-all control bill of 1950 was that we had a rent-control law on the statute books, and we did not want to clutter up the production-control bill with other legislation.

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, if no other Senator desires me to yield for a speech on the pending measure, I yield 3 minutes to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. KEM].

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri is recognized for 3 minutes.

CONFERENCES BETWEEN THE PRESIDENT AND PRIME MINISTER ATTLEE

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution (S. Res. 371) requesting the President to make a full report to the Senate of his discussions with the Prime Minister of Great Britain be referred to the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, and that the committee be requested to report the resolution back not later than next Tuesday.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I have no objection to a reference of the resolution to the Committee on Foreign Relations. But I shall object, if there is coupled with the request the idea that the Senate is directing the committee to report at some particular time. I think it is a reflection upon the committee. It is a denial of proper consideration. It is a proposal to refer something to the committee, and then to take action on it before the committee has ever considered it. Therefore, if the request is conditioned upon its being reported back on next Tuesday, I shall object, and I do object.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, will the Senator from Texas withhold his objection for a moment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas withhold his objection temporarily?

Mr. CONNALLY. I withhold it temporarily.

Mr. KEM. I should like to say it seems to me, in view of the time element involved in the resolution, that the resolution should be reported promptly to the Senate. I anticipate that no hearings will be necessary. It involves merely a question of judgment as to whether the President should be requested to make the report, and whether he should make any agreements with a foreign nation except in the form of a treaty which will be subject to confirmation by the Senate. I refer to important agreements affecting the course of action of the Nation.

It seems to me it is incumbent upon the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations to report the resolution promptly, either favorably or unfavorably. There is, I take it, nothing unusual in that request or direction, if you please. I recall that a few days ago the Special Senate Committee To Investigate Organized Crime in Interstate Commerce offered a resolution, which was referred to the Judiciary Committee with a request that it be reported within a certain time. The same question, the same element of time which was involved there is involved here, and I hope the Senator from Texas will not insist upon the objection.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I assume that the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations knows what it ought to do as well as does the Senator from Missouri. The Senator from Missouri says he feels that the committee ought to do so and so. I submit that is a matter for the decision of the committee. The Senator will have recourse to whatever action he may wish to take, in any event, at any time.

The Senator from Missouri is a lawyer, and a distinguished one. He knows that Mr. Attlee and the President can make no agreements which are binding upon this country unless they are ratified in the form of a treaty. I may say further that already, through the press and otherwise, every detail of the conference between the President and the Prime Minister has been given to the public. A great many Senators on the other side of the aisle have been present at some of the conferences. I shall have to object to the request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is heard.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, in reply to the distinguished Senator from Texas, may I say that the purpose of the resolution is to prevent another Yalta or Potsdam agreement.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I object. I call for the regular order. If we are going to have a Yalta speech or a Potsdam speech and a Missouri speech, I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is heard to the request; and, inasmuch as the request is in the form of a single request, the objection presumably lies to the entire request, which included a request that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations; where it would appropriately go.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, I see nothing to be gained whatever by referring the resolution to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, if there is not some understanding as to what is going to be done with it when it gets to the committee. I think the attitude of the chairman of the committee on the matter is apparent, and I do not care about making the request. Under the circumstances, I ask that the resolution lie on the table.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the resolution is before the Senate; some disposition must be made of it, and I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state the inquiry.

Mr. CONNALLY. Will the resolution not go automatically to the Foreign Relations Committee?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Not so long as it lies on the table. It would be in order to move, at an appropriate time, that it be referred to the committee. It does not require unanimous consent to send a resolution or a bill to a committee. The Chair can refer a resolution or a bill to an appropriate committee, but in this case the resolution was offered and was ordered to lie on the table, where it will lie until taken from the table. In the absence of a unanimous-consent agreement, that would have to be done by motion.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the action and attitude of the Senator from Missouri are most unusual and disturbing to me. The Senator says it would be of no use to send the resolution to the Foreign Relations Committee, unless he has assurance as to what the Foreign Relations Committee will do with it. If such a rule were in effect, there would be no use in having committees and no use in having committees consider measures.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair would advise Senators that this is all out of order. The Senator from Missouri was yielded 3 minutes, which time has expired.

Mr. CONNALLY. What is the situation now?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution is on the table.

EXTENSION OF RENT CONTROL

The Senate resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 207) to continue for a temporary period certain provisions of the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended.

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, I yield 10 minutes to the Senator from Vermont.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Vermont is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, I yielded 10 minutes to the Senator from Vermont.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Vermont is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. FLANDERS. I shall compromise, Mr. President, and make it 7½ minutes. I wish to register my objections to the extension of rent control. In the first place, the Congress, last June, intended that rent control should end at the time specified, namely, December 31, 1950, unless and except as it might be continued in response to the desires of States, municipalities, or other local government units. Nothing has happened since that time, in my judgment, which warrants a further extension. The conditions which we face or may face are new, and it is extremely important that they be studied as new conditions, to the end that really new legislation may be drafted to meet the new conditions.

Every Senator receives, or should receive the publication, The Economic Indicators, a copy of which I hold in my hand, which is prepared for the Joint Committee on the Economic Report by the Council of Economic Advisers. It is sent to each one of us. On page 3 of this report, of which I have in my hand the November issue, that being the latest issue, there appears the regular graph of consumer prices, issued by the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Department of Labor. The graph indicates an astonishing situation. It shows what has happened to one of the prime elements in the cost of living, an element which the Government has maintained and extended and accentuated and inflated. I refer to the item of food. Another element in the cost of living, namely, rent, the Government has restrained, has sat upon, has stepped upon, and has controlled adversely. One cannot but wonder as to the grounds upon which this is done. Can it be that the landlords, large and small—and by far the most of them are small—are unpatriotic, rapacious, avaricious, and present every undesirable aspect which a human being can show? It would seem to me as though it is possibly only on that basis to have held down for so long and so severely this one element in the cost of living, while the Government at the same time has deliberately and successfully increased the cost of living in respect to the element of food.

There seems to me to be no justice in the situation, and, if the injustice which I feel exists is to be extended into a period when rent control may again become necessary, to an extent which does not seem now to be indicated, it will then be almost impossible to relegislate in respect to the subject in a way which will not continue the old injustices.

I have prepared an amendment, lettered A, dated December 6, 1950, which I shall present after 2 o'clock, and on which I shall at that time speak briefly. The amendment proposes that if the joint resolution is to be passed, and if rent control is to be continued for a temporary period, a new basis must be set up, recognizing comparable housing accommodations not presently under control in the areas for which the control of rents is continued. Only by starting out again can we establish any justice, equity, or proper relation of this cost to the other costs which make up the cost of living.

As I say, Mr. President, at the proper time, after 2 o'clock, I shall present the amendment and speak in favor of it. I hope it may be accepted. If it is not accepted, I shall vote against the joint resolution as a deliberate extension of Government-generated injustices which are completely inexcusable.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I do not know of any Senator on our side who wishes to speak at this time.

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, there will be another speaker in a little while. In the meantime I yield myself 5 minutes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, so that the record may be complete and the facts brought to the attention of the Senate, I wish to refer to a few pertinent matters. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS] has very clearly demonstrated that the pending measure would perpetuate very patent inequities upon a large segment of American communities which do not desire a continuance of Federal rent control.

Let me say first of all that the pending measure would extend only for 2 months the present termination date of the law which was enacted some 6 months ago. During the past 6 months local communities have had an opportunity to survey the situation, to anticipate their needs, and to express their desires.

The distinguished Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] stated a moment ago that many communities in his State could not know what the situation would be in 6 months. That is possibly true, but it is their responsibility to determine such facts. I believe in local self-government. I believe in cities doing those things which they can do better than States can do them. I believe in States doing those things which they can do better than the Federal Government can do them. Rent control is one field in which local governing bodies know more about local conditions than can be known by the Federal Government in Washington.

Mr. President, I have tried to understand the actuating force and the reason for the proposed extension of rent control, because an extension of rent control would amount to an imposition of Federal power on local communities. It would amount to Congress saying to such communities which have not expressed a desire to continue rent control, "You are going to continue it anyway, regardless of whether your city council wants to continue it, and we will impose it on you."

I hold in my hand a copy of Capital Comment, dated December 2, 1950. It is circulated by Mr. William M. Boyle, Jr., the chairman of the Democratic National Committee. With some of the statements contained in this document I thoroughly agree. With other statements I do not agree, because there are many misstatements of fact contained in the document. I assume the document was sent to members of the majority party because it is addressed, "Dear Fellow Democrat."

In this issue of Capital Comment, Mr. Boyle quotes President Truman as saying:

> We must look into the situation around reactivated military camps and installations so that servicemen and their families can be given necessary protection against rent gouging.

Mr. President, I agree thoroughly with that statement. However, the proposed measure would not do anything of the kind. It would perpetuate Federal power over local problems without relation to military camps or war industries.

He quotes further:

> We must consider the relation of rent control to the price and wage aspects of our stabilization program.

With that statement I agree. The distinguished Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS] has clearly shown that at the present time no consideration is being given to that relationship. Instead we have a distortion of the relationship, and it would be complicated, accentuated, and made more desperate by the continuance of the present rent-control law for another 2 months.

Taking 100 as a base, in the period from 1921 to 1938 wages have gone up 239.6 percent; household furnishings, 181.4 percent; food, 172.5 percent; clothing, 166.5 percent; rents, including the period before Federal control, went up 96.9 percent.

Therefore, rent control has held down a segment of our society which is composed of people who own property. It is composed of people who have tried to take care of their old age, and who have tried to provide their own social security. They do not desire to become wards of their Government. They want to take care of themselves. As a result, we have seen a loss of 2,000,000 rental units during the life of the rent-control law.

I wish to emphasize also that the rent-control law does not bear too heavily or adversely upon the owners of large apartment houses. The large owner has accountants and lawyers, and he has contacts and ways and means by which he can get his rents increased. A great proportion of the increases have been granted to such commercial rental units. The fact is that the percentage of rental housing in our country in single-family houses is 47.6 percent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from Ohio has expired.

Mr. BRICKER. I yield myself an additional 5 minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio is recognized for an additional 5 minutes.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. BRICKER. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I should like to insert in the RECORD, as particularly apropos of the subject being discussed by the very able Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER], an article entitled "Federal Bureau Overrides City Council," written by Morris D. Ervin, and published in a recent issue of the Los Angeles Times-Star.

The article begins with:

> What happens to local self-government when it finds itself in the toils of a Federal bureau in Washington is well illustrated by Los Angeles' months-old efforts to free itself of federally imposed rent controls. To date it has got exactly nowhere.

The article is exceedingly illuminating and interesting, and I ask unanimous consent that it be inserted in the RECORD at this point as part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the article war ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FEDERAL BUREAU OVERRIDES CITY COUNCIL—FOR 4 MONTHS IT HAS REFUSED TO DO JUSTICE TO LOS ANGELES

(By Morris D. Ervin)

WASHINGTON, November 30.—What happens to local self-government when it finds itself in the toils of a Federal bureau in Washington is well illustrated by Los Angeles' months-old efforts to free itself of federally imposed rent controls. To date it has got exactly nowhere.

The Los Angeles story starts on July 28 of this year.

Prior to that, in June, when Congress extended the wartime rent-control law, it amended it to read as follows:

"The Housing Expediter shall terminate the provisions of this title in an incorporated city, town, village, or in the unincorporated area of any county upon receipt of a resolution of its governing body, adopted for that purpose in accordance with applicable local law and based upon a finding by such governing body reached as a result of a public hearing held after 10 days' notice, that there no longer exists such a shortage of rental housing accommodations as to require rent control."

SHALL TERMINATE

Note that this law says that the Housing Expediter, that is Tighe E. Woods, shall terminate rent control under the conditions specified.

On July 28 the Los Angeles City Council, after having given the specified 10 days' notice, held a public hearing. After the hearing, the council, by a vote of 10 to 4, passed a resolution in accordance with the law and sent it to Mr. Woods. The latter did nothing immediately, but on August 14 he appeared, uninvited, before the Los Angeles council and argued with the council that it should rescind its former action. This the council refused to do, after listening to Mr. Woods, and by a vote of 10 to 5 reaffirmed its previous stand.

Following this Woods said he would sign the decontrol order immediately upon his return to Washington. But on the same day local lawyers in Los Angeles, retained by the CIO, appeared after court hours in the chambers of Federal District Judge James Kirkland and obtained a temporary stay, ordering Woods not to sign the decontrol order. At the same time a temporary injunction was requested.

On August 28 Federal Judge Burnita Matthews denied the temporary injunction and dismissed the stay order. This was appealed several times, but on September 29 a three-judge panel affirmed Judge Matthew's decision and the stay order was terminated.

On October 6 Chief Justice Vinson of the United States Supreme Court was asked to issue a stay order, but on the following day he denied the request.

THREE THOUSAND MILES AWAY

Then an organization calling itself the Tenants Council and representing the A. F. of L. went into the Municipal Court of the District of Columbia, 3,000 miles away from Los Angeles, and persuaded Chief Judge George Barse to issue a temporary order preventing decontrol. But, after arguments, Judge Barse on October 23 denied a temporary injunction and dissolved the stay order.

On October 24, the following day, Mr. Woods made public a letter to the president of the city council informing him that he would not sign a decontrol order. His explanation was that, in his opinion, the council had not held a fair hearing.

In the meantime an effort had been made by the Los Angeles small property owners' organization to obtain in California, first in the county superior court and then in the Federal district court, a mandamus directing Woods to sign. But these were denied, because the courts said they had no jurisdiction over Woods, though the district court had not previously hesitated to issue an order directing Woods not to sign.

Then, on November 2, at a White House press conference, President Truman was asked, in view of the explicit terms of the law, if he would direct Mr. Woods to comply with the law and sign the decontrol order. The President answered testily that he knew all about the Los Angeles situation and Mr. Woods was refusing to sign the order upon his, the President's, personal orders. In other words, "Papa knows best."

THE SITUATION

From the point of view of what a Federal bureau can do to a local government, the interesting thing is that the courts, even the municipal courts in the city of Washington, 3,000 miles away from Los Angeles, have been used to continue rent control in the west coast city for more than 3 months after the appropriate local governing body, elected by the people of Los Angeles, complied in every respect with the law and voted to decontrol.

The bureaucratic attitude of Washington toward local self-government is well exemplified by an excerpt from Expediter Woods' letter to the Los Angeles council in which he informed that body that, regardless of the law, he would not sign a decontrol order.

"I felt it my duty," said Mr. Woods, "as a public officer to take whatever steps my best judgment dictated to guard against decontrol which might result from hasty and uninformed action. I need not dwell on the antagonistic attitude evidenced at that time to my appearance and the unwillingness of the council to meet with me in a spirit of cooperativeness."

In other words, so far as local governments in the United States are concerned it's a case of cooperate with the bureaus in Washington—or else.

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Nevada. The article illustrates another instance in which the Expediter, so-called, has completely violated the regulations imposed upon him by Congress. It represents an arrogant display of bureaucratic control, for which he should be removed from office.

Mr. President, almost half of the housing units in America are owned by people who have single-family dwellings for rent; 78.6 percent of the rental units in our country are owned by people who own four-family dwellings or less.

Therefore, by continuing rent control, we would not be imposing on the big landlords the power of the Federal Government to hold down their incomes. We would be imposing the power on the good middle-class American people who have bought their property with money which they had saved against their day of need, and have invested it in property for that purpose. I continue to read from Capital Comment:

> The Democratic Party is a party that serves all of the people and it is the duty of Democrats in areas where rent controls are not needed to give full support to continuing the Federal law to protect tenants in areas where they do need protection.

Mr. President, to continue rent control would not be taking care of all the people, in my judgment, because we would have a large segment of good American people who would not be taken care of. Their income has been held down to the point where they will have to dispose of their property or take it off the rental market. The rent control law has resulted in 2,000,000 units being taken off the rental market. In this situation we are not at all facing the problem which is confronting our people. Wages have gone up. We are in a spiral of wage increases. Prices are going up at an ever-accelerating rate. Increases in prices affect also the people who own rental property. Nevertheless, no consideration is given to owners of such property, and no attempt has been made to bring them up to a proper relationship with other factors in the present period of inflation, or to take into consideration the adulterated dollar which we are using in trade at the present time.

Citation is given in the article to the percentage of increase which has been given by the Expediter. The percentage increase of each adjustment averaged 17.8 percent. That is a very small pittance, when compared with an increase of 239.6 percent in wages, or when compared with the increase in the price of food and clothing. Rent is only a minor cost of the total living cost, amounting to only one-third of the cost of food.

Mr. Boyle cites what happened when rent control was taken off. He states that in Knoxville, Tenn., the average increase in rents was 26.8 percent over rents paid during the period of rent control. In Jacksonville, Fla., the increase amounted to 26.2 percent. In Salt Lake City the increase was 16.2 percent. In Topeka, Kans., the average increase was 30.3 percent. In Houston, Tex., the increase was 41.3 percent. In the hearings of the committee those figures were completely refuted by competent testimony. But take it for granted that they are true. They represent only about from one-third to one-sixth of the increase in wages and the increase in prices generally across the board.

It is further stated that there are 40,000,000 people living in 2,000 communities where the question of keeping or dropping rent control must be decided in a few weeks. That is a positive misstatement of fact. There are not forty million. There are nearer twenty-five million; and there are not 2,000 communities, but only about 1,200 communities. Those are the facts given by Mr. Tighe Woods. I want to show the Senate how much reliance can be placed upon Mr. Tighe Woods' testimony before the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. BRICKER. I yield myself 2 minutes more.

The testimony of Mr. Tighe Woods has been taken as the basis for this article. It was the only testimony presented, aside from that of a representative of the Air Force, and I believe a representative of the Navy. The opposition was not given an opportunity to testify in hearings on the proposed extension. Mr. Tighe Woods made this statement:

> In Weirton, W. Va., an official of the Weirton Steel Co. reported that the company has lost and is still losing employees due to the lack of adequate housing.

Of course, the statement does not make sense on its face. A shortage of housing would not drive the people already there out of their houses. We got from Mr. Woods the name of this man and called him from our office and asked him what the situation was, and what he said to Mr. Woods. He said, "It was a year ago when I talked to Mr. Woods." Yet, Mr. Woods would lead our committee to believe that the situation continues at the present time. This man said definitely that there was not much loss at the present time. The statement is not true today, although there is not adequate low-cost rental housing. There is not adequate low-cost food. There is not adequate low-cost clothing. There is not adequate low-cost wages. So we must consider the situation as a whole.

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRICKER. I yield.

Mr. FLANDERS. I should like to inquire of the distinguished Senator from Ohio what the relationship is between the inadequate number of low-rent housing units and the extension of rent control. Does the extension of rent control tend to increase the building of new low-rent housing?

Mr. BRICKER. On the other hand, it tends to curb the building of low-rent housing. The proof of that comes in the fact that during rent control there was a loss of 2,000,000 housing units.

Mr. FLANDERS. Then what was Mr. Tighe Woods trying to prove? Why did he bring before the committee as much testimony of this sort as he did in support of the extension of rent control?

Mr. BRICKER. I have no more idea than the man in the moon. I could not ascertain from him what he was talking about, or where he was going; and I do not believe he knew. He was directed to come here and present the case to the committee, and he based it entirely upon the Korean War. It has no relation to the Korean War or the present military situation. In fact, it does not affect that situation one way or the other.

I yield 10 minutes to the Senator from Washington [Mr. CAIN] if he is prepared to proceed at this time.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio a question.

Mr. BRICKER. I yield for a question.

Mr. CAIN. No action has yet been taken upon, and no comments have been addressed to, the validating amendment which the Senator from Washington submitted.

Mr. BRICKER. No; there has been no action, except that the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MAYBANK] stated that he approved the amendment which has been submitted by the Senator from Washington.

Mr. CAIN. It is my intention, when that amendment is brought up, to speak very briefly to it, in order to advise all Senators of the nature of the joint resolution. As of the present time, the Senator from Washington is of the opinion that he can make no further contribution to the debate. It seems to me that Senators are fully aware of how they are going to vote on this question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma in the chair). The time of the Senator from Ohio has expired.

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, I yield myself enough time to answer the question of the Senator from Washington.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator may proceed.

Mr. BRICKER. Is it the desire of the Senator from Washington to reserve his time until after 2 o'clock, when the voting begins and he offers his amendment?

Mr. CAIN. Yes, Mr. President.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRICKER. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. The Senator from Washington was not present earlier in the day when I spoke about his amendment.

Mr. BRICKER. I have just told the Senator from Washington that the Senator from South Carolina had agreed to accept the amendment.

Mr. MAYBANK. I think it is only fair in the interest of States' rights and municipal rights.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, I had suggested to the Senator from Ohio that when the amendment is called up after 2 o'clock the Senator from Washington would speak only briefly on the amendment, for the purpose of advising Senators as to the substance of the amendment. The Senator from Washington is most grateful for the attitude taken by the chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee.

Mr. MAYBANK. As the Senator knows, I was a member of the Municipal League for years, as he was, and I think the Senator is entirely right.

Mr. CAIN. Recently I have been in the company of a great many mayors who are attending the convention of the American Municipal Association. I believe that the Senator from South Carolina has also been in touch with the mayors. Every single mayor in the United States, regardless of the size of the city he represents, and regardless of whether or not his city is now or has been under Federal rent controls, will be extremely grateful for the adoption of the amendment which has been accepted by the chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee.

Mr. MAYBANK. I assure the Senator that I am as much for the amendment as he is, as I previously stated.

Mr. CAIN. I thank the Senator.

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, I yield myself two more minutes, to bring to the attention of the Senate two more pertinent facts.

The first is to the effect that in 1940 there were 28 dwelling units per 100 of population. In 1950 there are 31, so there is less reason today by far for imposing the Federal will upon local communities than there was at that time. The great increase in dwelling units has not been in rental units. It has been in home ownership and occupancy.

The population increase from 1940 to 1950 has been 14.4 percent. Dwelling units in the United States increased 23.6 percent, while rental units were going down as a result of the imposition of rent control.

Those are the pertinent facts which I wish to bring to the attention of the Senate in its consideration of this extension resolution. There are no further speakers on our side at this time, and I yield the floor to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I appreciate the remarks of my good friend and colleague on the committee. I should like to inquire how much time we have left on this side, and how much time is left on the other side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina has 32 minutes remaining.

Mr. MAYBANK. How about the Senator from Ohio?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio has 10 minutes remaining.

Mr. MAYBANK. For the record I desire to read a brief statement. I may say that I have no more speakers on this side. So if it is agreeable, after I have concluded this statement, we might take a recess until 2 o'clock. I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of my remarks the Senate stand in recess until 2 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, during the debate on the rent control extension bill last June I stated that extension would be the last rent-control bill which I would seek to have enacted. Since that time—2 days after the President signed that rent bill, in fact, things began to change, and within the last 2 weeks they have changed momentously.

It is my judgment and I believe that of the nine other Senators who voted to report the joint resolution favorably that in the present state of world conditions it would be risking entirely too much to remove on December 31, in effect, rent controls on an estimated 3,750,000 rental units in 1,700 incorporated places with a population of 27,839,000.

In view of the present uncertainty it seemed most sensible that the status quo on rent control be maintained for 60 days. This would give the cities that had not taken any action a chance to consider what action they should take in view of the new world situation. It would also give the new Congress a chance to review and consider the whole question of rent control in relation to the problem of price, wages, credit, and production controls. It would prevent for the time being, at least, a large number of rent increases and at the very time when it is most important that we not rock the economic boat.

I hope some advantage will be taken of the defense-production bill which we took so long to pass last September. The hearings lasted more than a month. The bill was in the House for a long time, and in the Senate for a long time. Then there were long conferences, extending far into the night.

The resolution, Mr. President, simply extends from December 31 to February 28 the time within which any incorporated city, town, or village can take action to extend rent control until June 30, 1951, without being decontrolled, in meantime, if they fail to take affirmative action. The local governing boards under the act would still have the right to decontrol themselves.

I wish to make that perfectly clear. If there is any community which does not like the 2-month extension, it has the same right it had to call a city council meeting or to pass a resolution to decontrol itself.

As I stated to the Senator from Washington, it will be my purpose as chairman of the committee, knowing how the committee feels, to accept the amendment of the Senator from Washington [Mr. CAIN] relating to the validity of resolutions passed by local governing bodies.

Senate Joint Resolution 207 does not, as the distinguished and very earnest junior Senator from Washington [Mr. CAIN] maintained yesterday, deprive the local governments of any powers they now have with respect to rent control. I wish to emphasize that. They can decontrol themselves any time they want, regardless of this resolution on which we shall vote today. It does not, as he suggested, deprive them of any powers they now possess.

It does not deprive the city of Seattle or the city of Los Angeles of any rights which they now have, when the Senator's amendment is accepted, which I trust it will be.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

Mr. CAIN. Is it not a fact that, if Senate Joint Resolution 207 were passed this afternoon, the city of Seattle, for example, could not anticipate, as it had been given the right to do by the present legislation, the expiration of Federal rent controls on December 31, 1950?

Mr. MAYBANK. Yes. But it could decontrol by that date by having a city council meeting in Seattle and decontrolling itself.

Mr. CAIN. But the resolution would take from that city its right to anticipate that, even if the city took no action—which it was told it need not do—rent controls would not expire on the last day of this year.

Mr. MAYBANK. If we base the statement on anticipation, the Senator is correct; but the city could decontrol.

Mr. CAIN. The Senator from South Carolina and I are in complete agreement that between now and the last day of this year the city, by resolution, may take action to decontrol.

Mr. MAYBANK. The Senator is correct.

Mr. CAIN. Or to continue controls for a period of 6 months.

Mr. MAYBANK. The Senator is correct.

Mr. CAIN. But we must all be certain, as the Senator from South Carolina has just pointed out, that if the joint resolution——

Mr. MAYBANK. As amended by the amendment of the Senator from Washington.

Mr. CAIN. If the joint resolution as amended prevails this afternoon, Federal rent control does not automatically expire in those American cities which have not either taken action to decontrol or to continue controls.

Mr. MAYBANK. The Senator from Washington is absolutely correct. I am sure he will agree with me that the city of Seattle or the city of Charleston, S. C., or any other city, can take action on its own part.

Mr. CAIN. I do agree with the Senator's comment on that point.

Mr. MAYBANK. As the Senator knows, I have always been for States' rights and municipal rights. I believe thoroughly in what the junior Senator from Ohio said, that the local people know more about the local situation than do officials in Washington.

Mr. CAIN. Will the Senator yield for one other question?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

Mr. CAIN. Is there any reason why the Congress of the United States cannot write a new Federal rent-control law, if that is its wish, during the next session of the Congress, if Senate Joint Resolution 207 is not passed this afternoon?

Mr. MAYBANK. Of course not. No Congress can bind another Congress. If the new Congress wants to change laws which have previously been passed, they can, under the Constitution, do so.

Mr. CAIN. Regardless of what happens to Senate Joint Resolution 207 this afternoon, there will be at least 800 cities under Federal rent control from January 1, 1951, to June 30, 1951. Is that not so?

Mr. MAYBANK. I shall accept the Senator's figures. He has studied the matter and has the figures clearly in mind. He is familiar with the figures given out by the Association of Mayors, and if he says the number of cities is 800, I shall accept that figure.

Mr. CAIN. The figure is approximately 800. The point is that there is to be Federal rent control for a large number of American cities during the first 6 months of next year regardless of what happens to Senate Joint Resolution 207 this afternoon.

Mr. MAYBANK. That is correct.

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

Mr. BRICKER. A moment ago unanimous consent was obtained for a recess to be taken until 2 o'clock, after the Senator from South Carolina had concluded his address. I wonder if it would not be better to modify that agreement so that the recess will be taken until 5 minutes of 2, in order that a quorum call be had beginning at 5 minutes of 2?

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senator from South Carolina has finished his statement the Senate take a recess until 5 minutes of 2.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I am glad to have the previous unanimous-consent agreement modified to that extent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator restate his request?

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senator from South Carolina has finished his statement the Senate take a recess until 5 minutes of 2, at which time we will have a quorum call.

Mr. MAYBANK. I heartily agree with that request.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I wish to ask if the proposal is that the Senate proceed to vote at 5 minutes of 2?

Mr. BRICKER. No, Mr. President, I have asked unanimous consent that when the Senator from South Carolina has concluded his statement, a recess be taken until 5 minutes of 2.

Mr. MAYBANK. And that a quorum call be had at that time.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I wish to make an inquiry of the Senator from South Carolina. Is he anxious for the Senate to take a recess at the conclusion of his statement, or would he be willing that further contributions be made in respect to the general subject of rent control between now and 2 o'clock?

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, it is our desire to have orderly procedure in connection with the matter under discussion. As I remember, I previously asked how much time I had remaining, and how much time the junior Senator from Ohio had remaining.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Orderly procedure would permit any Senator who wishes to discuss the subject matter under discussion to do so.

Mr. MAYBANK. Yes; that is true, Mr. President. How much time have I left and how much time has the junior Senator from Ohio left?

Mr. MAYBANK. I have 25 minutes left.

Mr. CAIN. And my understanding was that the Senator from Ohio had 10 minutes left. The Senator from Washington has a letter which concerns itself with the general question of rent control, which he would be pleased to have made a part of the RECORD were that to suit the convenience of the Senator from South Carolina, between now and 2 o'clock.

Mr. MAYBANK. I have only a few more remarks to make. I was one of those who hoped we would not need to have extension of rent control. I hoped that peace might prevail, although I did not believe we would have peace.

Mr. President, if I am not interrupted, I can conclude my remarks in 5 minutes. At the conclusion of my remarks I shall be glad to yield whatever time the Senator from Washington wishes to have.

Mr. CAIN. I will appreciate that very much.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, it is true that the pending joint resolution will continue rent control in the areas that have not removed or do not remove themselves from rent control for another 60 days. I shall not argue with the junior Senator from Washington that some of these places did not take advantage of the decontrol provisions of the act because by taking no action by December 31, they would have removed themselves automatically from under control, and without the controversy and objections they would otherwise have had to face. But I am confident that many of these same local communities throughout the country would prefer not to be required to take any action one way or the other until they can have a chance to judge during the next 2 months just what the situation actually is. In fact, I know this to be the case from many conversations I have had this week with a number of mayors attending in this city the meeting of the United Conference of Mayors. It is also true that no decontrol action was taken in many of these cities because the rental market has been relatively tight in many of these areas, or at best because the supply-demand situation was just approaching a more normal condition.

Imagine what would happen to rents in such areas if large defense plants and military installations began to open up and expand. Most communities throughout the Nation do not and cannot be expected to know how a war emergency would affect them. They have no idea of what defense plants or military installations will be located or expanded in their areas. It is our responsibility to facilitate defense production and ease the burden on our military personnel, and we would be doing just the opposite if by our failure to act we risked, or more likely allowed, inflationary rent increase in some 1,700 localities throughout the Nation.

Mr. President, I wish to make a comment respecting my own State. In addition to representing my own State I realize that, as a United States Senator, I must have in mind the welfare of the country as a whole, first, last, and always. An atomic energy plant is to be built in my State which will employ some 30,000 persons. Two months ago no one knew that such a plant was to be built. Many other defense installations and military installations are going to be built in various sections of the country, as I can understand from the appropriations which are requested for such purposes. Request is expected to be made for $50,000,000,000 for next year. Military installations will be built in various parts of the country, and communities do not know where they will be built.

The very able senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] stated, and properly so, that national rent control could only be justified by a war emergency. I told the Senator earlier in the day that I think this is a war emergency and I have always thought so, and that I think the President should declare a state of national emergency exists. We have for a long time been in and only recently have we begun to get out of the war emergency, and now it looks like we may be going into another one. We are already in one, Mr. President. Certainly the situation we are in justifies a 60 days' extension for the cities under rent control who have not as yet acted either to extend or decontrol themselves. War and its impact are national in origin and in their consequences, and so are their economic effects. Local governments cannot be expected to bear the full burden of responsibility. We must share it, whether we like to or not, if we are to do the job properly. The economic problem ahead is tough enough; do not make it tougher by allowing a very important item in the little fellow's budget to get out of hand in 1,700 communities throughout our Nation. At least we should give ourselves and the local governments 60 days more to watch, think, and act.

In the meantime we are not foreclosing any rent increases. Over 400,000 were given in the last 4 months. Mr. President, I wish to repeat that figure. Over 400,000 were given in the last 4 months.

The Housing Expediter described to the committee what is known as the Chicago plan which allows a landlord by filling in four blanks on a very simple form to get practically automatically a 15 to 25 percent increase in rents. As Senators remember from our discussion of the bill in 1949 a rent increase of 15 or 25 percent means an increase in net income much, much greater than the 15 or 25 percent. It may mean an increase of up to 100 or 200 percent in the net revenue. I mention this not by way of argument for rent control, but to indicate that in extending rent control for 60 days we are not freezing current rents nor are we continuing gross inequities.

Mr. President, it was impossible to work expeditiously with the forms which were used 2 or 3 years ago. The Congress of the United States appropriated money for the purpose of employing persons in various sections of the United States to help tenants and small landlords because as stated by the junior Senator from Ohio, the advantages accrued to the large property owners. I agree with the Senator's statement in that respect. Certainly I wish to help someone who has used his money to buy a piece of property from which he expects to obtain a small income on which to live in his old age, rather than to become, as has been suggested, a ward of the Government.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. Does the Senator think it is fair to impose rent control on old property and not have it apply to new homes?

Mr. MAYBANK. Most of the new houses were built with Federal funds, under FHA loans. But before new homes were built under such conditions, many persons invested their money in property in the expectation that they and their dependents could receive in return funds on which to live in their old age.

Mr. LANGER. Under the present law new houses are not included?

Mr. MAYBANK. That is correct.

Mr. LANGER. Does not the Senator believe that by extending the law for 60 days the discrimination is continued for that time?

Mr. MAYBANK. I will say very frankly to my good friend from North Dakota that there are no doubt, real discriminations existing in the law. I do not know, however, how the Senate and the House could write a new law, have it passed by both Houses and acted upon in conference and finally agreed to before the new Congress convenes.

Mr. LANGER. It is simply a question of expediency then?

Mr. MAYBANK. That is all, Mr. President. But I shall join with the Senator from North Dakota if he will join with me in the new Congress to propose a rent-control law which will treat both classes of property with equity.

Mr. LANGER. Can the Senator say offhand about what proportion of the present houses or units are covered by the present law?

Mr. MAYBANK. I do not have those figures. Perhaps I can obtain them.

Mr. LANGER. The question is, What percentage of the present housing units are covered by the present law?

Mr. MAYBANK. I can only say to the Senator from North Dakota that under the present law there are rent controls on approximately 7,000,000 rental units in 2,500 incorporated places with a population of approximately 50,000,000.

Mr. LANGER. They are covered at the present time?

Mr. MAYBANK. They are under rent control now.

Mr. LANGER. The Senator means that number are covered at the present time?

Mr. MAYBANK. Yes.

It is my judgment—and I believe it is that of nine of the other Senators who voted to report favorably the pending joint resolution—that in the present state of world conditions we would be risking entirely too much to remove rent control from 27,839,000 persons. Approximately 800 communities continued by resolution rent control for another 6 months. They had a population of about 24,000,000 people. About 50 percent of those now covered would retain rent control, regardless of the action on the pending resolution.

Let me ask the Senator from Washington whether he has any additional figures because I certainly want the RECORD to show the facts. My information has been that approximately 50 percent of those now under control have voted favorably for a continuation of rent control and approximately 50 percent have not acted. That is my information.

Mr. CAIN. My best information is that of the 2,400 cities presently under Federal rent controls, approximately 800 have requested an extension for 6 months. That information is about 2 weeks old, so my assumption is that at least several score cities have been added to the 800.

Mr. MAYBANK. I thank the Senator. I did not check on the exact number of persons in whose communities rent controls have been continued, but my information was that the situation was about 50–50. If rent controls were done away with on December 31, I know there would be 27,839,000 persons who would be affected.

The cities which have taken positive action have been such ones as Chicago, Pittsburgh, Philadelphia, St. Louis, St. Paul, and others. Although there are perhaps two cities which have not acted for each city which has acted, nevertheless the populations affected either way would be approximately the same.

Mr. CAIN. It is my understanding that if prevailing conditions continue through this year and if the present law were to expire at midnight on December 31, 1950, approximately 50 percent of those now under control would continue to be under control for the next 6 months.

Mr. MAYBANK. That is the substance of my statement. I was not sure of the exact figure.

Mr. President, our country and our people are depending on us to act wisely and cautiously in this time of national crisis. Let us act cautiously by extending rent control for 60 days, so that we may act with more knowledge of the facts and with more chance for a fuller consideration of the whole program during the early days of the next Congress.

I yield the remainder of my time to the Senator from Washington.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington is recognized.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, I appreciate the generosity of the senior Senator from South Carolina, the chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CAIN. Certainly.

Mr. MAYBANK. I understand that it has been agreed that there will be a quorum call at 5 minutes of 2.

Mr. CAIN. That is correct.

Mr. President, in addressing myself to the pending question on yesterday, I mentioned, in passing, that—

It is my considered judgment that, certainly in my 4 years in the Senate, no statute—

I was obviously referring to the Federal rent-control law—has ever been so stupidly interpreted by those in the executive branch charged with its conduct. That conduct has been shot through with prejudice, with malice, and to some extent, I think, with dishonesty. The intent and wish of the Congress have been flagrantly violated by the Administrator of the Office of the Housing Expediter and by his staff. Administrative rules and regulations have been willfully designed to thwart many provisions of the law over which the Members of Congress—both Democrats and Republicans—labored long in their effort to provide some measure of relief and justice to American citizens.

That is the end of the quotation, which can be found on page 16201 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for yesterday.

Mr. President, in support of the feeling I have just expressed, a feeling which to my knowledge is shared by other Members of the Senate, I should like to offer some brief testimony on the same subject from a particular and very large American city. I wish to read something which I have recently received over the signature of Walter C. Peterson, city clerk of the city of Los Angeles. This communication is dated October 27, 1950; it is a certificate, and reads as follows:

I, Walter C. Peterson, city clerk of the city of Los Angeles, State of California, do hereby certify that the following motion was adopted by the Council of the city of Los Angeles at its meeting of Friday, October 27, 1950.

"I move that the report of the city attorney dated October 27, 1950, as read to the Council by the clerk, be forwarded to President Harry S. Truman with the request that immediate steps be taken to rectify this flagrant violation of the rent-decontrol statute by Expediter Tighe Woods, and the further suggestion that the Expediter be instructed to sign the order of decontrol; further, that copies of the city attorney's report referred to be placed in the hands of each Member of Congress representing the Los Angeles area and the two United States Senators; also that copies be forwarded to the chairman of the Senate Banking Committee and the chairman of the House Banking Committee; further, that the City Attorney be instructed to secure the assistance of Charles S. Rhyne, of Washington, D. C., in presenting this matter and any other material relevant to the matter to the officials mentioned."

WALTER C. PETERSON,
City Clerk, City of Los Angeles.

Dated this 27th day of October 1950.

I have likewise received from the same Mr. Peterson. Mr. President, another certificate dated October 27, 1950, which I wish to read:

I, Walter C. Peterson, city clerk of the city of Los Angeles, State of California, do hereby certify that the following motion was adopted by the Council of the City of Los Angeles at its meeting of Friday, October 27, 1950.

"I move that the Attorney General of the United States be requested to immediately investigate the action of Tighe Woods, Housing Expediter, in defiance of the will of Congress in respect to the Federal rent-control statute of 1950 as acted upon legally by the City Council of Los Angeles, as to possible collusion between Tighe Woods and Maxwell Miller and the so-called tenants' council."

WALTER C. PETERSON,
City Clerk, City of Los Angeles.

Dated this 27th day of October 1950.

Mr. President, as a good many Members of the Senate and of the House of Representatives know, the City Council of the City of Los Angeles passed a resolution on July 28, 1950, by a vote of 10 to 4, to decontrol rents in Los Angeles. That action was predicated on the manner in which the city of Los Angeles interpreted and understood the Federal Rent and Housing Act of 1947, as amended.

Under date of October 23, 1950, Mr. Tighe Woods, Federal Housing Expediter, wrote to Mr. Harold A. Henry, president of the City Council of the City of Los Angeles, to explain to Mr. Henry and to the City Council of Los Angeles why, in the opinion of the Federal Housing Expediter, his administration should not subscribe to the law of the land and therefore should not decontrol rents in Los Angeles, as that city had thought ought to be done under the terms of its resolution as passed on July 28, 1950.

Mr. President, because a good many Members of this body and of the House of Representatives will wish to know precisely how Mr. Woods interprets a Federal statute, I ask unanimous consent that his letter of Octotber 23, 1950, to the president of the City Council of Los Angeles be made a part of my remarks, at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

OCTOBER 23, 1950.

HAROLD A. HENRY,
President, City Council of the City of Los Angeles, City Hall, Los Angeles, Calif.

DEAR MR. HENRY: On August 2, 1950, I received from the City Council of the City of Los Angeles a resolution advising me that there no longer exists such a shortage in rental-housing accommodations as to require rent control in the city of Los Angeles. Adoption of this resolution by a majority of the city council was immediately preceded by a public hearing held on July 28, 1950, pursuant to the provisions of section 204 (j) (3) of the Housing and Rent Act of 1950. As you know, under these provisions of the law, I am required to terminate rent control in an incorporated city upon receipt of a resolution of its governing body adopted for that purpose in accordance with applicable local law and based upon a finding by such governing body reached as the result of a public hearing held after 10 days' notice that there no longer exists such a shortage in rental-housing accommodations as to require rent control in such city.

At about the time the resolution came to me, I also received a report from an impartial observer that several questionable incidents took place in connection with the public hearing. It was stated to me that prior to the hearing a majority of the members of the city council had made known their fixed intent to vote for decontrol without regard to the matters which might be brought to their attention at the public hearing; a statement to like effect also was circulated in the press. I was further informed that attendance at the public hearing was so regulated as to systematically exclude large numbers of tenants in favor of the admittance of landlords to insure an atmosphere hostile to the careful and studied consideration of the question before the council. It was shocking to learn that those responsible for the government of as large and great a city as Los Angeles would approach a question as far-reaching and critical as decontrol of rents except in the most objective and unbiased manner and with scrupulous regard for the interests of all of the members of the community. However, realizing that the Congress intended that the governing body of each incorporated community determine for itself whether it desired the continued protection afforded by Federal law, and in the absence of a record or transcript of the hearing, I was not disposed to reject the resolution upon the basis of these seeming irregularities alone.

On August 9, 1950, I received a petition from a group purporting to act in behalf of 300,000 tenant families in the city, requesting that I withhold action on the resolution until inquiry had been made into certain matters raised in the petition. Among these was the charge that the city council action was in complete disregard of available and known evidence of an already existing acute shortage of rental housing accommodations, which would be further aggravated by the expected influx of large numbers of aircraft workers. Along with this petition there was filed a copy of the housing survey conducted at the request of your city council by the Peacock Research Association. This impartial survey, completed in April 1950, shows a vacancy factor of 2.6 percent for all dwelling units in Los Angeles and, in units having monthly rentals up to $57.49, the vacancy factor ranges from 1.4 to 3.5 percent. These matters, bearing as they do upon the very issue before the city council, caused me very considerable concern. I felt it my duty as a public officer to take whatever steps my best judgment dictated to guard against decontrol which might result from hasty and uninformed action. Consequently, as soon as my schedule permitted, I came to Los Angeles to confer with the members of your council in the hope of presenting an informed view of the several aspects of control and decontrol in your city, and to learn at first-hand the reasons why the majority of the council felt that Los Angeles was ready for decontrol. I need not dwell upon the antagonistic attitude evidenced at that time to my appearance and the unwillingness of the council to meet with me in a spirit of cooperativeness. Since there was no disposition to give this vital subject the consideration it deserved, I announced that the resolution would be accepted upon my return to Washington unless it were found that the council action did not satisfy the requirements of law.

I have since been made fully aware, for the first time, through a recording, of the exact events transpiring at the public hearing and the discussion of the several councilmen prior to their vote. The testimony presented at the hearing by those favoring decontrol is noteworthy for its almost complete lack of relevance to the subject of the existence or nonexistence of a housing shortage in Los Angeles. It is fully clear that not a single witness presented real facts to show that a shortage of rental housing did not exist. Moreover, the councilmen who voiced their intention to vote for decontrol likewise failed to provide a substantial basis, grounded upon fact, for their desire to eliminate Federal rent control in the area. In the light of the foregoing matters, it cannot reasonably be said that the resolution is based upon findings reached as a result of the public hearing, as required by the statute.

I believe that the Housing Expediter is charged with the responsibility of determining whether the requirements of law have been met before a decontrol resolution may be accepted. That is a serious responsibility. Having arrived at the judgment that the resolution of the City Council of Los Angeles is not based upon findings which could reasonably be reached as the result of the public hearing, I have no alternative but to reject the resolution.

I regret the need for such action, since any fair doubt in such cases has always been resolved in favor of the communities involved, as the past record of this Office clearly shows. There is no fair doubt here.

Sincerely,

TIGHE E. WOODS,
Housing Expediter.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, shortly after Mr. Woods' letter was received by Mr. Henry, the president of the Los Angeles City Council, it was referred to the corporation counsel of the city of Los Angeles, for his opinion and for his views. The corporation counsel examined Mr. Woods' letter carefully, and offered his findings to the City Council of Los Angeles. In order to keep the record straight and to satisfy the curiosity of a good many Americans on this most important question, I ask unanimous consent that the findings and memoranda of the corporation counsel of the city of Los Angeles be made a part of my remarks, at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the findings and memoranda were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RE COMMUNICATION FROM TIGHE E. WOODS REJECTING COUNCIL RESOLUTION REGARDING DECONTROL OF RENTS

To the honorable the City Council of the City of Los Angeles.

GENTLEMEN: You have requested a report from this office on the communication under date of October 23, 1950, from Tighe E. Woods, Housing Expediter, addressed to Harold A. Henry, president of the City Council of the City of Los Angeles. The Housing Expediter's letter is a refusal to perform his duty, as required by law, to decontrol rental housing in Los Angeles, pursuant to the resolution adopted by your honorable body at its meeting of July 28, 1950. That resolution was adopted after a public hearing on the matter of the necessity of further need for the control of rents in the city of Los Angeles, based upon a finding that such control was no longer needed.

This action on the part of the Housing Expediter has created a serious situation affecting the interests and well-being of many property owners and residents in the city of Los Angeles. In fact, his action has a direct and detrimental impact upon the economics of this community. As a result, your honorable body, as the determining agency of the Congress of the United States in carrying out its express declaration "that it is its purpose to terminate at the earliest practicable date all Federal restrictions on rent on housing," has met an impasse created by the arbitrary and precedented action of the Housing Expediter.

The critical problem now confronting your honorable body is the accomplishment of the purposes and objects of the Congress with the minimum of delay. It is strange that the title to the office occupied by Mr. Tighe E. Woods should use the word "Expediter" while the burden of expediting decontrol now falls upon the city council.

The communication is nothing short of a futile attempt to cover the dereliction of the Housing Expediter by false accusations challenging the integrity of the council which are admittedly based solely upon extraneous and hearsay information. To do more than point out a few of the inconsistencies and "double talk" of the Housing Expediter would extend this report to undue lengths—therefore only the more glaring features of the Housing Expediter's present position will be mentioned.

The Housing Expediter states in his communication that: "Having arrived at the judgment that the resolution of the City Council of Los Angeles is not based upon findings which could reasonably be reached as the result of the public hearing, I have no alternative but to reject the resolution."

Even if it be assumed, merely for the sake of argument, that the Housing Expediter has the right to exercise any "judgment" in the matter of whether the findings in question could have been reached reasonably as the result of the public hearing held by the council, the position taken by the Housing Expediter, as disclosed for the first time by this communication, is to say the least novel and lacking in judicial or administrative precedent.

The Housing Expediter has gone beyond all accepted concepts of judcial or administrative practice and has introduced a new type of administrative procedure, namely, review by rumor.

The communication states that the Expediter "Received a report from an impartial observer that several questionable incidents took place in connection with the public hearing," and that, "it was stated to me that prior to the hearing, a majority of the members of the city council had made known their fixed intent to vote for decontrol without regard to the matters which might be brought to their attention at the public hearing," that "a statement to like effect also was circulated in the press," that he was "further informed that attendance at the public hearing was so regulated as to systematically exclude large numbers of tenants in favor of admittance of landlords to insure an atmosphere hostile to the careful and studied consideration of the question before the council," and that he has "since been made fully aware for the first time through a recording of the exact events which transpired at the public hearing and the discussion of the several councilmen, prior to their vote," and that, "the testimony presented at the hearing by those favoring decontrol is noteworthy for its almost complete lack of relevance to the subject of the existence or nonexistence of the housing shortage in Los Angeles." These and other statements of a similar nature indicate that the Housing Expediter has attempted to pass upon the validity of the proceedings authenticated either by the president of the city council, or the clerk thereof.

Whenever one officer or board reviews the actions of another officer or board where a hearing has been held in a matter, it is the uniform practice to secure a record of the proceedings duly authenticated by the officer or board conducting the hearing. If any question arises as to the correctness of such a duly authenticated record, the universal practice to refer the matter back to the hearing officer or board for correction of the record, so that it may speak the truth.

The Housing Expediter in this case has not requested an authenticated record, apparently, because his office is fully aware that such a record would disclose the falsity of the information on which he bases his communication and places reliance.

As to the Housing Expediter's statement that it was stated to him that prior to the hearing a majority of the members of the city council had made known their fixed intent to vote for decontrol, an affidavit, signed by Councilmen Davenport, Allen, Holland, Davies, Warburton, Timberlake, Henry, Austin, Cronk, and Debs, subscribed and sworn to before a notary public, on August 21, 1950, stated:

"That prior to the public hearing conducted on July 28, 1950, in the council chambers in the matter of rent decontrol, he did not determine to vote for decontrol without and prior to a public hearing on said matter, and that he was not influenced by persons, matters, or things to vote for decontrol without and prior to the holding of a public hearing on the matter."

This affidavit was filed in the case of Maxwell Miller v. Tighe E. Woods, and a copy thereof served upon the attorneys of record for Mr. Tighe Woods.

With regard to the statement of the Housing Expediter that he was further informed that attendance at the public hearing was so regulated as to systematically exclude large numbers of tenants in favor of the admittance of landlords to insure an atmosphere hostile to the careful and studied consideration of the question before the council, the affidavit of Charles L. Williams, sergeant at arms of the council, was likewise filed in the case previously mentioned, and it is averred in that affidavit:

"That at the meeting of the council, held on July 28, 1950, no person or persons was or were excluded systematically, or otherwise, from the council chambers, until such time as the council chambers were filled to capacity, whereupon no further persons were permitted inside the council chambers; that loud-speakers were in operation so that the proceedings of the council at said meeting could be heard by persons outside the council chambers; that said council chambers have a seating capacity of approximately 380 persons, and that there were present in said council chambers at the said meeting approximately 455 persons."

The Housing Expediter chooses to ignore these affidavits and rely on asserted information of a hearsay nature, the source of which he does not disclose. It is interesting to note that the language used by the Housing Expediter in making these charges is identical with the allegations found in the papers filed in the case of Miller v. Woods.

The Housing Expediter refers to, "a petition from a group purporting to act on behalf of 300,000 tenant families in the City, requesting that I withhold action on the Resolution until inquiry had been made in the certain matters raised in the petition." The Housing Expediter states that, "among these was the charge that the city council action was in complete disregard of available and known evidence of an already existing shortage of rental housing accommodations, which would be further aggravated by the expected influx of large numbers of aircraft workers."

Reference is made to a copy of the housing survey conducted at the request of the city council by the Peacock Research Associates. The Housing Expediter further states, "this impartial survey, completed in April 1950, shows a vacancy factor of 2.6 percent for all dwelling units in Los Angeles and, in units having monthly rentals up to $57.49, the vacancy factor ranges from 1.4 to 3.5 percent." What he neglected to point out is that in the rental bracket between $57.50 and $64.99, the vacancy factor shown by the report is 5.4 percent. From the Peacock report, it can be determined that the vacancy factor, based on total rental housing accommodations, is slightly in excess of 4.5 percent. Be that as it may, the Housing Expediter states in his communication that, "I felt it my duty as a public officer to take whatever steps my best judgment dictated to guard against decontrol which might result from hasty and uninformed action." As the council well knows, the housing survey, conducted at the request of the City Council by the Peacock Research Associates, was at the sole expense of the city and was, in the language of the Housing Expediter, "an impartial survey."

By reason of the shortness of time, this office is unable to furnish the Council with specific figures relating to vacancy factors in the various communities in the county of Los Angeles, as well as the vacancy factor in the unincorporated area of the county which have been decontrolled. It is to be noted that the Housing Expediter makes no claim that the vacancy factor in those communities or in the unincorporated area of the county was greater than that shown to exist in the city of Los Angeles by the Peacock report, which was before the city council and is part of the file in this rent-decontrol matter.

An examination of the council file in the matter shows many communications upon the subject. Attention is called to a statement of Mr. G. G. Bauman, president of the Small Property Owners' League, in which he has detailed facts relating to housing conditions in the city of Los Angeles based upon the Peacock report, which conclusively refutes the statement made by the Housing Expediter that, "It is fully clear that not a single witness presented real facts to show that a shortage of rental housing did not exist."

In short, it is clear that the Housing Expediter is attempting to substitute his judgment as to what he believes should be done, for that of the city council. The Housing Expediter, in so determining, has resorted to information which does not appear to be a part of any record made before the council in this matter. This is particularly true as to his statement that, "in the light of the foregoing matters, it cannot reasonably be said that the resolution is based upon findings reached as a result of a public hearing as required by the statute."

The minutes of the council disclose, as your honorable body well remembers, that an extensive hearing was held in the matter. Each side was allotted 45 minutes to present their side of the question, and an additional 15 minutes were allotted to each side for rebuttal. As a matter of fact, the hearing extended well beyond the allotted time.

It will be recalled that no complaint was made at that time that the members of the public were not given an opportunity to be fully heard in the matter, or that any request for further time was made. That the hearing was fair and impartial is, of course, best known to the members of your honorable body.

After referring to his visit to Los Angeles and his appearance before the council, the Housing Expediter states, "I have since been made fully aware, for the first time, through a recording, of the exact events transpiring at the public hearing and the discussion of the several councilmen prior to their vote." Neither the council nor the clerk has ever authenticated the correctness of any transcription made at the hearing nor has the council or the clerk been requested to determine whether or not such transcription, if it was made, is a full and complete transcript of the hearing in question. The attention of this office has been called to the existence of a transcription apparently made for news release purposes, which is purported to contain a portion of the hearing before the council. However, the city attorney's office has been unable to secure this recording. Consequently, it is impossible to comment upon the contents thereof. Of course, it is impossible to determine from the Housing Expediter's communication what transcription he listened to. Needless to repeat, whatever the transcription the Housing Expediter listened to, its correctness was not authenticated by either the council or the city clerk.

The statements and insinuations made in the communication from the Housing Expediter are utterly without foundation. The reasons he now assigns for refusing to act in the matter appear to indicate a studied intent to avoid compliance with the law relating to the decontrol of rents, at least, as applied to the city of Los Angeles. In the brief filed by the Housing Expediter, as the appellee in the case of Maxwell Miller against Tighe E. Woods, wherein, over the signature of Ed. Dupree, general counsel; Leon J. Libeu, assistant general counsel; Nathan Sigel, and Benjamin Freidson, special litigation attorneys, Office of the Housing Expediter, it is stated that, "to the extent that appellants may be urging that in some manner not explained, the Housing Expediter must determine whether the findings fairly flow from the evidence adduced at the public hearing. The Housing Expediter is in sharp disagreement with such a view. The statute does not contemplate that a record of the proceedings be furnished, and none has been or presumably would be transmitted to him. When the resolution plainly sets forth that the required findings have been made and were reached as a result of a public hearing further inquiry is not required."

While a mandatory injunction seeking to compel the Housing Expediter to comply with the law as his counsel has heretofore represented it to be before the court might be sought, it is doubtful if any practical purpose can be served in view of the length of time that would be consumed in securing a final judgment.

There are two possible nonjudicial courses of action that may be of some practical benefit.

Possible, the action of the Housing Expediter in this matter may be the proper subject for investigation by the Attorney General of the United States as to whether there has been willful or corrupt misconduct on the part of a Federal official that impairs the administration of a Federal statute.

It might be that more effective results could be obtained if the matter were to be directly laid before the President of the United States himself. He is the chief executive and has the power of appointment and removal of the Housing Expediter. It must be remembered that Federal control of rents is part of the emergency powers conferred upon the President. These emergency powers, as originally conferred in 1942 and continued by the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, have been curtailed by the Housing and Rent Act of 1950. The latter statute specifically confers upon the local governing body of the city the power to take the very action which the council took in this matter. Clearly, this statute is being deliberately violated by the Housing Expediter.

A third possibility is a congressional investigation. This course of action would be directed more to the question of whether amendment to the existing statutes is desirable so as to prevent a further repetition of this type of incident rather than applying corrective measures under existing law.

Of course, another public hearing could be had but there is no assurance that, notwithstanding whatever evidence may be adduced, the Housing Expediter would accord a second resolution any different treatment than that given the current resolution.

Very truly yours,

RAY L. CHESEBRO,
City Attorney.
By BOURKE JONES,
Assistant City Attorney.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, under date of November 15, and at a time when the junior Senator from Washington was in the city of Los Angeles, and when this problem was brought to his attention, he addressed a letter to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MAYBANK], chairman of the Senate Banking and Currency Committee, at the Senate Office Building in Washington, D. C. The Senator from Washington thinks that his letter, together with the several communications in question exchanged between the city of Los Angeles, its city council and its corporation counsel, and the Office of the Housing Expediter, will pretty satisfactorily acquaint the Senate with most of the facts involved in the blunt refusal of the Housing Expediter to obey the law of the land, as understood by myself, and, I think, as other Senators and Members of the House of Representatives understand that law and its meaning. The letter reads as follows:

NOVEMBER 15, 1950.

Senator BURNET MAYBANK,
Chairman, Senate Banking and Currency Committee,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR BURNEY: On July 28, 1950, the City Council of Los Angeles passed a resolution by a vote of 10 to 4 to decontrol rents in Los Angeles. This action was taken as authorized by the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended. The applicable amendment, which I believe was offered by BILL FULBRIGHT, of Arkansas, and passed overwhelmingly by the Senate, states that "the Housing Expediter shall terminate the provisions of this title in any incorporated city upon receipt of a resolution of its governing body adopted for that purpose in accordance with applicable local law and based upon a finding by such governing body reached as a result of a public hearing held after 10 days' notice that there no longer exists such a shortage in rental housing accommodations as to require rent control in such city." The Housing Expediter acknowledged receiving this resolution on August 2, 1950.

In February of 1950 the Los Angeles City Council authorized a survey to be taken which would determine if a request would be made by the city of the Housing Expediter to decontrol rents. This survey was undertaken by a reputable firm selected by the city. The survey cost approximately $25,000, and this cost was charged against all of the taxpayers of Los Angeles. It took about 6 weeks to complete the survey. The city council then took many weeks to consider the survey, following which the city council conducted a public hearing in accordance with the Federal law, at which both those in support of and opposed to decontrolling rents in Los Angeles were fairly and thoroughly heard.

The Housing Expediter has employed every conceivable legalistic technicality and maneuver for 3½ months in an effort to maintain rent controls in Los Angeles. Los Angeles has been required to appear before five courts, from the municipal to the Supreme Court level. In each and every instance the courts have held that the Federal law empowered Los Angeles to resolve to decontrol rents within its jurisdiction. The city of Los Angeles and the Federal Government, through the Office of the Housing Expediter, have already spent thousands of dollars simply because the Housing Expediter has sought relentlessly to avoid and to violate the law of the land. The Federal law which was recommended by your committee and passed by the Senate and the House of Representatives gives no discretion to the Housing Expediter when a city has properly approved and submitted a rent-decontrol resolution. The legislative intent of the Congress was to provide American cities and towns with a maximum of home-rule authority. The Fulbright amendment was passed to permit an American city to determine its own need for rent-control restrictions. The Housing Expediter has been fully conscious of the intent of the Congress. He is guilty of placing himself above the law of the land and of offering himself as a Federal agent who knows more about the needs of an American municipality than do those who are elected by its citizens to manage the affairs of a city in their name.

I need not remind you that I recommended that the present Housing Expediter be confirmed when I was the chairman of the Housing and Rent Subcommittee of your committee in the Eightieth Congress. My recommendation was approved unanimously by your committee, because I assured each member that the Acting Housing Expediter had certified to me that he would be particularly careful to literally obey the Federal law and that he would painstakingly observe the legislative intent of the law. With reference to Los Angeles, the Housing Expediter has abused the confidence which I and the entire committee placed in him, and he is breaking provisions of the Federal law as they can publicly be read by any one.

I want to urge your committee to question and investigate the Office of the Housing Expediter as promptly as you can conveniently do it after the Congress convenes on November 27. If my judgment is right that the Housing Expediter has willfully and flagrantly broken the law and ignored the intent of the Congress, I hope that charges will be preferred against him which, if supported by an American court, will send the present Housing Expediter, and any of those who are guilty with him, to a Federal penitentiary.

If a Federal agent is permitted to dictate in opposition to the law of the land what an American community must do, then every American community will become nothing more than a pawn and vassal of a high-handed Federal Government. If the Housing Expediter can bypass the rights which belong to Los Angeles then no American municipality will have any rights at all. The issues before us goes far deeper than the question of rent controls for an American municipality. The fundamental question is whether a Federal agent can break a Federal law and in doing so take away the rights which belong to independent American citizens.

Because I have worked with and for your committee you will agree that I know as much about the legislative intent behind the Federal rent law as any Member of the Congress. Against this background I simply state as being a fact that the Housing Expediter is premeditatively attempting to avoid what he knows to be the considered wish of the Congress. Should he be permitted to ignore and repudiate his responsibilities the Congress would soon become a meaningless part of the Government and citizens would be without any right or protection whatsoever.

I feel that you will be as indignant and distressed as I am and that you will promptly call the Housing Expediter and his prime agents before your committee. A majority of all Democrats and Republicans approved the home-rule provision which Los Angeles relied upon more than 3 months ago. If Los Angeles or any other city finds it impossible to rely upon and trust the law of the land then the Congress ought to go out of business for it would have no possible justification for existence.

With sincere and most cordial regards, I am,

HARRY P. CAIN.

Mr. President, we have before us this afternoon Senate Joint Resolution 207, which, if passed, will, in the light of the circumstances which I have presented to the Senate, continue an administrative agency which, in the opinion of a number of Senators, has been maladministered, and through which common, simple justice and decency have not been extended to American citizens everywhere.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. CAIN. If I may yield, I do so gladly.

Mr. WHERRY. Has the Senator discussed at this time the amendment he intends to offer to Senate Joint Resolution 207?

Mr. CAIN. No; for the reason that it had been agreed previously with the Senator from South Carolina that I would merely bring up the amendment and discuss it very briefly after 2 o'clock.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Washington has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. WHERRY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. A quorum is present. Under the unanimous-consent agreement, 20 minutes of debate is allowed on any amendment. No amendment is pending.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment and ask that it be stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of the joint resolution, it is proposed to insert the following new section:

SEC. 2. Section 204 (j) (3) of the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended, is hereby amended by inserting, before the period at the end thereof, a colon and the following: "Provided further, That as used in this act the term 'resolution' shall not be construed to be limited to ordinances or other legislative acts, and any resolution heretofore adopted by any local governing body is hereby declared to be effective for the purpose of this section 204 (j) (3) or section 204 (f) (1), whether or not such resolution was legislative in character; and no suit or action shall be brought under section 205 of this act, or any other provision of law, on the basis of any administrative decision or the decision of any court that the resolution described in this act must be a legislative act."

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, since April 1949, in approximately 1,000 cities, Federal rent control has either been terminated or continued to June 30, 1951, by findings of fact incorporated in resolutions adopted by local governing bodies. A circuit court of appeals has recently ruled that a legislative act is required for a city either to recommend an extension of 6 months of Federal rent control or to decontrol. The amendment which I have offered would do one thing, and only one thing. It would validate every action which has been taken by any city since April 1949, either to extend rent control or to decontrol. If the Supreme Court of the United States were to uphold the recent circuit court of appeals decision—I do not think that is likely, but certainly it is possible—it would throw before the courts of the land the property rights and all related questions of approximately 40,000,000 Americans. It is my understanding that the distinguished senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MAYBANK], the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, which favorably reported Senate Joint Resolution 207, is in support of the amendment. It is my hope that every Senator, even though he may decide to vote against Senate Joint Resolution 207 in any form, will support the amendment.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I merely wish to state that the explanation of the amendment given by the Senator from Washington [Mr. CAIN] is absolutely correct. I do not know—and he has stated that he does not know—what the Supreme Court will do. Members of the mayors' conference have discussed the subject with both of us. Both are former mayors of cities. Believing as I do in States' rights and rights of cities, I believe we should not vote against the amendment. Its adoption would leave the question where the present law leaves it, namely, on the shoulders of the local government. As chairman of the committee, I should like to state that the amendment meets with the approval of the committee.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, for the record I offer a resolution adopted by the National Institute of Municipal Law Officers on November 29, 1950, at the national conference in New Orleans, La., and I ask that it be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas Congress has by express direction placed the responsibility for extending or decontrolling rents in local governing bodies and expressly directed that the determinations of local governing bodies be expressed by resolution adopted in accordance with local law applicable to resolutions; and

Whereas the Housing Expediter has arrogated to himself the power to review the determinations made by local governing bodies by attacking the character of the hearings held and the character of the findings made despite the fact that Congress has not vested in the Expediter any discretion whatever; and

Whereas to bolster his position the Housing Expediter has stated he had grave doubts as to whether an ordinance or resolution is required despite the fact that 1,000 cities throughout the United States have followed the mandate of Congress and have expressed their determination as to rent decontrol or rent control by resolution as specifically directed by Congress in the Housing and Rent Act; and

Whereas the action of the Housing Expediter has resulted in thwarting the will of Congress and of city councils by casting doubts as to the validity of their action despite the fact that all these 1,000 cities have followed the express direction of Congress: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the National Institute of Municipal Law Officers direct the attention of the President of the United States and the Congress to the legal chaos which has resulted from an erroneous administrative interpretation of congressional language, the effect of which is to deprive cities of the power to make the determination of rent decontrol or rent continuance in the manner required by Congress; and be it further

Resolved, That the Congress of the United States be formally requested to reaffirm its requirements that city councils and not the Expediter make these rent decontrol or rent continuance determinations and that Congress reaffirm its intent that adoption of a resolution according to applicable local law is full and complete compliance with the requirements of the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended, in making the requisite finding of fact as to rent decontrol and rent-control continuance, and further that Congress be urged to declare that an ordinance is not required for such action by said act.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I wish to incorporate in the RECORD at this point the letter of Mr. Paul V. Betters, executive director of the United States Conference of Mayors, now meeting in Washington, who told me that he knew I would never go back on State or city rights on a short resolution which would be effective for only 2 months.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The decision of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit on November 24 last has thrown the whole rent-control situation into confusion. In spite of the patently clear provisions of the bill passed earlier this year the Court's decision in effect holds that all resolutions adopted by city councils in accordance with local law (for either decontrol or continuation up to June 30 next) are invalid. The court held only ordinances were legal.

Because of the very great possibility that the United States Supreme Court cannot act on the appeal before December 31, it would seem that the only way the situation could be met would be to add a proviso to Senate Joint Resolution 207 which is now before the Senate. I would most strongly urge that the resolution be amended in line with the attached memo in order to take care of this legal situation in which the cities find themselves as a result of the court of appeals' decision.

With best wishes always, I am,

Yours sincerely,

PAUL V. BETTERS,
Executive Director.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. CAIN].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, I call up my amendment 12–6–50–A, which I filed yesterday.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. At the end of the joint resolution it is proposed to insert the following new section:

SEC. 2. (a) Paragraph (1) of section 204 (b) of the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended, is amended by striking out "paragraphs (2) and (3)" and inserting in lieu thereof "paragraphs (2), (3), and (6)."

(b) Section 204 (b) of such act, as amended, is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(6) Notwithstanding any other provision of this act, the Housing Expediter shall promptly make a general adjustment in the maximum rents for all controlled housing accommodations so as to provide for fixing such maximum rents at the rate prevailing for comparable housing accommodations not under control, and he shall from time to time make adjustments for such relevant factors as he shall determine and deem to be of general applicability in respect of such accommodations, including increases or decreases in property taxes and other costs within the defense rental area."

Mr. FLANDERS. It is proposed also to amend the title so as to read: "Joint resolution to continue for a temporary period certain provisons of the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended, and to provide a more appropriate base for rental rates under such act."

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to modify my amendment by inserting additonal language. I shall read the amendment as I propose to modify it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair would suggest to the Senator from Vermont that the title of the joint resolution cannot be changed until the joint resolution is passed. Therefore it cannot be voted upon as part of the Senator's amendment.

Mr. FLANDERS. Very well. Section 6 of my amendment now reads:

(6) Notwithstanding any other provision of this act, the Housing Expediter shall promptly make a general adjustment in the maximum rents for all controlled housing accommodations so as to provide for fixing such maximum rents at the—

At this point I propose to insert—average of the rents prevailing during the months of April, May, and June 1950, for comparable housing accommodations not under control in the defense rental area, or in adjacent defense rental areas, or, if such comparable housing accommodations do not exist in the defense rental area, or in adjacent defense rental areas, for other comparable housing accommodations not under control—

Section 6 continues—

at the rate prevailing for comparable housing accommodations not under control, and he shall from time to time make adjustments for such relevant factors as he shall determine and deem to be of general applicability in respect of such accommodations, including increases or decreases in property taxes and other costs within the defense rental area.

Mr. President, I ask permission to make the change in my amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Vermont may modify his amendment at this time without unanimous consent.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. FLANDERS. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I understand the Senator has a right to modify his amendment at this time. As I understand, he is inserting the language which he read between the article "the" and the word "act" in line 1 of page 2.

Mr. FLANDERS. That is correct.

Mr. WHERRY. The rest of the language is to remain in the amendment.

Mr. FLANDERS. That is correct.

Briefly I wish to say that the purpose of my amendment is not to perpetuate the injustice of having one of the elements of the cost of living held down forcibly by the Government. As anyone can see by looking at page 3 of the current economic data sheet which was furnished to all Senators, the Government has deliberately, forcibly, and relentlessly raised another element in the cost of living, namely, that of food. The question, therefore, arises for our consideration whether the group of people in our country whose rates have been forcibly held down is composed of criminals, people who are beyond the limits of civilized society, and against whom every imaginable degree of governmental coercion is justified.

It would be a calamity, Mr. President, from the standpoint of justice, if the rent-control law which Congress intended to have end on December 31 were to perpetuate this injustice and be used as a psychological basis, if not as a legal basis, for a new rent-control law. The discrimination and injustice should be ended now, and that is the purpose of my amendment.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I shall not argue with the Senator from Vermont about the discriminations and injustices, because the Senator is generally correct. But 2 days after the President had signed the rent-control bill which Congress passed, the Korean attack came.

The only statement I have made is that I do not believe that the Congress has time, between now and the end of the present session, to change the law. When the new Congress meets we shall get busy right away writing a new rent bill.

The amendment of the Senator from Vermont provides that from time to time adjustments shall be made for increases or decreases in property taxes, among other things. We all know about taxes. Many communities have not even set their taxes for next year. How can adjustments be made in rents within a period of 2 months in communities where the taxes are not even set?

The Senator may well be correct in his statement about discriminations and injustices, but I do not think they can be removed by legislating on the floor of the Senate within the short time remaining in this session. No one has greater admiration for my distinguished friend, who is a member of the committee, than I have. We had never seen this amendment until it was offered on the floor. The Senator has himself modified his own amendment within the past 5 minutes.

Mr. FLANDERS. I modified it yesterday afternoon in my own mind, but have had an opportunity to present the modification only in the past 5 minutes.

Mr. MAYBANK. This is the first I have heard of the proposed amendment.

My good friend knows my affection for him. I did not know that the amendment was to be offered until he read it and sent it to the desk. We cannot on the floor of the Senate at the last minute legislate on the subject in question by an amendment to an amendment.

I am hopeful that the 60-day extension will be passed, with the amendment of the Senator from Washington [Mr. CAIN], who is eminently correct in his desire to protect the cities. But if we attempt to legislate on the floor of the Senate at this time as to what rents everyone shall pay, we shall find that it cannot be done. There have been 400,000 rental increases granted in the past 3 months.

Mr. President, I have nothing further to say.

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

Mr. FLANDERS. I should like to ask the Senator from South Carolina whether he does not feel that we can at least legislate not to extend an injustice.

Mr. MAYBANK. I thoroughly agree with the Senator from Vermont that we may have extended an injutsice by placing certain controls on rents, on automobiles, and on other things. I believe that we have extended an injustice by regulation W. The Senator labored long and hard in the Banking and Currency Committee last year to write a price-control bill, which we finally passed. I agree that there is an injustice, but I believe that to correct the injustice requires hearings in the new Congress.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Is it not a fact that the only basis on which the Banking and Currency Committee agreed to prompt action on the joint resolution, without hearings, was that we did not propose to change the existing law, but merely extend it for 60 days, to give the new Congress an opportunity to deal with the question?

Mr. MAYBANK. And leave it to the municipalities.

Mr. ROBERTSON. And leave it to the municipalities.

Mr. MAYBANK. The Senator is correct.

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

Mr. LEHMAN. I concur in what the Senator from Virginia has said. It has been my understanding that this was merely a resolution which would extend the provisions of the existing law for a period of 60 days, and that no new issue should be raised. Many of us feel that the present law, which is now being extended for 60 days, will bear improvement and amendments, but this certainly is not the time to propose or debate amendments or changes in the existing law.

Mr. MAYBANK. I may say to the distinguished Senator from New York that we should write a new law, based upon the defense requirements of the country and upon the needs of the wives and families of soldiers and sailors who are being taken. But we cannot do that here this afternoon.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, how much time is left for the proponents of the amendment

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Six minutes.

Mr. WHERRY. How much time is left on the other side?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina has 5 minutes and the Senator from Vermont has 6 minutes.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, when rent control was extended earlier this year, I was one of those who wanted to provide that we would not extend any rent controls unless the cities themselves expressly asked for such controls immediately.

However, what do we face now? We face a situation in which every family in America finds the price of food constantly rising. The price of clothing is running away; indeed, the price of almost everything is rapidly rising. During the past week the Banking and Currency Committee had before it nominees of the President to deal with price-control problems. Those nominees testified that it was almost impossible to do anything effective about runaway prices until the authorities can get the kind of help they need. It was said that tens of thousands of employees will be needed before anything can be done effectively.

Rents represent one of the major items of cost to the average family. We now have it under control. If this item gets out from under control, prices will start going up in this item also, adding another great force to the inflationary spiral.

Mr. MAYBANK. If any community in America wants to get out from under control, it can do so by resolution of the city council.

Mr. LONG. That is true at the present time, under the present law. The amendment made last year permits any city which wishes to remove rent controls to remove them. It seems to me that if we are to kill rent control, we ought to do it directly, and not by means of an amendment in the nature of a substitute which would kill it. This amendment would mean that rents on all controlled housing would be raised to the level of rents on housing which is not controlled. No one knows what it would mean to the people who are benefited by rent control at the present time. The theory of the joint resolution is that we ought to continue rent control until the new Congress has an opportunity to act. I believe that we ought to pass a measure which will do that, and not one which will kill rent control by means of subterfuge.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I think it would be very unfair to the committee to adopt amendments of this nature because it was well understood by both parties on the committee that we were extending the law as is. No fight was made on the joint resolution and no suggestion was made in committee for any kind of an amendment. I thought it was well understood that that was the only purpose.

I have not had the opportunity to study the amendment, and in principle it may be all right. However, I must vote against it on the grounds stated. When we come to write a new law, I am sure that this amendment will receive serious consideration. But I cannot vote for it under the circumstances which exist today, in view of the way in which the joint resolution was reported from the committee.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, in closing I wish to say only that I thoroughly agree with the thoughts and ideas of the Senator from Vermont. However, the amendment was not offered in committee. What we were considering in committee was a simple extension. If we adopt this amendment, probably other amendments will be adopted. I am hopeful that in the war emergency we can pass merely a 2 months' extension, based upon the rights of the municipalities, by resolution or ordinance, to do away with rent control or to continue it, as suggested by the amendment of the Senator from Washington, which was adopted by a voice vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont has 6 minutes left.

Mr. FLANDERS. I yield 4 of the 6 minutes to the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana is recognized for 4 minutes.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, we ought not to extend rent control unless our Government is going to control all prices and wages, for the simple reason that it is unfair and unjust to a great percentage of our people; and secondly, because this Congress promised, when we passed the last rent-control bill and gave the municipalities the right to extend it for 6 months, that it would die at the end of that time.

If we are to control prices and wages, and have general mobilization, we ought to have rent control. Otherwise, we ought not to have it. I shall vote for this amendment because I think it is a good amendment, in that it will permit some adjustments in rents over the next 60 days, if the joint resolution is passed. I am confident that at the end of 60 days a proposal will be made to extend rent control again, without price and wage controls. I am thoroughly convinced that if and when we do have price and wage controls, we must have rent controls. We must write a completely new rent-control law, based upon the realities of 1950 rather than the realities of 1940, because the present rent-control law, as Senators know, is based upon rentals existing back to 1940, or 10 years ago. They are unrealistic in the light of the increase in all costs, and the increase in wages during the past 10 years.

Therefore, I shall vote to permit the law to die on December 31. I shall vote for the amendment. If and when our Government invokes over-all price controls and rent controls, then I shall be the first to suggest that the Committee on Banking and Currency sit night and day and write a new rent-control bill based upon realities, and one that will be fair to the property owners of the Nation.

Mr. President, if the joint resolution is to become law and we extend the rent-control law I think the amendment should be adopted, because it will permit the Administrator of Rents to make some much-needed adjustments during the next 60 days.

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, I believe I have 2 minutes remaining.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is correct.

Mr. FLANDERS. I was somewhat disturbed, Mr. President, when the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT] indicated that I might be transgressing some tacit understanding. It is my recollection that I voted against the joint resolution in the committee. If I am wrong in that I should be glad to be set right. Having voted against it, my present situation is that I would vote for it if the amendment were accepted, so that the joint resolution would gain a vote thereby. I do not know whether that releases me from the tacit understanding, which was not clear in my mind, but nevertheless may have existed.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FLANDERS. I yield.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. As I recall, the Senator from Vermont was not present when the committee voted favorably to report the joint resolution. He must have registered his vote by telephone. I do not think he was present when the joint resolution was voted upon in committee. The members present, except for one member who voted against the joint resolution, said, "Well, this is just an extension." I myself would not have voted to report the joint resolution if there were going to be changes made in the law, because I could not tell the significance of those changes. We had no hearings at which persons who were actually affected testified. We heard no one other than the Administrator.

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, I agree completely with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART] that rent control must be a part of any general price control, and that we must address ourselves to it when that occurs. To my mind, no reason has been shown for extending this one of the price controls beyond the present date. There is every reason, from my standpoint, for not even by inference extending the injustice into the period when the new law is under consideration. I therefore ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time on the amendment has expired. The yeas and nays have been requested.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. MYERS. I announce that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BENTON] is necessarily absent.

The Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] are unavoidably detained on official business.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND] is absent because of illness in his family.

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN] is absent by leave of the Senate on official business, having been appointed a delegate from the Senate to attend the meeting of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association in Australia.

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY] is absent because of illness.

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON] is absent on official business.

The Senator from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN] is absent by leave of the Senate on official business as a representative of the United States to the fifth session of the General Assembly of the United Nations.

I announce further that if present and voting, the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BENTON], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY], and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] would vote "nay."

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I announce that the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON] is absent by leave of the Senate on official business, having been appointed as a delegate from the Senate to attend the meeting of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association in Australia.

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. JENNER] is unavoidably detained.

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. CARLSON] is absent by leave of the Senate on official business and is paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY], who is absent by leave of the Senate on official business of the Committee on Small Business. If present and voting, the Senator from Kansas would vote "yea," and the Senator from New Hampshire would vote "nay."

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] is absent by leave of the Senate.

The result was announced—yeas 29, nays 53, as follows:

So Mr. FLANDERS' amendment, as modified, was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Are there further amendments to be offered to the joint resolution? If not, the question is on the third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 207) was ordered to a third reading, and read the third time.

Mr. WILLIAMS subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the body of the RECORD, immediately preceding the final vote on the rent control joint resolution, a brief statement.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

I have repeatedly taken the position that rent control at a national level in times of peace is unnecessary, and with that thought in mind one of my first acts upon being elected to the United States Senate was to introduce a bill which would confer upon the States and local communities the responsibility of enacting and administering whatever controls over rents they felt were necessary.

Supporting that position I have consistently voted against rent controls at a national level and supported that position in the existing law which did confer upon the States and local communities the responsibility to provide for whatever control they felt necessary; and in the event they did not want rent controls, to give them the authority to decontrol their areas.

I am still supporting that position of administration at a State and local level; however, we are now confronted with this position—

Several of our States' legislatures, including the legislature of my own State, not foreseeing the outbreak of another war, failed to take any action conferring upon the local governments the authority to either extend or reject rent controls.

In practically every State in the Union the State legislatures are scheduled to convene after the first of January, at which time they will have a chance to review the question of whether or not rent controls in those States are needed in the face of war conditions, and if needed, to enact the necessary legislation.

It is true that under the existing law, even without this resolution, the local communities do have the remainder of the month of December to pass resolutions extending or rejecting rent controls; however, there are situations similar to one which exists in my State in which the county and certain local governments are not incorporated and therefore do not have the necessary authority to pass such resolutions without the enactment of the enabling legislation by the State legislature, which does not meet until after January 1, 1951.

Since these State governments have not had a chance to pass upon this question since the outbreak of the Korean War, I am going to vote for the resolution which extends to February 28, 1951, the period under which these State and local governments can decide what they need.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the joint resolution pass? The yeas and nays have already been ordered; therefore the Secretary will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

So the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 207) was passed.

AMENDMENT OF RAILWAY LABOR ACT

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 2263, Senate bill 3295, a bill to amend the Railway Labor Act, and so forth.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read by title.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 3295) to amend the Railway Labor Act and to authorize agreements providing for union membership and agreements for deductions from the wages of carriers' employees for certain purposes and under certain conditions.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Illinois.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare with amendments.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, this bill was considered by the Senate just prior to the adjournment in September. At that time the able Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL] attempted to convince the Senate that the bill should pass; but, because of the lack of time and the controversial nature of the measure at that moment, it was impossible for us to finish consideration of the bill and at the same time to adjourn on the day we did.

This is an important measure. It is my understanding that now most of the difficulties which, before the adjournment, existed between the various labor organizations, have more or less been resolved. So I hope we shall be able to conclude action on the bill this afternoon. We have been a long time reaching action on it. I am very happy that the bill is now before the Senate. I may say that it will remain before the Senate until we complete action on it.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. What is the best judgment of the majority leader as to whether there will be a vote on the bill this afternoon? I ask that question for the reason that one or two Senators have called me, stating that they would like to say a word or two about the bill, but that they would prefer to do so tomorrow, rather than today. However, I am not trying to hold up consideration of the bill.

Mr. LUCAS. I hope the Senator will not do so, because he knows very well the difficulty we have had in attempting to reach a vote on the bill.

Mr. WHERRY. Yes.

Mr. LUCAS. If Senators who desire to discuss this question continue with the discussion until 5 or 6 o'clock today, then of course we shall not reach a vote on the bill until tomorrow. However, if debate lags this afternoon, we shall vote on the bill today. We do not wish to have unnecessary delay.

Mr. WHERRY. I wish to cooperate with the Senator, of course. I have done my best to accommodate all Senators. However, if debate on the bill continues until 5 or 6 o'clock this afternoon and if at that time several Senators still desire to speak on the bill, I understand that the bill may go over until tomorrow for further debate and for the vote.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, I am speaking in behalf of my colleague [Mr. JENNER], who is absent from the Senate, and who will possibly return tomorrow. He has an amendment which he wishes to offer to the bill and which he wanted me to call to the attention of the Senate. It is an anti-discrimination amendment. He has asked that, if possible, the bill go over until such time as he can offer the amendment, either tomorrow or Monday. Because of his inability to present it himself, he has requested that I offer the amendment in his behalf.

Mr. LUCAS. I am very glad the Senator made the last statement. The Senator from Indiana well knows that the railroad bill has been before the Senate ever since Congress resumed its session on November 27, and the junior Senator from Indiana has not been present at any time. I do not believe that it is advisable to postpone the bill any longer. We have attempted to get in touch with him, as the senior Senator from Indiana well knows, and to advise him of this action. I am sure the senior Senator from Indiana will do a job on the amendment that will be equal to anything the junior Senator could do.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I desire it understood that I am only extending a courtesy to my colleague, who is unavoidably detained.

Mr. LUCAS. I understand that. I think the Senator will appreciate my position, also.

Mr. CAPEHART. Then, the Senator's position is that the bill cannot go over even until tomorrow, is that correct?

Mr. LUCAS. I may say that if some Senator desires to talk from now until 6 o'clock, whether on the amendment or on something else, obviously I am not going to hold the Senate here to get a vote on it.

Mr. CAPEHART. Would it be possible to get a unanimous consent to vote say Monday at a certain hour?

Mr. LUCAS. No; I do not want to enter into a unanimous-consent agreement. Let us simply let nature take its course on this bill. I think there will be plenty of debate on it.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. Is the majority leader prepared at this time to give us an idea of what may be proposed for consideration following disposition of the so-called railway labor bill? I am not trying to push the Senator, but to get information for all who are interested.

Mr. LUCAS. I had thought there might be some matter reported to the Senate by the Committee on Foreign Relations, dealing with aid to Yugoslavia. May I inquire of the distinguished Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] whether the Committee on Foreign Relations has reported any measures dealing with the present world emergency which should be taken up tomorrow? I was of the impression the committee was considering aid to Yugoslavia.

Mr. CONNALLY. We have reported one bill, which is ready for action.

Mr. LUCAS. Has it been reported, so we may take it up tomorrow?

Mr. CONNALLY. It has been reported.

Mr. LUCAS. May I inquire what the bill is?

Mr. CONNALLY. It is a bill to allow an appropriation of $38,000,000 for relief to Yugoslavia, because of the extreme drought in that area.

Mr. LUCAS. Would the Senator be in a position to take that up tomorrow?

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that the bill has not yet been reported from the committee.

Mr. LUCAS. That was my inquiry.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am informed by the clerk that the bill is here.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. The committee voted yesterday to report it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has not been actually reported.

Mr. LUCAS. I assume it can be reported this afternoon, undoubtedly.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is correct.

Mr. LUCAS. And if it is reported this afternoon, we shall be in position to take it up tomorrow. That is the measure we shall consider.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the majority leader.

EMERGENCY RELIEF ASSISTANCE TO YUGOSLAVIA—REPORT OF A COMMITTEE

Subsequently, Mr. CONNALLY said:

Mr. President, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, I report an original bill (S. 4234) to promote the foreign policy and provide for the defense and general welfare of the United States by furnishing emergency relief assistance to Yugoslavia, and I submit a report (No. 2588) thereon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be received, and the bill will be placed on the Calendar.

The bill (S. 4234) to promote the foreign policy and provide for the defense and general welfare of the United States by furnishing emergency relief assistance to Yugoslavia, reported by Mr. CONNALLY from the Committee on Foreign Relations, was read twice by its title, and ordered to be placed on the Calendar.

EXECUTIVE BUSINESS—CONFIRMATION OF PROMOTIONS IN THE ARMED SERVICES

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, as in executive session, I desire to make a request for the consideration of the majority leader. I should like to make a unanimous-consent request that I be allowed, in behalf of the Armed Services Committee, to submit a unanimous report on certain nominations involving promotions in the Military Establishment. We passed upon these nominations within the committee, and we should like to have them confirmed this afternoon, in order to save the printing expense of some $250, which it would cost to have them printed in the Executive Calendar.

Mr. LUCAS. Are these routine promotions?

Mr. MORSE. They are all routine promotions, and reported by a unanimous vote of the committee.

Mr. LUCAS. I have no objection, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, as I understand the Senator is asking the request as in executive session. Is that correct?

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I ask as in executive session that the Senate, by unanimous consent, confirm the nominations which the Armed Services Committee reports today, in respect to promotions of officers within the Military Establishment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. WHERRY. Reserving the right to object, I desire to ask one or two questions. I understood the Senator from Oregon to state that the nominations were unanimously reported, and that they are all routine and all military promotions. Is that correct?

Mr. MORSE. That is correct. They are all routine and they are all military.

Mr. WHERRY. Are there any civilians in the list?

Mr. MORSE. No; they are all military.

Mr. WHERRY. And is this request made merely in an effort to save printing expense?

Mr. MORSE. That is correct.

Mr. WHERRY. I have no objection.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, is the report of the Committee on Armed Services made by unanimous vote of the committee?

Mr. MORSE. It was unanimous, on both sides of the committee.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. MORSE. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. I could not distinctly hear what the Senator said. Does the request involve the nomination of an assistant to the Secretary of Defense?

Mr. MORSE. No; it does not. It involves, I may say to the Senator from Nevada, only military promotions of officer personnel.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request? The Chair hears none. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

AMENDMENT OF RAILWAY LABOR ACT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3295) to amend the Railway Labor Act and to authorize agreements providing for union membership and agreements for deductions from the wages of carriers' employees for certain purposes and under certain conditions.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, the Senate will recall that on September 23, the last day of the session before the Senate adjourned until November 27, the Senator from Alabama occupied the floor of the Senate and sought to give an explanation of the pending bill and the reasons why it should be passed. I do not know that it is necessary for me to reiterate what was said on that day. Senators will recall that this is permissive legislation, which simply permits railway management and railway labor, if they see fit, to enter into collective-bargaining agreements to provide for the union shop; that is, to provide that after a person has been employed by the railway for 60 days he shall then become a member of the union, provided, as I say, that such agreement has been arrived at and agreed upon as a result of a free collective-bargaining process.

It also provides that if the agreement is entered into, there may be a check-off provided the individual employee himself gives his consent in writing for the check-off, and the employee has a right at the end of 1 year's time, or at the termination of the particular agreement, to withdraw his consent to any check-off.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. HILL. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. I desire to ask a question for the reason that I was instrumental in holding the bill over during the session. I did so because of the lack of accord among the respective railroad brotherhoods. I understand there is now a somewhat different situation. I also understand that there is an amendment, which has been agreed upon. Am I correct about that?

Mr. HILL. I may say to the distinguished Senator from Nevada that the committee itself offered an amendment to the bill to provide that no railway employee could be required to belong to more than one union. Three or four of the railway brotherhoods were entirely satisfied with the amendment as proposed by the committee, and they did not favor passage of the bill when it was under consideration on September 23. Since that time the railway brotherhoods—at least 21 of the 22—have agreed on language which carries out the intent of the committee itself—that no railway employee should have to belong to more than one union. The amendment has been agreed upon by all the railway brotherhoods except one. That one is the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, and they find themselves in the position that, because of past action of some convention, they cannot agree. However, they are not in opposition to the bill at this time, if the amendment is adopted.

I may say to the distinguished Senator that the amendment is agreed to by the railway brotherhoods, the operating unions and the nonoperating unions, and it will be offered by the distinguished Senator from Ohio and myself at the proper time. As I say, the amendment carries out what was intended by the committee in the first instance, in offering the committee amendment.

Mr. McCARRAN. As I understand, it is not a part of the bill as the Senator is now discussing it. Is that correct?

Mr. HILL. That is correct, but we are going to ask that it be incorporated into the bill. If the Senator will permit, I was about to read a letter which yesterday was addressed to the distinguished chairman of the committee, the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], by the railroad brotherhoods, who were not in favor of the bill when it was under consideration on September 23. The letter is under date of December 6, and reads as follows:

Senator ELBERT THOMAS,
Chairman, Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR THOMAS: Please refer to previous communications from the undersigned railway labor organizations expressing opposition to the passage of Senate 3295, the so-called railroad union shop bill. If the attached proposed amendment—

That is the amendment which the distinguished Senator from Ohio and I shall offer—

If the attached proposed amendment is incorporated in the bill, the undersigned organizations are in favor of the enactment of S. 3295 and urge its adoption.

We understand that the railway labor organizations who have been urging the adoption of this bill also support this amendment.

Mr. President, parenthetically I may state that that is correct. Some 18 organizations which were urging the passage of the bill when it was before the Senate are agreeable to the amendment, and they would favor the bill with the amendment.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I do not wish to interrupt the Senator too much. Will he yield to me for a question?

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I should first like to read the names which appear on the letter. They are:

Jonas A. McBride, vice president, national legislative representative, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen; W. D. Johnson, vice president, national legislative representative, Order of Railway Conductors; Harry See, national legislative representative, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen.

That means, Mr. President, that all the railroad organizations are now supporting and urging the passage of the bill and the amendment. The amendment carries out the intent of the committee amendment. The amendment before us simply spells out the purposes in greater detail. The only ones who are not urging the passage of the bill are the members of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers. They are not opposing it. The chief of the brotherhood feels that in view of past action he is not now in a position to endorse the bill. However, he is not opposed to its passage.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HILL. Certainly.

Mr. McCARRAN. Does the Senator know what the attitude of the railroads is with reference to the proposed legislation? Is the Senator in a position to advise me in that respect?

Mr. HILL. So far as I know, there has been no concerted opposition registered on the part of the railroads.

Mr. McCARRAN. There was such opposition previously.

Mr. HILL. The chairman of the committee is present.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I believe at the hearings the railway management pretty generally were not in favor of the bill. Whether they are opposing it, I do not know.

Mr. McCARRAN. They were opposing it before Congress adjourned in September.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I think they were.

Mr. McCARRAN. They were very ardent in their opposition.

Mr. HILL. I was not a member of the subcommittee, and I did not hear the witnesses testify; I was not present at the hearing. But I think the chairman is correct and the Senator from Nevada is correct.

(At this point Mr. HILL yielded to Mr. CAPEHART for the purpose of making an insertion in the RECORD, which was ordered to be printed at the conclusion of the speech of Mr. HILL.)

Mr. HILL. I do not wish to delay the Senate any further except to say that the bill comes to the Senate with the unanimous favorable report of the members of the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare. All members of the committee support the bill and favor the amendments. The bill would grant to employees in the railroad industry a right which parallels a right already granted to employees in other industries under the Taft-Hartley law.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. HILL. I am glad to yield to my distinguished colleague from Florida.

Mr. HOLLAND. Is it not correct to say that the Taft-Hartley law includes a provision that nothing in that law shall be construed as authorizing the execution or application of agreements requiring membership in a labor organization as a condition of employment in any State or Territory in which such execution or application is prohibited by State or Territorial law, whereas such a provision is not included in the bill which is now before us?

Mr. HILL. The Senator is correct. The reason such a provision was not included in the bill is simply that it was the feeling of the committee that the railway industry falls squarely within interstate commerce. If there is one industry which falls squarely in the interstate commerce category, a field in which the Federal Government has the right and perhaps the duty to exercise jurisdiction, a right, which the States themselves have conferred on the Federal Government, it is the railway industry.

The Railway Labor Act now requires that the bargaining unit in matters affecting the relations between management and labor shall be a unit covering the entire railroad system. In other words, under the present law which we are now endeavoring to amend, it is impossible to have a bargaining unit for Florida, for example, and another bargaining unit for Georgia. It is necessary to have one bargaining unit for the whole railroad system involved in a particular question under consideration.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. HILL. I am glad to yield further to my friend from Florida.

Mr. HOLLAND. Is it not correct to say that the whole basis for the jurisdiction of the Taft-Hartley law and of the Wagner Act, which preceded it, is that it is predicated purely and simply upon its application to interstate commerce and that it is not applicable except to interstate commerce?

Mr. HILL. Of course it is predicated on interstate commerce. However, the Senator from Florida well recognizes the fact that the problems of some industries may fall to some extent within the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Act and other problems which may not in any way involve interstate commerce. Here we have an industry which with very few exceptions operates entirely in interstate commerce. I know of no railroad or airline in my own State, for example, which does not cross State lines or does not operate in interstate commerce. In other words, the operation is all in interstate commerce. I understand that the Senator from Florida has in mind a railroad in his State which operates wholly within his State. I believe I have traveled on the railroad. However, I think he will find that to be an exception rather than the rule.

Mr. HOLLAND, Mr. DOUGLAS, and Mr. PEPPER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield; if so, to whom?

Mr. HOLLAND. I should like to pursue my questioning a little further, if I may.

Mr. HILL. I am glad to yield further to my good friend from Florida.

Mr. HOLLAND. Is the railroad industry any more in interstate commerce than the telephone industry, the telegraph industry, or the motortruck industry, none of which are covered by the provisions of the pending bill, and all of which are covered by the provisions of the Taft-Hartley law with respect to provisions of State laws relating to anti-closed-shop laws?

Mr. HILL. The pending bill deals with personnel. It deals with the relationship between management and labor. So far as personnel is concerned, railroads are much more engaged in interstate commerce than are telegraph or telephone companies. When we pick up the telephone in Washington to make a call to Florida it does not involve any personnel moving out of the District of Columbia and going to Florida or to any other State. It does not involve any personnel crossing State lines. However, when a railroad train moves out of Washington on the way to Florida, personnel does cross State lines.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for one more question?

Mr. HILL. I am glad to yield further to my friend from Florida. Then I shall yield to my good friend from Illinois.

Mr. HOLLAND. While the remarks of the distinguished Senator from Alabama are, of course, correct when applied to the members of the operating brotherhoods, is it not also correct to say that the urge for the passage of the bill has not come from such brotherhoods, but has come from brotherhoods which have to do with clerical duties, repair, construction, maintenance, and similar personnel, which do not actually cross State lines in the performance of their duties?

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, the Senator wants to know whether the urge for the passage of the bill does not come from the nonoperating brotherhoods, rather than from the operating brotherhoods. I have just read a letter from the representatives of the operating brotherhoods which contains this language:

> The undersigned organizations are in favor of the enactment of S. 3295 and urge its adoption.

That is the urge. It is right there. I now yield to my good friend from Illinois.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Is it not correct to say that some 40 years ago a similar question developed with respect to railroad rates? At that time there was regulation of rates by some of the States and regulation of rates by the Interstate Commerce Commission. Is it not true that in the case of the Minnesota rate cases the Supreme Court, in one of its most conservative periods, namely, around 1910, held that the regulation of railroad rates was not a matter of State concern but a matter of Federal concern, and that rulings of the Interstate Commerce Commission superseded rulings of State regulatory bodies?

Mr. HILL. My information is that the Senator from Illinois is correct in his statement. That was 40 years ago.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. HILL. I am glad to yield.

Mr. DOUGLAS. It was at a time when the definition of interstate commerce was very much restricted.

Mr. HILL. The Senator is correct.

Mr. DOUGLAS. In the opinion of the United States Supreme Court Federal regulation superseded State regulation in the matter of rates. Would it not also be true that today the Supreme Court and the weight of legal opinion would hold that Federal regulation of labor relations should supersede State regulation?

Mr. HILL. The Senator is correct. The bill and the amendments come to us with the unanimous support of the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare. The provisions of the bill are merely permissive. They do not require any railroad or labor organization to sign a contract. It makes it permissive for management and labor to sit around the bargaining table and, if they can work out an agreement, it is lawful for them to enter into it. The bill now has the support of the operating Brotherhoods, as well as the support of the nonoperating Brotherhoods.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HILL. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. Let us assume—I think it is undisputed—that in the field of interstate commerce the Congress has power to exercise preeminent authority and judgment. Then it becomes a question as to whether Congress thinks it is wise, in a matter such as this, to let the Federal authority be preeminent, and to make it clear, under the Federal authority, that this power may be exercised by management and labor. The able Senator from Alabama feels that in relation to the railroads a clear case is made out for the reason he has indicated, that Congress should exercise its authority to make Federal legislation on this subject indisputably preeminent.

Mr. HILL. Not only has the Senator from Florida stated the views of the Senator from Alabama, but I believe that the Senator from Florida, as a member of the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, will agree that he has stated the views of the committee in this particular.

Mr. President, unless there is some further question, that is all I have to say.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HILL. I yield.

Mr. WILEY. I was interested in one phase of the question. I have been in contact with a number of laboring men. I talked with many of them during my campaign. I should like to know what the Senator's statement was in relation to the check-off, and whether that is compulsory. Some laboring men who have spoken to me, men who are good union members, have stated they do not like the system very well. The Senator said something to the effect that they must indicate in writing their choice, or their willingness or desire.

Mr. HILL. Let me read the language of the committee amendment which we shall submit. It provides for check-offs for dues, initiation fees, and assessments, not including fines and penalties. In other words, if some member violates a rule and a fine is imposed, the check-off does not apply. It applies only to normal dues and assessments. Then there is the following proviso:

> Provided, That no such agreement shall be effective with respect to any individual employee until he shall have furnished the employer with a written assignment to the labor organization of such membership dues, initiation fees, and assessments, which shall be revocable in writing after the expiration of 1 year or upon the termination date of the applicable collective agreement, whichever occurs sooner.

In other words, before a single penny can be deducted from the salary of the individual employee for the normal dues or assessments, he must give a written assignment to the company, so that it can pay that money to the union. Then he has the right, within a year, to revoke that assignment if he does not like the way it works, or if he wants to put an end to the deduction.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. HILL. I yield.

Mr. WILEY. I should like to ask one further question, in connection with the subject of collective bargaining. My understanding of the Taft-Hartley law provision is that the local union is practically autonomous. It may, of course, receive the benefit of the strength of the international organization, but if it desires to do so it can exercise practically autonomous power.

Mr. HILL. The Railway Labor Act, which is the basic act which we are now seeking to amend, provides that the bargaining unit in all labor-management relations shall be a system-wide union. In other words, for example, on the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad, the unit would have to be for the entire Milwaukee system. The law requires that today. We are not touching that provision. The law as now written provides for that.

The Senator may recall that the original act was passed by Congress in 1926. Important amendments were made in 1934. The law as it is now written, and as it has been written for a number of years, requires that the collective-bargaining unit shall be system-wide, to represent the particular craft or particular class of the entire railway system.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I should like to ask one further question. I notice that the Senator said that the bill had the endorsement of the large labor organizations. I am wondering if that is indicated by the signatures of the officials, or whether there is any evidence to substantiate that fact by showing that in convention a large group of the organization indicated their desire in the matter. Too often we find that officials arrogate to themselves the right to speak when they have not consulted their members.

Mr. HILL. I appreciate the Senator's point. There are 22 of these organizations. I am not sure that I can give the Senator offhand the answer to his question. As I remember, the distinguished Senator from Missouri [Mr. DONNELL] went into that question rather fully before the committee. The following is from the statement of Mr. George M. Harrison, grand president of the Brotherhood of Railway and Steamship Clerks, Freight Handlers, Express and Station Employees. Mr. Harrison says:

During the course of my testimony on May 1, Senator DONNELL requested that I furnish information as to what if any action was taken by the various railway labor organizations in connection with their approval of legislation to remove the prohibition against the union shop now contained in the Railway Labor Act.

Pursuant to the request of Senator DONNELL, I communicated with each of the organizations affiliated with Railway Executives' Association and submit herewith the results of that investigation.

On May 8, 1950, the Order of Railway Conductors of America, at its convention in Chicago, Ill., voted unanimously to approve action by that organization designed to remove the prohibitions against the union shop from the Railway Labor Act.

The Order of Railroad Telegraphers, at its convention held in Tampa, Fla., on June 20, 1949, unanimously approved a resolution authorizing a movement to seek the union shop in the railroad industry.

I was advised by the Switchmen's Union of North America that that organization has taken no formal action by convention on this subject.

The Railway Employees' Department, AFL, through which collective bargaining is carried on in the railroad industry by the International Association of Machinists, International Brotherhood of Boilermakers, Iron Ship Builders & Helpers of America, International Brotherhood of Blacksmiths, Drop Forgers, and Helpers, Sheet Metal Workers' International Association, International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Brotherhood Railway Carmen of America, and International Brotherhood of Firemen & Oilers held a meeting in Chicago, Ill., on April 3 and 4, 1950. This meeting was attended by 419 general chairmen, representing some 300,000 shop-craft employees in all of the crafts or classes represented by the organizations affiliated with the Railway Employees' Department on virtually all railroads of the United States. At this meeting the question of removing the prohibition against the union shop from the Railway Labor Act was discussed, and the assembled meeting unanimously approved the principles set forth in S. 3295.

I was advised by the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen that no formal convention action has been taken by that organization on this subject.

The American Train Dispatchers' Association unanimously adopted a resolution in its convention held in Chicago on October 16, 1944, requesting that the prohibition against the union shop be removed from the Railway Labor Act. I am advised by the president of this organization that this resolution has never been rescinded, and that the policy therein stated has continued to be the policy of that organization.

My own organization, the Brotherhood of Railway and Steamship Clerks, Freight Handlers, Express and Station Employees, adopted a resolution advocating the union shop at its Grand Lodge Convention held in May 1935.

At a meeting of all railroad and express general chairmen held in Chicago, Ill., September 18, 1942, a unanimous request was made to obtain union-shop agreements in the railroad and express agency industries. This action was subsequently ratified by the system committees on every railroad where we hold agreements. At a meeting of all officers and the general chairmen on all railroads with whom we hold contracts, held in Dallas, Tex., on April 25, 1950, the principles of the union shop were unanimously approved.

Does the Senator wish me to read this entire document? It is rather lengthy.

Mr. WILEY. No.

Mr. HILL. Would it be satisfactory to the Senator if I placed the remainder of it in the RECORD?

Mr. WILEY. That would be perfectly satisfactory.

Mr. HILL. It goes directly to the question which the Senator from Wisconsin has raised. As I stated, the distinguished Senator from Missouri [Mr. DONNELL] raised the same question at the hearing on the bill. This is an answer to the question of the Senator from Wisconsin, as it was an answer to the question of the Senator from Missouri. If agreeable to the Senator from Wisconsin, I ask that the remainder of the statement be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DONNELL in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The remainder of the statement is as follows:

The Brotherhood of Maintenance of Way Employees has unanimously approved resolutions requesting its officers to seek the union shop in the railroad industry at its conventions held in September 1937, July 1940, July 1943, July 1946, and June 1949. At a meeting held in Detroit, Mich., May 2–4, 1950, all grand lodge officers, general chairmen, and other system division and federation officers representing employees on all railroads with which that organization holds agreements, unanimously approved the movement to seek the removal of the prohibition against the union shop from the Railway Labor Act.

At the regular convention of the Brotherhood of Railroad Signalmen of America, held in New York City, August 17 to 21, 1942, a resolution was unanimously adopted authorizing the president of that organization to join in the movement of other standard railway labor organizations to establish the union shop principle in the railroad industry. This movement was the so-called Nonoperating Employees' Case, of 1942, which involved a request upon management to negotiate agreements for the union shop. The detailed plan of this movement was unanimously approved at the convention held by this organization in August of 1944, and has continued to be a policy of the organization.

The National Organization Masters, Mates & Pilots of America has taken no formal action at convention on this subject, but the long-established policy of this organization, which operates outside of railroad industry, has been to insist upon the closed shop or union shop in such outside industries. It has just recently concluded union shop agreements in industries other than the railroad industry.

The National Marine Engineers' Beneficial Association has taken no formal action at convention on this subject, but its general policy has been to advocate the union shop in all of its bargaining with employers outside of the railroad industry. I am advised that many of their local unions which represent railroad employees have taken action in support of a movement to amend the Railway Labor Act so as to permit the making of union-shop agreements.

The International Longshoremen's Association also operates outside of the railroad industry, and has followed the policy of the union shop in all of its dealings with outside industry, although it has taken no specific formal action in connection with amendments to the Railway Labor Act permitting the making of union-shop agreements.

The Hotel and Restaurant Employees and Bartenders International Union unanimously adopted a resolution at its convention held in Chicago, Ill., April 25–29, 1949, which recommended the establishment of the union shop in the railroad industry.

The Railroad Yardmasters of America Executive Board has unanimously approved the union shop. This board possesses authority to take such action between conventions.

In addition to the foregoing information, I should like to call attention to the fact that in 1942, the following organizations attempted to obtain a union shop on all railroads of the United States through negotiation with the various carriers:

International Association of Machinists.

International Brotherhood of Boilermakers, Iron Ship Builders, and Helpers of America.

International Brotherhood of Blacksmiths, Drop Forgers and Helpers.

Sheet Metal Workers' International Association.

International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers.

Brotherhood Railway Carmen of America.

International Brotherhood of Firemen and Oilers.

Brotherhood of Railway and Steamship Clerks, Freight Handlers, Express and Station Employees.

Brotherhood of Maintenance of Way Employees.

The Order of Railroad Telegraphers.

Brotherhood of Railroad Signalmen of America.

National Organization Masters, Mates and Pilots of America.

National Marine Engineers' Beneficial Association.

International Longshoremen's Association.

Hotel and Restaurant Employees and Bartenders International Union.

The authority to inaugurate this movement was approved by the general chairmen representing each involved craft on every railroad in the United States. These requests were denied by the carriers, with the result that the question was subsequently submitted to the so-called Sharfman Emergency Board, which denied the employees' request on the ground that "the essential elements of the union shop, as defined in the employees' request, are prohibited by section 2 of the Railway Labor Act."

Senator DONNELL also requested that I furnish the committee information as to the number of employees subject to the Railway Labor Act who are employed on Class 2 and Class 3 carriers. These carriers employ approximately 20,000 persons.

I was also requested by Senator DONNELL to furnish the committee with representative copies of agreements between the various organizations affiliated with Railway Labor Executives' Association and the railroads. I am enclosing copies of such agreements with this statement.

With the permission of the committee, I should like to take this opportunity to comment briefly on some of the testimony which has been submitted to the committee by those who oppose the enactment of this legislation.

It is obvious that much of the testimony presented by the opponents of this bill was either prepared in advance of the statement made by me regarding the purpose and intent of the bill as we understand it, or it was submitted without regard to the statements I made as to its intent and purpose.

The proposed bill contains the following proviso: "Provided, That no such agreement shall require such condition of employment with respect to employees to whom membership is not available upon the same terms and conditions as are generally applicable to any other member or because of membership in any other labor organization."

I advised the committee that it was the intent of the proviso, to remove from the requirements of any union-shop agreement those employees to whom membership is not available and those employees who might be expelled from the union for any reason other than the failure to pay their periodic dues, fees, and assessments. I stated this position in answer to questions asked me by members of this committee and informed you that if a union member is expelled from membership by the union for any reason other than nonpayment of his dues, fees, and assessments, he could continue working without regard to such expulsion after this bill is passed.

I also told you that if there is any ambiguity in the bill, as it is now drawn, we would be willing to have it amended to remove any doubt that nonavailability of membership in a union representing a craft or class of employees or an expulsion from membership in such union for any cause except nonpayment of dues, fees, and assessments, would not constitute a basis for the dismissal of such employee by the employer.

At this time I should like to submit for the consideration of the committee the following amendment to the bill:

Strike out the words "Because of membership in any other labor organization" appearing in lines 14 and 15 on page 2 of the bill and substitute in lieu thereof the following language: "With respect to employees to whom membership was denied or terminated for any reason other than the failure of the employee to tender the periodic dues, fees, and assessments uniformly required as a condition of acquiring or retaining membership."

This proposed amendment would make unnecessary the above clause we propose to delete inasmuch as the substitute wording includes all reasons for denial or termination of membership in a union, except the nonpayment of dues, fees, and assessments, which would, of course, include the denial or termination of membership because of membership in any other labor organization.

The proviso clause, if it is amended as I have suggested, would then read as follows: "Provided, That no such agreement shall require such condition of employment with respect to employees to whom membership is not available upon the same terms and conditions as are generally applicable to any other member or with respect to employees to whom membership was denied or terminated for reasons other than the failure of the employee to tender the period dues, fees, and assessments uniformly required as a condition of acquiring or retaining membership."

Mr. Loomis in his testimony suggested that as a technical matter the adoption of the bill would leave a direct conflict between the fourth and fifth paragraphs of section 2 of the present act and the provisions of the proposed paragraph "eleventh." I think an examination of the present act will disclose that such is not the case. The present law merely prohibits unilateral action by a carrier in requiring any person seeking employment to sign any contract or agreement promising to join or not to join any labor organization, and the provision with respect to the deduction of dues, fees, and assessments is one directed to unilateral action by the carrier. The bill before you modifies the present language only to the extent that the union shop and deduction of dues may be negotiated solely by agreement between the carrier and the designated collective-bargaining representative of a craft or class. The carrier would still be barred from deducting dues or entering into a union shop agreement with any individual, minority group, or union which does not hold a collective-bargaining agreement.

The amendment which I have suggested would clearly invalidate the criticism of railroad management witnesses who testified concerning the effect of union rules and regulations upon the job security or seniority of employees and the exercise of any arbitrary grounds for expulsion allegedly contained in any union constitutions.

It is thus our position that if a union refuses to accept an employee into membership or expels an employee from membership for any reason other than failure to pay or tender dues, fees and assessments due the union, his employment rights are in no way affected by a union-shop agreement which may legally be consummated between the carrier and the union. It follows, also, that if a member of the union is expelled from membership for any reason other than a failure to pay or tender his dues, fees and assessments, such an employee would continue as an employee of the employer, free of any obligation under the agreement, including the obligation to pay dues, fees, and assessments.

A substantial portion of the testimony of the witnesses opposing this bill was devoted to conjecture and speculation concerning its effect upon the railroad industry. The import of such testimony was that the impact of this legislation would be most grave and would create innumerable consequences of a most serious nature affecting not only the employees but the carrier. The fear was expressed that the union shop would discourage men from accepting employment in the railroad industry; that jurisdictional disputes would flourish; that there would be widespread loss of employment; that the promotion of employees would be made difficult; that individual freedom would be destroyed; that strikes and strike threats would be increased; that unions will exercise dictatorial and tyrannical power; and that seniority will be whimsically destroyed. In view of the fact that the union shop is permitted by law in all industries except those covered by the Railway Labor Act, I cannot believe that the arguments of the carriers have been seriously advanced. It must be obvious that the doubts and fears of the various witnesses opposing this bill are far less real than such witnesses would have you believe, and in actuality they have been tilting at windmills. I would like to examine a few of the problems which they contend will follow the creation of the right to bargain for a union shop in the railroad industry.

It was stated before this committee that it would be more difficult for carriers to obtain suitable employees if the bill should become law for the reason that prospective employees would not be interested in accepting employment if required to join a union. It is only upon the railroads and airlines that employees may not be subjected to the possibility of compulsory membership in a union. No testimony has been given that the managements of industries other than railroads and airlines have been unable to secure suitable employees to staff their plants and offices because the union shop is legally valid in those industries. This bill would place the railroads at no disadvantage compared to industry as a whole, but on the contrary would place the railroad industry upon the same footing as industry in general in competing for new workers.

Another threatened danger referred to by more than one of the carrier witnesses is the alleged possibility of an increase in jurisdictional disputes in the railroad industry. As a practical matter, however, the fact that all of the members of a craft or class may be required to join a union as a condition of employment will do much to discourage raiding by other labor organizations. The rivalry between unions will be decreased rather than increased by reason of the fact that the class or craft will be fully organized and all of its members will belong to the organization representing the members of such class or craft. At the same time the carrier witnesses were anticipating jurisdictional disputes as a result of validating the union shop they were testifying that this bill would result in labor monopolies and would freeze the present labor organizations as the bargaining representatives of the employees whom they now represent. It is strange to hear the same witnesses criticize the proposed amendment for the reason that it will encourage raiding (jurisdictional disputes) and at the same time encourage labor monopolies. It seems obvious that these two positions are completely contradictory. As a practical matter it has never been found that the union shop as it has functioned in industry in this country under the Wagner Act and the Taft-Hartley Act, has prevented the free choice of a bargaining representative by a majority of the employees represented by, or to be represented by, such bargaining agent.

It was intimated that there would be widespread loss of employment and that many employees would quit voluntarily with a resultant severe loss to the carriers. The intent of the bill as I discussed it previously and as it may be amended as I have suggested in this statement, should make it clear that it would not cause unemployment and loss of jobs. In fact, the initiative is entirely in the hands of the individual employees and it is only when he chooses not to become a member of the organization, or when having become a member fails to remain in good standing by making the financial payments required that he is subject to the loss of his job at the union's request. It is further an obvious fact that if an employee does choose to leave the railroad industry and enter another, that the provisions of the statute regulating labor-management relations in that industry will allow agreements for the establishment of a union shop, as does the proposed bill. We submit that the problem of the railroad industry in this regard is no different than that in any other industry.

It has also been prophesied that great difficulties will arise in the promotion of men who belong to a union and who are paying dues by means of a check-off. If a man is promoted to another craft, his dues would then, under the provisions of this bill, be paid to the organization representing that craft. Such a result is clearly in accord with the purposes of the bill, as I have previously outlined them, to eliminate free riders and provide that all members of the craft share the same responsibility in the cost of carrying on the processes of collective bargaining which inures to their benefit. One of the witnesses testified that most railroad officials have come up from the ranks. We doubt that the fact of union membership would prevent this democratic practice from continuing. As a matter of fact, I suspect that of all railroad officials who have come from the ranks the great majority have been, and perhaps many of them still are, members of labor unions. Apparently membership or nonmembership in a union has not in the past prevented the carriers from obtaining men of ability for official positions, nor has it prevented men holding union membership from receiving promotions. It is possible however, that the difficulty in the granting of promotions is but a disguised threat of discrimination. Testimony presented before this committee established not only that a substantial majority of employees were members of the unions, but that management did not know or concern itself whether or not an employee did or did not belong to a union. If the latter statement is true, it certainly follows that there will be no problem in the selection of men for promotion. The further argument that the promotion of men would be handicapped by the check-off is equally lacking in validity. When an employee is promoted to an official position and out of a class or craft represented by a labor organization, the deduction of his dues under the provisions of this bill would necessarily ceases.

It has been suggested to the committee that the seniority of an employee would be jeopardized or destroyed by the establishment of a union shop. This argument is clearly a "red herring." Seniority is but one of many conditions of employment. If an employee subject to a union-shop agreement voluntarily chooses not to join a union, it is not his seniority but his very job which he gives up. The decision, however, is that of the worker and not of the union; and if he should choose to give up his job rather than join the union, it is the result of action voluntarily taken by such employee.

The witnesses for the carrier who have voiced such doubts as to the future are not unaware that the union shop is allowed by express provision of Federal law in all industry except that covered by the Railway Labor Act. There is nothing new, unusual, or revolutionary in the union shop. The National Labor Relations Act, commonly known as the Wagner Act, passed in 1935, in the proviso clause of section 8 (3), made express provision for union security. Such express provision for the union shop, with some modification, was retained in section 8 (a) (3) of the Taft-Hartley Act, passed in 1947.

It should be needless to comment that the dire prophesies and gloomy forebodings of such witnesses as have opposed this bill before this committee were not documented to the experiences of industry in general under union-shop agreements. Conditions existing in industry are a far cry from the chaotic conditions predicted for the railroad industry and the union shop has been and is an integral part of the various laws regulating industry generally.

The carrier witnesses also complain that subordinate officials should not be subject to a union-shop agreement. The argument advanced is the same as that which was presented at the time of the enactment of the Railway Labor Act and the same that has been advanced before the Interstate Commerce Commission in those cases where the Commission has exercised its statutory authority under the Railway Labor Act. The objection of these witnesses is based upon the argument that supervisory employees should be exclusively loyal to management and not subject to union agreements covering their rates of pay, rules, and working conditions. The fact remains that representation of such employees by unions is traditional in the railroad industry and nothing new is being introduced by this bill. A large number of railroad employees in so-called supervisory positions have been represented for the purposes of collective bargaining by standard railway labor organizations for many years. I think it is safe to say without fear of contradiction that the subordinate supervision on the railroads is of the highest type and probably the most efficient of any industry. Chief clerks, section foremen, conductors, train dispatchers, and all of the many other subordinate officials covered by labor agreements are for the most part conscientious men and are as diligent and attentive to their jobs and their responsibilities as any men anywhere. There is no merit in the contention that a person who is compelled to work to earn his living as a supervisor cannot be loyal to his duty of supervision and still maintain a keen interest in his own compensation and working conditions. Experience has abundantly shown that the high type of supervision in the railroad industry has been secured and developed because of the insistence of the labor organizations representing such supervisors that these men be treated fairly and equitably with respect to their wages and working conditions, with the result that they are better satisfied and more willing to properly perform their supervisory duties. Most of these subordinate officials now belong to the unions which represent their respective class or craft and the establishment of a union shop will certainly not change or affect the thinking or the responsibility of men in such positions.

The only witness for the carriers who gave what we believe to be the real reason for the railroad opposition to this bill was Mr. Neff, president of the Missouri Pacific Railroad. He testified, in substance, that he was opposed to complete unionization of the industry because management counted on using the 226,000 unorganized employees as a balance wheel in the industry between labor and management. He wants to depend on those people who help manage the railroads effectively, and if they have loyalties to unions under their by-laws to the extent that they could be expelled from the union if they met with their displeasure or there was a conflict in loyalties the railroad has nobody to fall back on in conducting its own affairs properly. What Mr. Neff told you, in effect, is that he wants 20 percent of the workers on management's side of the table. That attitude is contrary to the whole spirit and intent of the Railway Labor Act. If there is anything that will destroy labor relations in the railroad industry, it will be an attempt on the part of the carriers to keep some of the employees out of the union for the purpose of maintaining undercover opposition to the objectives of collective-bargaining representatives. Unless we can have free, wholesome, and honest collective bargaining, we cannot settle our disputes. It is this kind of attitude which will sabotage the honest and proper representataion of workers. The Railway Labor Act provides that employees shall have the right to organize and bargain through representatives chosen by a majority of the craft or class free from interference, influence, or coercion exercised by the carrier. This provision was inserted in the act in order to assure free and untrammelled collective bargaining. Mr. Neff has made it clear that he believes that unionization of the industry would prevent the exercise of presently practiced interference, influence, and coercion. I compliment him for his honest statement of his position, but I vigorously disagree with his premise.

One brief comment should be made with respect to the testimony of Mr. Ramspeck who appeared here in behalf of Air Transport Association of America. His entire statement related to the proposition that the airline industry should be taken out from under the provisions of the Railway Labor Act, and I think it is clear from his statement that he did not appear in opposition to the bill now before you. If the airlines should be removed from the coverage of the Railway Labor Act, they would come under the Taft-Hartley Act, which permits the union shop. I merely wish to say that the suggestion of Mr. Ramspeck with respect to having the airline industry removed from the provisions of the Railway Labor Act is not germane to the question now before you. If the airlines desire to be removed from the provisions of the Railway Labor Act, the proper procedure would be to have a bill introduced, and to afford the interested parties a full and fair opportunity to present their views. I believe that the airline industry would regret the step which is suggests, but I do not think that question can be resolved here.

One of the witnesses before the committee referred to the request in 1942 of the non-operating unions that a union shop be established in the railroad industry. The witnesses quoted from the report of the so-called Sharfman Emergency Board which was issued on May 29, 1943. In order to keep the record straight and to be sure that the committee properly understands this report, we wish to point out that the report of the Board, in deciding the union-shop issue, showed "that the essential elements of the union shop as defined in the employees' request are prohibited by section 2 of the Railway Labor Act. The intent of Congress in this respect is made evident with unusual clarity." The basis of the decision of the Sharfman board, therefore, was that the request of the employees for the union shop could not be granted because of prohibitions in the law. It is these prohibitions which this bill proposes to remove.

In concluding my statement I should like to comment briefly upon the question which has been raised in this hearing with respect to the rights of members of the Negro race under this bill. While I believe that the conclusions which have been drawn by some of the witnesses are exaggerated, it appears that the bill now before you has assured all persons regardless of race, color, or creed that their job opportunities cannot be prejudiced by its enactment. No employee under this bill can have his employment rights affected in the slightest degree because of his race or color. I do not feel that this is the proper place to argue the justice or injustice of a denial of membership in a union because of race or color. I have already expressed my personal views on this subject to the committee and pointed to the fact that great progress has been made in the last few years in reducing these barriers to union membership.

My point is simply this: If the time has come when the Congress of the United States believes that compulsory fair employment practice legislation should be enacted, it should be accomplished through general legislation and in a manner which will accomplish the results sought to be obtained. I believe that since this bill completely protects the employment rights of those to whom membership in a union may be denied and since the enactment of this bill will in no way affect the existing rights of such employees, this is not the proper legislation into which a fair employment practice law should be written.

It is submitted that this bill with the amendment as suggested herein remedies the alleged abuses of compulsory union membership as claimed by the opposing witnesses, yet makes possible the elimination of the free rider and the sharing of the burden of maintenance by all of the beneficiaries of union activity. We most respectfully urge the committee to favorably report this bill with the clarifying amendments suggested herein.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, unless there are further questions, I shall yield the floor at this time.

During the delivery of the speech of Mr. HILL,

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a speech intended to be delivered by my colleague the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. JENNER] on his proposed amendment to S. 3295. I ask the Senator from Alabama to yield for that purpose.

Mr. HILL. I am glad to yield for that purpose provided that the statement and the insertion referred to will be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CAPEHART. I ask unanimous consent that the speech to which I have referred be printed in the body of the RECORD at the conclusion of the speech of the very able Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL]. I make the same request with respect to a copy of the proposed amendment.

There being no objection, the speech and the amendment were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SPEECH INTENDED TO BE DELIVERED BY SENATOR JENNER

Before you vote on the amendment which I have proposed to S. 3295, I want you to have a full and clear understanding of just what the aims and objectives of this amendment are. In order that you may have such an understanding it is necessary to explain as background the manner in which certain features of the present Railway Labor Act function.

Certain weaknesses and evils are present under the Railway Labor Act as it exists today, but the proposal contained in S. 3295 will accentuate these deficiencies in the act and make the evils more vicious, to the point that they should no longer be tolerated. These evils that I speak of are the result of the unregulated activities of the railroad labor organizations, and that is why I urge that these evils be corrected by the same piece of legislation that would strengthen them and give them greater power.

First, let me read the amendment which I am proposing. I want to read it, rather than paraphrase it, because very few of the words used in it are without particular significance. Each of the clauses in it is aimed at a specific evil so that if you listen carefully you will in effect get in summary form an outline of what is to follow. My amendment proposes the insertion of a new paragraph, twelfth, to read as follows:

"Twelfth. Notwithstanding any other provision of this act, or of any other statute or law of the United States, or Territory thereof, or of any State, any union, labor organization, or labor representative that segregates members into separate or auxiliary locals or excludes any member of the craft or class from membership therein on the grounds of race, creed, color, or national origin, or denies membership therein to any member of the craft or class upon terms or conditions not generally applicable to all members of the craft or class; or excludes any member of the craft or class from participation in the collective-bargaining process; or that uses its position as a collective-bargaining representative under this act to discriminate against members of the craft or class on the grounds of race, creed, color, or national origin; or that uses its position as such collective bargaining representative to bar the employment by the carrier of any person because of his race, creed, color, or national origin, shall not act as representative under this act of any craft or class, and shall not be entitled to any of the provisions of the act."

Under the Railway Labor Act as presently constituted, the majority of a craft or class has the right to determine the representation of the entire craft or class, and the railroad companies are forbidden to bargain collectively with any other organization or representative.

There is no specific provision in the act which compels the labor organization chosen by the majority as its bargaining representative to permit the minority workers to become members of such organization or otherwise to participate in the collective-bargaining process. Perhaps you might think that in democratic America it would not be necessary to have statutory compulsion in a matter of this kind. However, without any such statutory compulsion we find many of the railroad labor organizations guilty of the rankest sort of discrimination against Negro employees. In the case of certain of these organizations there are constitutional provisions which bar Negroes from membership. In the case of certain of the other railroad labor organizations Negroes have not been barred from membership altogether but have been required to become members of auxiliary locals that operate under a white local. Membership in auxiliary locals allows the Negroes only indirect, inadequate, and pro forma participation in the affairs of the union. Negroes working in the classes or crafts represented by such unions hold their jobs by sufferance rather than as a matter or right.

I protest against such a situation not because nonmembership amounts to discrimination from a social standpoint but because such discrimination amounts to the deprivation of rights which we are accustomed to think belong to all citizens of the United States. The nonmember Negro minority is given no notice or opportunity to be heard or chance to vote on propositions affecting the class or craft. Negroes have no voice in the choosing of agents of the Union who formulate the policies and carry on the collective bargaining; no means of censoring, removing, or otherwise controlling these union agents, and are thus wholly precluded from any and all participation in the collective-bargaining process.

Many years ago Americans expressed in an unmistakable way what they thought of taxation without representation. It seems to me the situation here is much worse than that. The rates of pay, the working rules, and the conditions under which these employees must work are all determined for them by an agent for whom they have no right to vote and to whom they have no right to protest.

There are a number of instances in which a labor organization acting in its capacity of bargaining agent for Negro railroad workers whom it does not admit to membership has bargained away seniority and other valuable property rights of those employees. In several instances the employees have managed, through court action, to obtain a correction of the injustices done them, but such a means of correction is uncertain, expensive, and slow.

The exclusion of Negroes from certain railroad labor organizations creates another situation which need only be explained in order to make its unconscionable nature stand out clearly. Under section 3 of the Railway Labor Act, the National Railroad Adjustment Board is set up, composed of an equal number of members selected by the carriers and by the labor unions. For example, Division No. 1 of the Adjustment Board consists of 10 members, 5 of whom are selected by the carriers and the other 5 of whom are selected one each by five railroad brotherhoods. Every one of these five brotherhoods has a Negro color bar. Suppose, for instance, that a Negro employee working in a craft or class represented by one of these five organizations felt that he had a grievance as a result of a bargain entered into by the carrier and the railroad labor organization representing his craft. In this situation the judges who would sit in judgment on his grievance would be the representatives of the very parties who were responsible for the acts out of which the grievance arose. It seems perfectly clear that an inequitable and unjust situation already exists in this respect.

The above is the situation which exists under the Railway Labor Act as presently constituted, and certainly it is bad enough, but by this proposed legislation the situation for these men would be made even worse. The union shop provides an additional weapon for the unions and will give the labor organizations additional incentive to intensify their efforts to eliminate the Negroes from certain jobs on the Nation's railroads. If you pass Senate bill 3295 without the safeguarding amendment which I have proposed, you must be willing to accept the responsibility for facilitating the elimination of Negroes from a basic industry in America.

I am more and more impressed with what a large gap there is between the political promises of the Democratic Party to wipe out discriminations against the Negroes in matters having to do with employment, and the actions of that party. Let me read to you from a statement by the head of the Democratic Party, the President of the United States. The following is from the message of the President of September 6, 1945, transmitting an outline of the plans made for the reconversion period. I quote:

"During the years of war production we made substantial progress in overcoming many of the prejudices which had resulted in discriminations against minority groups.

"Many of the injustices based upon considerations of race, religion, and color were removed. Many were prevented. Perfection was not reached, of course, but substantial progress was made.

"In the reconversion period, and thereafter, we should make every effort to continue this American ideal. It is one of the fundamentals of our political philosophy, and it should be an integral part of our economy."

The President speaks of the prevention of discriminations against minority groups and the removal of injustices based upon considerations of race, religion, and color, as an American ideal and one of the fundamentals of our political philosophy. Those are high-sounding words, but will you judge the Democratic Party by these well-turned phrases of their leader or by its actions when put to the test? It is the leaders of this same party who are opposing my amendment and who are doing their utmost to keep from eliminating a clear-cut discrimination against a minority group and to keep from removing an injustice based upon the consideration of color.

Listen again to the words of the President of the United States in his message of February 2, 1948, transmitting his recommendations for a civil-rights program:

"We in the United States believe that all men are entitled to equality of opportunity. Racial, religious, and other invidious forms of discrimination deprive the individual of an equal chance to develop and utilize his talents and to enjoy the rewards of his efforts.

"Once more I repeat my request that the Congress enact fair employment practice legislation prohibiting discrimination in employment based on race, color, religion, or national origin. The legislation should create a fair employment practice commission with authority to prevent discrimination by employers and labor unions, trade and professional associations, and Government agencies and employment bureaus."

Thus the President says that he wants to eliminate discrimination by labor unions, but when his party comes face to face with an opportunity to eliminate discrimination by labor unions in the industry in which it is most firmly entrenched, namely, the railroad industry, the leaders of that party are not willing to match words with action. I would not be surprised if an attempt were made to defeat my amendment without a record vote. In this way the individual members of that party would hope to escape censure for their indefensible action.

However, there can be no question as to where the blame will properly lie if my amendment be not adopted. My amendment offers the first opportunity for a vote on a legislative proposal to eliminate a distinct area in which discrimination is practiced strictly on the ground of color. The railroad labor unions are opposed to my amendment, and they have urged the leaders of the Democratic Party to defeat my proposed amendment. I have long suspected two facts: (1) That the Democratic Party is not truly interested in the welfare of the Negro race; and (2) that the Democratic Party is subject to domination by labor unions. I suspect that when it comes down to a question of eliminating an instance of serious discrimination against Negroes or following the dictates of the labor union leaders, the Democratic Party will follow the latter course.

Much of what I have said goes to show why an amendment such as the one I have proposed would be entirely appropriate even if there is no union-shop bill, but if the Congress is to enact a bill such as S. 3295, it is absolutely unthinkable that they should do so without simultaneously enacting an amendment such as the one I have proposed. This bill, as you know, would authorize unions to enter into agreements with their employers requiring as a condition of continued employment that all employees shall become members of the labor organization representing their craft or class. This means in the event of such an agreement that if an employee wishes to continue in the employment of the railroad he would be compelled to join the union regardless of his desire in the matter. On the other hand, the unions would be at perfect liberty to refuse to admit to membership any employee they saw fit to exclude, regardless of the wishes and desires of that employee. It is difficult for me to understand how the Congress would even consider sacrificing the freedom of the individual to join or not to join a union and at the same time protecting the right of a union to discriminate against employees whose economic fate and livelihood are completely under its control. If a railroad labor organization is to be endowed with such standing that it can require any employee working in the class or craft represented by the labor organization to become a member of the organization in order to hold his job with the employer, certainly such labor organization should be required to admit all employees to membership without discrimination in any way, shape, or form.

Why should labor organizations be treated with such reverence? What is there that entitles them to the added strength and power which would be conferred upon them by the union shop, when they are not even willing to live up to our American ideal of fair play and nondiscriminatory treatment? Conferring upon railroad labor unions the authority which would be given by S. 3295 without imposing the requirements of my proposed amendment would be an act of subservience to the labor unions that I hope not many of the Members of this body will be guilty of.

In conclusion, I urge you to consider carefully the full import of my proposed amendment and to vote for its adoption.

No. 1. On page 3, line 8, it is proposed to insert new paragraph twelfth to read as follows:

"Twelfth. Notwithstanding any other provisions of this act, or of any other statute or law of the United States, or Territory thereof, or of any State, any union, labor organization, or labor representative that segregates members into separate or auxiliary locals or excludes any member of the craft or class from membership therein on the grounds of race, creed, color, or national origin, or denies membership therein to any member of the craft or class upon terms or conditions not generally applicable to all members of the craft or class; or excludes any member of the craft or class from participation in the collective-bargaining process; or that uses its position as a collective-bargaining representative under this act to discriminate against members of the craft or class on the grounds of race, creed, color, or national origin; or that uses its position as such collective-bargaining representative to bar the employment by the carrier of any person because of his race, creed, color, or national origin, shall not act as representative under this act of any craft or class, and shall not be entitled to any of the provisions of the act."

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I only wish to add my plea to that of the Senator from Alabama that the bill be passed.

In effect, the bill inserts in the railway mediation law almost the exact provisions, so far as they fit, of the Taft-Hartley law, so that the conditions regarding the union shop and the check-off are carried into the relations between railroad unions and the railroads. I believe that those provisions have worked satisfactorily under the Taft-Hartley law. I feel that they would work well in connection with the Railway Labor Act. In response to a question from the unions, I have stated to them that I thought those provisions would work well in the railroad labor law.

I objected to some of the original terms of the bill, but when the proponents agreed to accept amendments which made the provisions identical with the Taft-Hartley law, I was willing to concur in those amendments. Those amendments have been worked out. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL] and myself have joined in offering the amendments. When the amendments are agreed to, I hope the bill may be passed.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. HOLLAND. In speaking of the fact that the provisions of the new law, with the amendments suggested by the Senator from Ohio and his colleagues, would be identical with the provisions of the Taft-Hartley law, the Senator did not intend, I am sure, to give the impression that the law would, even with the amendments proposed here contain the provision of the Taft-Hartley law respecting and giving effect to the provisions of the State constitutions and State statutes in those States which have provided by one means or the other that employment in any industry or the continuation of employment therein shall not depend upon membership or nonmembership in a union? The Senator did not intend to give that impression, did he?

Mr. TAFT. No. I did not make the adoption of that provision of the Taft-Hartley law a provision of my agreement to the changes before us.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, unless Senators desire to discuss the bill further, I ask that the Senate proceed to consider the committee amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DONNELL in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will state the first committee amendment.

The first amendment was, on page 2, line 10, after the word "representing", to strike out "the" and insert "their."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same line, after the word "class", to strike out "of such employees."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 15, after the word "or", to strike out "because of membership in any other labor organization" and insert "with respect to employees to whom membership was denied or terminated for any reason other than the failure of the employee to tender the periodic dues, initiation fees, and assessments uniformly required as a condition of acquiring or retaining membership."

Mr. HILL. With respect to that committee amendment, I wish to offer an amendment on behalf of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] and myself which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 20, after the word "assessments" and before the word "uniformly", it is proposed to insert "(not including fines and penalties)."

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I think the amendment on the face of it is self-explanatory. It means that the words "periodic dues, initiation fees, and assessments" shall not in any way be construed to include "fines and penalties." In other words, the only basis upon which a union can deny an employee of a railroad the right to join a union is if he does not pay his dues, initiation fees, and assessments. The committee wants to make it plain that dues, initiation fees, and assessments do not include fines and penalties.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL] on behalf of himself and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] to the committee amendment.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, I would have no objection to the adoption of that amendment except for the possible effect upon an amendment I have submitted, which is printed and has been lying on the table since September 13. I believe my amendment should properly be offered as an amendment to this particular amendment. However, I am not anxious to do so unless that is necessary in order to protect the right to have my amendment considered. In other words, I do not want to interfere with the committee amendment or the amendment offered thereto, which is being considered, provided I fully preserve my own right and the right of other Senators who are interested in my amendment, to have it considered on its own merits at a later time.

Mr. HILL. I will say to the distinguished Senator from Florida that from my examination of the Senator's amendment I certainly know of no reason why it should not be offered later. I realize, however, that it may be in the form of an amendment to the committee amendment now. But speaking for myself, it raises a question which is entirely different from the committee amendment, although that may be the place where it should be offered. Certainly I would raise no objection or make any point if the Senator were to see fit to offer his amendment at a later time. Let it be offered then and be determined on its own merits if the Senator desires.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, in order not to interefere in the slightest with the amendment now pending, if the Senator from Alabama will yield to me for the purpose, I should like to ask the unanimous consent of the Senate that the amendment to which I have referred, which in effect protects the rights of the States which by constitutional provisions or by statutory enactments have provided that employment in any industry in their jurisdiction shall not be dependent upon membership or nonmembership in a labor organization, may be offered after the consideration of the pending amendment, without prejudice, and that it shall be regarded as being in order at that time.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator include in his request that his amendment be considered after consideration of the committee amendments? We have other committee amendments to consider.

Mr. HOLLAND. I shall have no objection provided it may be unanimously agreed that the amendment may be in order at that time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I do not object to the unanimous-consent request. My feeling is that the Senator from Florida has that right anyway. Does he not?

Mr. HOLLAND. I may say to the Senator from Alabama and the distinguished minority leader, that I have just been advised by the Parliamentarian that the adoption of the amendment now being considered would probably make out of order my amendment, to which I have referred, unless the unanimous-consent request be agreed to, and that otherwise I would have to offer it as an amendment to the pending amendment, which I do not wish to do unless it becomes necessary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous request of the Senator from Florida [Mr. HOLLAND]? Hearing none, it is so ordered.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL] on behalf of himself and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The remaining committee amendments will be stated.

The amendments were, on page 3, line 1, after the word "agreements", to strike out "with such carrier or carriers"; in line 2, after the word "deduction", to insert "by such carrier or carriers"; in line 4, after the word "and", to strike out "pay" and insert "payment"; in line 5, after the word "representing", to strike out "such" and insert "the"; in the same line, after the word "employees" to insert "of"; and in line 6, after the word "dues", to insert "initiation."

The amendments were agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That completes the committee amendments.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from Ohio and myself, I offer another amendment at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 3, it is proposed to strike out lines 6 and 7 and insert "any periodic dues, initiation fees, and assessments (not including fines and penalties), uniformly required as a condition of acquiring or retaining membership, Provided, That no such agreement shall be effective with respect to any individual employee until he shall have furnished the employer with a written assignment to the labor organization of such membership dues, initiation fees, and assessments, which shall be revocable in writing after the expiration of 1 year or upon the termination date of the applicable collective agreement, whichever occurs sooner."

On page 3, after subparagraph (b) it is proposed to insert the following:

(c) The requirement of membership in a labor organization in an agreement made pursuant to subparagraph (a) shall be satisfied, as to both a present or future employee in engine, train, yard, or hostling service, that is, an employee engaged in any of the services or capacities covered in section 3, first (h) of this act defining the jurisdictional scope of the first division of the National Railroad Adjustment Board, if said employee shall hold or acquire membership in any one of the labor organizations, national in scope, organized in accordance with this act and admitting to membership employees of a craft or class in any of said services; and no agreement made pursuant to subparagraph (b) shall provide for deductions from his wages for periodic dues, initiation fees, or assessments payable to any labor organization other than that in which he holds membership: Provided, however, That as to an employee in any of said services on a particular carrier at the effective date of any such agreement on a carrier, who is not a member of any one of the labor organizations, national in scope, organized in accordance with this act and admitting to membership employees of a craft or class in any of said services, such employee, as a condition of continuing his employment, may be required to become a member of the organization representing the craft in which he is employed on the effective date of the first agreement applicable to him: Provided, further, That nothing herein or in any such agreement or agreements shall prevent an employee from changing membership from one organization to another organization admitting to membership employees of a craft or class in any of said services.

(d) Any provisions in paragraphs fourth and fifth of section 2 of this act in conflict herewith are to the extent of such conflict amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama desire that the two amendments be considered en bloc?

Mr. HILL. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendments will be considered en bloc.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, these amendments are the amendments agreed upon by the railroad brotherhoods. They are the amendments to which I alluded earlier. With their adoption, the railroad brotherhoods urge the passage of the bill.

The amendments do nothing more nor less than what the committee desires to do, and what was the intent of the committee in offering its amendment, that no employee of a railroad should be required to belong to more than one labor organization. The only difference between the committee amendment and the amendments now before the Senate, which have been agreed upon by all the railroad organizations, is that the amendments now before the Senate spell out in much more detail the purposes of the committee amendment than did the committee amendment. But the intent and the purpose of the committee amendments and the amendments now before the Senate are exactly the same.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments, en bloc, offered by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL], on behalf of himself and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT].

The amendments, en bloc, were agreed to.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HILL. I yield.

Mr. WILEY. Do I correctly understand that the amendments which have just been adopted en bloc are, in their content, substantially the same as the provision in the Taft-Hartley law?

Mr. HILL. No, I cannot say that. The amendments deal solely and entirely with railroad employees and go to the question that no man working for a railroad shall be required to belong to more than one labor organization. That is the whole intent and purpose of the amendments, and it is written out in detail, because of the fact that railroad employees are divided into operating unions and nonoperating unions. What the amendments do is simply to spell out the one proposition that no employee of a railroad shall be required to belong to more than one union. The Senator realizes that in an operating union a man may be a brakeman today and may be promoted to be a conductor tomorrow, and he may be a conductor for 30, 60, or 90 days, and then he may be dropped back to be a brakeman again. He might be a fireman today; but tomorrow he might be promoted to be an engineer. He might then serve for 90 days or 120 days as an engineer, and then he might be demoted to fireman. In the railroad industry there is a peculiar situation which perhaps does not exist in any other industry. The only purpose of the amendment is to make sure that a person employed by one of the railroads does not have to belong to more than one union.

Mr. WILEY. In other words, in substance the amendment coincides with a similar provision of the Taft-Hartley Act; is that correct?

Mr. HILL. I would say so; yes.

Mr. WILEY. Does the Senator have another amendment? I wish to make sure, because I have listened very carefully to the Senator's remarks.

Mr. HILL. No; the other amendment is the one the Senator alluded to earlier.

That is the amendment with reference to the check-off. That amendment has also been agreed to.

Mr. WILEY. That amendment contains provisions similar to the corresponding provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act; does it not?

Mr. HILL. That is correct. The amendment provides that a railroad employee cannot have a check-off of his wages without his written consent.

Mr. WILEY. I wish to have it made clear also that all the railroad unions the Senator has mentioned have considered the amendments which are similar in content to the corresponding provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act, and that they have approved them, as the Senator has indicated today.

Mr. HILL. They have approved these amendments; yes.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at this point?

Mr. HILL. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. Do all the employees in the various branches of the railroad labor organizations approve this bill as it has now been amended?

Mr. HILL. I do not believe the Senator was able to be on the floor a short time ago when I answered a somewhat similar question which was asked by the Senator from Wisconsin. I read to the Senate, in part, the testimony as to that question which Mr. Harrison had given before the subcommittee. His testimony showed that in some cases conventions had acted on this matter; in other cases, meetings called had acted on it; but in all cases some official spokesman who was speaking for them was urging the adoption of this proposed legislation, with the exception of the spokesman for one of the railroad labor organizations.

As I said earlier, there are 22 railroad labor organizations; and with one exception, namely, the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, those organizations approve of this proposed legislation. The one exception, the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, did not oppose the bill; but the head of that organization does not feel that he is authorized to endorse the bill.

Mr. WHERRY. The amendments which have been adopted were offered after the committee held hearings, as I understand. Were the amendments submitted in order to satisfy objections raised by any groups of railroad employees?

Mr. HILL. The truth of the matter is that the amendments were submitted not only to satisfy the objections of various branches of the railroad brotherhoods, but also because some of the committee members felt that the amendments should be adopted.

Mr. WHERRY. I wish to ascertain for the RECORD whether the adoption of these amendments makes the measure, as now amended, more acceptable to the various branches or groups of the railroad employees.

Mr. HILL. The adoption of these amendments means that 21 of the 22 railroad labor organizations not only favor the bill, but urge its passage with the amendments as adopted. The twenty-second group or organization is not in a position to act on this measure, because the head of that organization says he does not have the authority to do so. However, that organization is not opposing the bill.

Mr. WHERRY. The Senator is speaking of the railroad organizations operating under the Railway Labor Act, is he?

Mr. HILL. That is correct.

Mr. WHERRY. So only one of those organizations has not approved the bill, and that organization does not disapprove it. Is that correct?

Mr. HILL. That is correct.

Mr. WHERRY. With these amendments written into the bill, will that one railroad labor organization be more receptive to the enactment of the bill than it would have been if the amendments had not been adopted?

Mr. HILL. Yes; I can say that organization would be. I give it as my opinion, for whatever it may be worth that if the head of that organization had felt he had the authority, he would have approved the bill. He simply does not believe he has the authority to act in the premises.

Mr. WHERRY. The Senator says, as I understand, that the first amendment, which was being discussed when I entered the Chamber, provides that a member does not have to belong to more than one union. Is that correct?

Mr. HILL. That is correct.

Mr. WHERRY. That is because of the example the Senator gave, namely, that often a fireman will move up to the job of engineer, but later will return to the job of fireman. Is that correct?

Mr. HILL. That is correct.

Mr. WHERRY. Does any employee have to belong to a union?

Mr. HILL. He has to belong to a union if the collective bargaining agreement which has been worked out provides that those who work for the railroads shall within 60 days join a union.

Mr. WHERRY. That is similar to a provision of the Taft-Hartley Act.

Mr. HILL. Yes. However, there is nothing in this measure which would compel any railroad to enter into any collective-bargaining agreements. This measure simply removes a prohibition now in the law against such bargaining agreements.

Mr. WHERRY. I understand that; but I wish to find out what is mandatory about the bill. The railroad workers who come under this provision of the bill will have to belong to a union, but to only one union. Is that correct?

Mr. HILL. That is correct—to only one union.

Mr. WHERRY. Is that now required under the Railway Labor Act?

Mr. HILL. No; it is prohibited now. That is what we are getting away from by means of this bill. It is to remove that prohibition against a union shop that this bill is now before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, at this time I offer the amendment to which I have previously referred, and I ask that the amendment be read. Following the reading of the amendment, I shall ask that the yeas and nays be ordered on the question of agreeing to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 1, in line 8, it is proposed to strike out "or Territory thereof, or of any State".

On page 2, line 21, it is proposed to strike out the comma, insert a colon in lieu thereof, and the following: "Provided further, That nothing in this paragraph shall be construed as authorizing the execution or application of agreements requiring membership in a labor organization as a condition of employment in any State or Territory in which such execution or application is prohibited by State or Territorial law."

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, I now ask that the yeas and nays be ordered on the question of agreeing to this particular amendment, when the time is reached for voting on the amendment at the conclusion of the arguments about it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are two amendments. Does the Senator from Florida wish to have the yeas and nays ordered on each of them separately or on both of them jointly?

Mr. HOLLAND. I should like to have both of them voted on at one time, and to have the yeas and nays ordered on both of them, when voted on in that way, unless there is a request to have the amendments voted on separately.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendments will be voted on en bloc.

The Senator from Florida has asked that the yeas and nays be ordered on the question of agreeing to the amendments. Is there a sufficient second?

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I should like to make a request, if the Senator who has the floor will yield to me for that purpose.

Mr. HOLLAND. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. It is now quarter to 4. I do not know how long the distinguished Senator from Florida will speak. However, inasmuch as the yeas and nays have been ordered on his amendments, and inasmuch as a quorum call will be required before the vote is taken on them—and I think that should be done, inasmuch as a number of Senators are not now in the Chamber—I appeal to the managers of the bill, if this debate lasts much longer, to let us vote on the bill at a time when it will be possible to have a rather full attendance of the membership of the Senate. After all, it is now rather late in the day to have a quorum call and to get most Members of the Senate present to vote on the bill.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. HOLLAND. I yield.

Mr. HILL. The distinguished Senator from Illinois indicated very strongly, I think, that the debate would run along for a time, and that if it lasted until somewhat late in the afternoon, we would take a recess until tomorrow, and not vote today on the bill.

Mr. WHERRY. I appreciate that. However, in view of the fact that the yeas and nays have been ordered on the amendments of the Senator from Florida, I submit that the consideration of having a quorum call should be given to all Senators.

Now that there is to be a yea-and-nay vote on the amendments of the Senator from Florida, I respectfully submit that, if possible, we should either remain here and vote on the bill today, or else we should order a quorum call to be had tomorrow, in order to give due regard to having as many as possible of the Members of the Senate present to record their votes.

Mr. HOLLAND. So far as I am concerned, Mr. President, I am perfectly willing to accede to whatever decision the two leaders reach on that point. I expect to speak for perhaps an hour or a little longer, but I plan to speak only once.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, if the Senator from Florida will further yield——

Mr. HOLLAND. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I do not care how long Senators debate this measure this evening; but if they are willing to agree now as to a time when the vote shall be taken tomorrow, by unanimous consent, those of us on this side of the aisle are prepared to vote on that question.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, the Senator from Florida has said that he expects to speak for an hour or so. In the meantime I expect the majority leader to return to the Chamber, and then he will be able to participate in the discussion regarding the matter the Senator from Nebraska has mentioned.

Mr. WHERRY. In view of the fact that the yeas and nays have been ordered, I think the vote on these two amendments should be taken tomorrow.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, and Members of the Senate, reference was made a moment ago by one of the Senators participating in the colloquy to the fact that two amendments now have been proposed by me. Although that is true as a formal matter, yet the two amendments actually comprise one amendment in their intent and meaning.

In order to call attention at this time to the text of the amendment I am offering, I ask, first, that the entire amendment be printed at this point in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the amendment was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

On page 1, line 8, strike out the following: "or Territory thereof, or of any State."

On page 2, line 21, strike out the comma, insert a colon in lieu thereof, and the following: "Provided further, That nothing in this paragraph shall be construed as authorizing the execution or application of agreements requiring membership in a labor organization as a condition of employment in any State or Territory in which such execution or application is prohibited by State or Territorial law."

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, I now call attention to the fact that the first portion of the amendment reads as follows:

On page 1, line 8, strike out the following: "or Territory thereof, or of any State."

By adverting to the printed copy of Senate bill 3295, it will be discovered that this particular amendment applies to the provision of the bill appearing in lines 6, 7, and 8, on page 1 of the printed bill, which reads as follows:

Notwithstanding any other provisions of this act, or of any other statute or law of the United States, or Territory thereof, or of any State.

The omission of the words "or Territory thereof, or of any State," as proposed in the first part of the pending amendment, would simply make the provision which I have just quoted, from S. 3295, read as follows:

Notwithstanding any other provisions of this act or of any other statute or law of the United States—

And so forth. It would thus limit this measure in its provisions which apply to other laws entirely, so that it will provide only that, notwithstanding other provisions which appear in this act, or in any other statute or law of the United States, alone, not including laws of States or Territories—excluding the mention, therefore, of other provisions of State or Territorial legislation, as was included in the measure as produced by the committee.

In other words, that part of the amendment would simply dovetail with the later portion of the amendment, which seeks by its terms to write into this measure the exact provision now appearing in the Taft-Hartley law which preserves and respects and confirms the force and effect of constitutional or statutory measures in any State or Territory under which it is provided that it may not be legally prescribed as a condition of employment or of continued employment that any worker shall have to be either a member or not a member of any labor organization.

The second portion of my amendment specifically writes into the bill, or would write into the bill if it would, the exact words out of the Taft-Hartley Act, which now provide as a part of that act and as a part of the law of the United States—and at this point I quote:

That nothing in this paragraph shall be construed as authorizing the execution or application of agreements requiring membership in a labor organization as a condition of employment in any State or Territory in which such execution or application is prohibited by State or Territorial law.

Mr. President, it has been stated rather loosely upon the floor of the Senate—and I have no desire at all to impugn the motives of anyone, because I think it has been entirely clear by subsequent statements that the statements were not meant to go as far as they appeared to go in the beginning—that the pending measure, if adopted, would write into the Railway Labor Act the specific provisions of the Taft-Hartley law as it now exists, with reference to the subject of the union shop and the check-off. That, of course, is not exactly correct, unless there be added, by the adoption of the amendment now proposed, a provision in the Taft-Hartley law which preserves and confirms and retains within the jurisdiction of the several States or Territories the effect of their several constitutional and statutory requirements banning the so-called closed-shop or union-shop condition, either of them, as a condition for legal employment.

I want to make that abundantly clear before we go further—that we are not seeking to write into this law by the amendment now proposed anything unknown to the law; to the contrary, we are trying to make this law, if this amendment which I propose does become law, exactly like the Taft-Hartley law in this particular portion or in the application of the provision of this particular portion of the Taft-Hartley law and the field now covered by it.

I call attention to the fact that in all the debates connected with passage of the Taft-Hartley law and in the adoption in the Senate, though not by the Congress, of amendments of the Taft-Hartley law last year, 1949, the great majority of the Senate specifically held by its vote, not on one occasion but on several occasions, that they felt that it was sound public policy to continue in force and effect and to preserve and to confirm within the several jurisdictions that had so prescribed as a matter of sound State or Territorial policy the principle that membership or nonmembership in a union should never be prescribed as a condition of employment or of continued employment. We, a great majority of the Senate, specifically continued that provision throughout every discussion and debate and vote which we have taken in the consideration of the Taft-Hartley bill originally and in the consideration of the proposed amendments which were voted last year, 1949, in the Senate, but which never became law.

I call attention at this time to the last time that this particular provision was debated in the Senate. It will be found in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of June 30, 1949. The part of the debate which bears on this point appears in the RECORD of that date at pages 8694 to 8713, inclusive. It is unnecessary at this time to quote extensively from that debate, but I do want the record of this particular debate to recall the fact that that was the last time this particular item was debated. I should like at this time to ask unanimous consent to insert at this point in my remarks the list of yea-and-nay votes, found at page 8712 of the RECORD of June 30, 1949, showing the vote of 53 to 41, by which this provision was retained, respecting and confirming the State constitutional and statutory provisions on the subject of the closed shop or the union shop in the provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act. I ask at this time that the list of the yeas and nays appearing in column 3 on page 8712 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of June 30, 1949, be printed at this point as a portion of my remarks.

There being no objection, the list of the yeas and nays was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The result was announced—yeas 41, nays 53, as follows:

Yeas—41: Aiken, Anderson, Baldwin, Douglas, Downey, Flanders, Graham, Green, Hendrickson, Hill, Humphrey, Hunt, Ives, Johnson, Colo., Johnston, S. Not voting—1: Ellender.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, I do not intend to labor the question which is now before us, or to speak at undue length on this measure. It seems to me, though, that it is a matter of complete necessity that the Senate, in considering this question of a proposed amendment to the Railway Labor Act, consider also the positions which it has taken upon a similar act, the Taft-Hartley Act, which is predicated incidentally upon the interstate commerce clause, and which applies incidentally only to transactions and employments in interstate commerce; and to remind Members of the Senate of the action which we have heretofore taken, and which we have heretofore insisted upon in numerous debates of that particular provision, and to remind Members of the Senate that the taking of a contrary position here would simply invite attention to the fact that we discriminate between the class of workingmen, covered by the pending amendment and by the Railway Labor Act, and those other workmen also engaged in interstate commerce, who are covered by the provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act.

I may say it seems rather clear to me that if by this amendment the Senate should incorporate the requirement that anticlosed and antiunion shop declarations of State and Territorial laws shall not be observed, that the Senate and the Congress and the people, employers and workmen and the general public, may with confidence expect an insistent demand in the near future for the taking of similar action cutting out of the Taft-Hartley Act the specific requirements of that act, which would then be completely contradictory of the provisions which we would write into the Railway Labor Act if we should adopt the committee amendments, without adding thereto the amendment which I am proposing at this time.

Mr. President, to make that point doubly clear, may I recall to the public the fact that while railway employees are of course engaged in interstate labor and interstate commerce, that, as to that portion of the railway employees who have been insistently urging the passage of this bill, namely, those who work as clerks or clerical employees, and those who work as maintenance-way employees and those who work in the shops and in the various other places, other than as operating members of train crews, that their residence within States is just as fixed relatively speaking as is the residence of any other class of employees in any class of industry covered by the Taft-Hartley Act. I recall to the Senate and to the country the fact that when this measure was being debated in September of this year, the Senate at that time was served with notice by the large operating brotherhoods, by formal communications appearing over the signatures of the officials of those brotherhoods, that they wanted to indicate their opposition to enactment of this measure at that time, but that we were visited with an urgent and even an insistent request from the heads of some of the other organizations, including organizations such as the organization of clerks, the maintenance-way organizations, and the shop organizations, as a rule—we were faced with requests from them for the enactment of this particular legislation. There is no reason at all why they should be any more exempted from the declarations of the States and Territories on the subject of anti-closed-shop provisions or anti-union-shop provisions or both, than in the case of the motor-vehicle employees, many of whom are actively and actually engaged in interstate commerce, which takes them from State to State, or employees of the telephone, telegraph, or radio, who are certainly engaged in employment, the effect of which is to know no State lines and to cross those State lines on every conceivable occasion as an incident of their employment.

If exceptions be made to the rule, which I think is a sound and salutary rule, and which has been heretofore adopted and adhered to closely by a majority of the Senate by our insisting on the preservation and recognition and giving of full force and effect to constitutional and statutory declarations of the several States on this important subject, we shall find ourselves confronted with having taken completely inconsistent positions and with having invited a demand for the rescission, cancellation, and repeal of those portions of the Taft-Hartley Act which do specifically confirm and respect the provisions of State and territorial laws and constitutions on this subject.

Mr. President, insofar as the State of Florida is concerned as a Senator from Florida I deem it to be my duty to invite the attention of the Senate to the provisions of laws of our State which run counter to any proposals which are advanced on the floor of the Senate, and at least to let Senators have the information as to what are the provisions of law within the State of Florida which would be cancelled by the enactment of proposals pending in Congress.

On this particular point I read from section 12 of the State Constitution of Florida the provision which was adopted by referendum of our people. Whether or not any particular citizen or individual in the State of Florida desires it to be so or not, it is now part of our fundamental law in Florida, just as it is a part of the fundamental law or statutory law of some 20 States from the Pacific to the Atlantic. The provision of our constitution reads:

> The right of persons to work shall not be denied or abridged on account of membership or nonmembership in any labor union or labor organization, provided that this clause shall not be construed to deny or abridge the right of employees by and through a labor organization or labor union to bargain collectively with their employer.

Mr. President, it seems to me that that is a fair proposition. The people of our State thought it was fair and wrote it into our constitution in a referendum which was addressed to the sound judgment of the voters of our State.

Incidentally, Mr. President, there have been several efforts made since that time to repeal that portion of our constitution which was adopted in the general election, as I recall, of 1944. However, without variation the legislature of the State has by overwhelming majorities refused on several occasions to submit to the people any measure which would have in effect abridged, repealed, or amended this provision of our State constitution.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will my colleague yield for a question?

Mr. HOLLAND. I am happy to yield.

Mr. PEPPER. Does my colleague have in mind any case on the subject, or does he have any opinion as to whether the provision allowing collective bargaining between labor and management in Florida under that provision of the Constitution would preclude a collective bargaining agreement regarding a union shop?

Mr. HOLLAND. I believe no case on that point has been decided by either the Supreme Court of the United States or the Supreme Court of Florida.

Mr. PEPPER. I do not recall any.

Mr. HOLLAND. My recollection is that decisions have been rendered on the subject by courts of lesser importance, all of them upholding the clear wording of the constitutional provisions. I understand further that effort was made to appeal at least one of such decisions to the Supreme Court of the United States. However, as I recall, the Supreme Court declined to exercise jurisdiction on the ground that it felt the constitutional provision should first be construed by the Supreme Court of the State of Florida. That is my recollection of the history of the subject up to this time. I may say, however, that quite similar provisions have been brought before the Supreme Court of the United States in three cases which were decided last year. I shall not attempt to quote the decisions for the RECORD unless it becomes necessary to do so. The three cases affect provisions of the statute law of North Carolina and constitutional provisions in Nebraska and Arizona. In going into this subject in detail in 1949, on the occasion when we were debating it, I found that the Supreme Court had upheld by unanimous decision the validity of one of those constitutional provisions. My recollection is that it was the constitutional provision of the State of Nebraska. It is also my recollection that the Supreme Court had upheld by a similar unanimous decision the statutory provision of the State of North Carolina, and that it had upheld by an 8-to-1 decision the constitutional provision of the State of Arizona, which latter constitutional provision did not go as far as does the constitutional provision of the State of Florida in making clear that complete and even-handed justice is done. I invite the attention of my colleague to the fact, as is well known to him, I am certain, that in the constitutional amendment adopted in the State of Florida we protected not only as against a requirement of membership in a union, but also as against a requirement of nonmembership. To quote again the provision of our constitution, it reads:

> The right of persons to work shall not be denied or abridged on account of membership or nonmembership in any labor union or labor organization, provided that this clause shall not be construed to deny or abridge the right of employees by and through a labor organization or labor union to bargain collectively with their employer.

Again going back to the Arizona case, my recollection is that the reason on which one justice of the Supreme Court—and as I recall, it was the late Mr. Justice Murphy—declined to approve the constitutional provision of the State of Arizona was, to the best of my recollection, the fact that it was not completely even-handed, in that it did not apply to conditions which were equally applicable to membership or nonmembership in union. In other words, the provision was directed only against membership in unions. The late Mr. Justice Murphy in his dissenting opinion found such a provision to be not even-handed justice. However, his opinion was only one out of nine opinions. The other eight Justices upheld even that more one-sided approach to the problem in the Constitution of the State of Arizona.

Therefore, it is amply clear that the Supreme Court of the United States has not only upheld such constitutional requirements, but has upheld them with a unanimity which is rarely found in the membership of our Supreme Court in this day.

As I recall, the decisions made it very clear that this was a matter properly addressed to the sound policies and sound judgment of the people of the respective States as to whether or not they should or should not adopt as a part of their law, whether statutory or constitutional, anticlosed shop or antiunion shop provisions.

As I recall, one or more of the decisions went out of its way to say that those who complained of such a law must remember that they have a perfect remedy. That remedy does not lie in the courts, but in the people and in addressing their petition for a change to the people of the several States or the legislatures of the several States, or both, as the case may be.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. HOLLAND. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. If the Senator cares to do so, I should like to have an expression of his opinion as to whether the right to bargain collectively would carry with it the right to bargain and enter into a contract, if agreeable to management, pursuant to that bargaining, which did provide a union-shop provision similar to that which would be permitted here.

Mr. HOLLAND. I was not a member of the legislature which debated at length the subject matter of the amendment. Nor did I participate in the rather heavy debates which took place in the State prior to the election, inasmuch as I was serving as the chief executive of the State. However, it is my clear recollection that both in the debates on the floor of the Legislature of Florida and in the debates which preceded the referendum election in which this amendment was adopted it was made very clear that the inclusion of this particular provision referred to by my colleague was for a single purpose, and that was to make it completely clear that there was no thought in the minds of those submitting the amendment to inhibit collective bargaining or to prevent collective bargaining except in that one particular which is prescribed in the earlier part of the amendment. Therefore my answer to my colleague would be that, basing my opinion upon the debates at that time, both in the legislature and before the public, it was made crystal clear that the provision would not give to collective bargainers the authority to violate or ignore the earlier provisions of the amendment. Instead, the earlier provisions of the amendment were intended to be mandatory upon our people, and the last portion of the amendment was included simply to give assurance that there was no disposition to prevent membership in a labor union or a reliance upon collective bargaining, except insofar as the earlier portion of the amendment may have provided for the governance of relations between employers and employees in the State of Florida.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, if my colleague will yield further, I believe that the interpretation just given by my able colleague is the correct one. If he will yield further, I should like to ask him if any of the three cases in the United States Supreme Court to which he has referred, upholding constitutional or statutory provisions in States, involved a field in which Congress had asserted a paramount authority to regulate the subject? Did any of those cases involve the question as to whether the act of Congress was valid, or whether the State constitutional or statutory provision would take precedence?

Mr. HOLLAND. I will say to my colleague that in none of the three cases mentioned had the Congress asserted Federal jurisdiction. So far as the junior Senator from Florida is concerned, it is his belief and understanding of the law that the Federal Government—the Congress or the Federal Government acting through the Congress by the enactment of a law—has the complete right to go into a field which lies in interstate commerce, under the interstate commerce clause, and to preempt that field by the enactment of Federal legislation. That point was very fully argued during the various earlier occasions when this question was debated in the Senate. It was discussed during the debates on the Taft-Hartley Act, both in connection with the passage of the original act and in connection with proposed amendments to the act or repeal of the act. As I understand, in every case it was admitted by all lawyers participating that the Congress and the Federal Government are certainly not without authority to assert themselves in this field, and that if they so assert themselves in this field, as to all that assertion which covers interstate commerce, they are certainly on sound ground, and that their preemption of that field would be of such a nature as to exclude the operation of State law within the same field. I believe that is the point to which my colleague was addressing himself, and I believe that his understanding of that situation and mine are entirely the same.

We come back, therefore, to the question as to whether or not it is sound Federal public policy at this time to enact the proposed law without including in it the same safeguards—the same sort of preservation of State law—as we have very carefully included within the Taft-Hartley law. Even at the time of the proposed amendments to that law we insisted again upon the continued inclusion of that provision.

On the question as to what is sound policy, it is my position that there is no difference between the situation which we are discussing here, governing, as the junior Senator from Florida understands, only those who are in interstate commerce in the railroad industry and in the aviation industry and the situation with respect to persons in the quite similar industries covering the fields of radio, television, telephone, telegraph, motor transportation, and other fields of law which, without question, are in their most general application interstate commerce in its fullest sense.

In closing this part of my discussion, I merely wish to call attention—unless my colleague has further questions—to the point that it is just as proper for the Congress to make this reservation in the enactment of this law as it was to make such a reservation in the enactment of the Taft-Hartley law. In the opinion of the junior Senator from Florida it is just as necessary to do it now as then, unless we are to take the position that there is no value in a sound expression of public policy by a State or Territory in a matter of this kind, which commands such respect and which is of such dignity as to require the Federal Government, in its sound discretion, to continue in operation that expression.

I invite the attention of Senators to the fact that this does not govern simply the question of employment or nonemployment of a particular individual, or in any particular industry. It is a very grave and far-reaching expression of sound public policy, in the discretion and judgment of the people of a sovereign State, that as to people living within such State, and as to people engaged in business within such State, people who are either members of unions or who might become members of unions in that particular field, there shall be no discrimination in employment based upon the question of either membership or nonmembership in a labor organization. It is an exceedingly vital matter to every citizen whether or not he has the right to seek and to receive employment.

I believe that the type of expression of sound public policy which is contained in these amendments and in these statutes goes a great deal further than merely covering the field of organized labor. To the contrary, it runs to the question as to whether or not, in the sound judgment of the people in the State or territory which is affected, there is a sufficiently valid claim or a right on the part of every citizen to have such employment as he is equipped to do, free to him if he can gain it on his merits and his ability to discharge the duties and requirements of the employment, and free from any condition which would be harmful to him or to his chance of employment or continued employment, based upon either his membership or nonmembership in a union organization.

Eighteen or twenty States have, by most dignified declarations of their own sound public policy, indicated adherence to this principle. Such declarations have, I repeat, been recognized by the United States Supreme Court. There are three decisions which are not only far reaching but characterized by an unusual degree of unanimity.

That principle has been recognized by the Congress of the United States, both in the passage of the Taft-Hartley law and in the consideration of proposed amendments, as well as the proposed repeal of that law. Such an expression has been regarded as so sound an expression of the local electorate, the very people who are affected, the people who live within the jurisdiction which lays down that condition as one of the rules of living within that jurisdiction, that it should be respected.

We have respected it in the passage of the Taft-Hartley law, and the Supreme Court of the United States has respected it in two decisions unanimously, and in another one nearly unanimously, because of the fact that they felt that such a dignified expression of the people within a particular jurisdiction should be recognized always unless and until the Federal Government moves legally into that field, which the Congress of the United States has in this case specifically refused to do.

Mr. President, with reference to the field covered by this bill, I wish to remind the Members of the Senate—and I would appreciate it if those few Senators who are present would give attention to this particular remark—that those who are covered by the Railway Labor Act are already given unusual distinction among all the groups of people engaged in gainful employment throughout the United States, in that there have been extended to them from the very beginning, under the terms of the Railway Labor Act, certain provisions and certain conditions which have been denied to others, presumably on the ground that they are a highly responsible group of people, presumably on the ground that they are much more responsible in carrying out their obligations to the general public than in the case of some other industries, or other industries in general.

Under the provisions of the original law, enacted, as I recall, in 1926, and of the amendments to that act, it has been declared from time to time as the law of the United States that the injunctive privileges shall not be extended in this field, even when we were extending that privilege to other fields, which were in the category of vital industries, vital to all our people throughout the United States. In the enactment of the Taft-Hartley law we still excluded, by specific provision contained in that law, those who were covered by the terms of the Railway Labor Act. So that they have unusual recognition, they have unusual rights; they have unusual responsibilities.

Having read, not this year, but last year or the year before, perhaps, some of the hearings and some of the debates at the time of the enactment of the original act, and the earlier amendments to it, I may say that I was struck by the fact that it was perfectly clearly set forth in many instances that it was the leaders of railway labor themselves who were admitting their responsibility to the general public, who asked that no closed-shop or union-shop provision should be imposed in the act, who asserted over and over again that there was, in the case particularly of the operating brotherhoods, a clearly fraternal relation between the members of those organizations, and that they preferred to stand upon the ground—and I wish they were still standing on that ground—that they did not want to gain members by coercion or compulsion, but by the rendition of such service, by the adoption of such high standards of conduct and performance, that they would attract to their membership all those engaged in the operating classifications, at least, because they were offering something that was distinctly worth while.

I should like to refer to the letter that was offered today, if the Senator from Alabama will give me a copy of it. It is dated December 6, 1950, which was yesterday. I believe it is shown by a consideration of the debates and a consideration of the hearings in this field of railway labor that these great and highly beneficial brotherhoods—and they are just that—have uniformly contended that they did not want to stand upon the principle of compulsion or coercion, that instead they wanted to appeal to people who were good people, and who were engaged in their particular employment because of the high standards of their own membership, and the high standards of service to which they devoted themselves.

Mr. President, that is indeed high ground, and I am only sorry that high ground is not taken at this time. Before I close that point, let me say that I have always understood, in talking with many, many members of these organizations, that they wanted always to retain the veto right, that they wanted always to have a right not to admit to their membership—which, as I have said, was largely fraternal membership, as well as a business association of people working in the same industry—those who they thought were unworthy from a moral standpoint, or from any other standpoint. I believe indeed that under the terms of the proposed amendment they insist upon preserving—and I am glad that they do insist upon preserving—the right to admit or not to admit applicants, dependent upon whether they regard them as qualified morally, qualified from the standpoint of their services as performed, to claim membership in their organizations.

I see the Senator from Alabama on his feet, and if he has any questions to ask, I shall be glad to yield to him.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, the Senator referred to a letter, and said perhaps that was the first time that some of these unions had expressed themselves in favor of a union shop, or the right to bargain collectively for a union shop. If the Senator will examine the hearings, he will find that on May 4 last, during the hearings, Mr. Harry See, representative of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, appeared before the committee and testified as follows:

> The Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen is in favor of legitimatizing union shop and check-off contracts. It believes the time is long overdue for these provisions, and that the provisions of the Railway Labor Act forbidding the same should be revised.

I think, if the Senator will go through the hearings he will find that others took the same position. They did not agree as to the particulars of the bill as reported by the committee, and therefore they were not in favor of the bill as reported by the committee. But the Senator will find, I think, that most of these unions long since have been asking for the right to bargain collectively for union shop.

Mr. HOLLAND. I thank the Senator. I repeat only what I said a few minutes ago, that upon search of the record of the early hearings and the early debates, it was very clear that railway labor itself was insisting upon not being in the classification of coercing or compelling membership, but insisting on maintaining the open-shop privilege. I am sure the Senator knows enough about what has transpired throughout the years since 1926 to know that any development to the contrary has been a very late one, and that if it appeared last year in the case of the one organization which the Senator mentioned, it certainly has not appeared until recent months, or the last year or two, in general in the field of the operating brotherhoods, because from the beginning until recently they have been insistent upon the matter of maintaining the open shop. That is the understanding of the Senator from Florida.

The Senator from Florida may say that he left Washington in some perturbation at the end of the session in September. He had asked that the matter go over until the new session, and the Senate voted that that action should be taken. He went home to try to find out, by discussions with railway employees whom he should meet, many of whom were his lifelong friends, what were their feelings in this field, and he is bound to report in candor that he finds in general, at least in his own State, a line of very great differentiation between the thinking of those who are in the shop, maintenance, and clerical activities on the one hand, and those in the operating brotherhoods. Because from talking, not with one but with several dozens of men whose friendship he estems highly and whose standing as citizens and as lifelong members of the railway operating brotherhoods he respects completely, he knows that beyond dispute the great preponderance of men in that classification whom he had the chance to see and talk to are not favoring the proposed law, but instead are insisting that they prefer to continue the principle for which they had stood through all the years of the Railway Labor Act, and that was the principle of noncompulsion and of noncoercion and of doing such a good job that the good people would want to come into their organizations. They wish to preserve for themselves the right to admit or not to admit to their brotherhoods persons in their calling, dependent upon their moral standing and upon the performance of their duties.

The Senator from Florida does not assume to indicate in the slightest that that was a unanimous feeling on the part of the operating brotherhood members whom he saw, but he does say for the record at this time that the great majority of men from the operating brotherhoods with whom he talked took that position, and that the number from among those operating brotherhoods who did want the bill to be adopted—at least those whom he saw—was very small indeed.

The exact contrary was true in the field of the unions which cover the shops and the maintenance-of-way operations, and the clerical operations of the railroad companies. It is the belief of the Senator from Florida, after having talked with several committees and with many individuals, and after having received a great many communications from members of those brotherhoods, that the great preponderance of members in those particular brotherhoods which are nonoperating, at least in the State of Florida, do favor the adoption of this legislation, though on the question of the preservation or nonpreservation of the provisions of the anti-closed-shop law of the State of Florida, many did not declare themselves one way or the other.

Mr. President, in this whole matter I want to make it clear that the Senator from Florida has endeavored in every way he knew how to find out what was the wish, not only of those who work for the railroads within his own State, but of the general public; of the employers in the railway industry, because he thinks they have a right to be heard; the legislators within his State who alone will have the right to submit a constitutional amendment which would change or vary or repeal the provisions of our present constitutional provision; and that from his own observation and from his own carefully searched-out contacts with many many individuals, both within and without the groups covered by the proposed legislation, he feels entirely sure that the great majority of the citizens of the State of Florida—at least if his sampling was anything like sound, and he believes it was—do not favor the adoption of the proposed law, or if it be adopted, feel that it should be adopted with the amendment under discussion, the amendment which preserves the protection, insofar as our people are concerned and our citizens are concerned, of the provisions of section 12 of our State constitution, which I have already read into the RECORD.

Mr. President, I will not read or attempt to read into the RECORD any of the some hundreds of letters which I have received, almost all of them coming from members of the organizations in the railroad industry who are handling clerical work or maintenance-of-way work or shop work, which favor this act. I will simply state for the RECORD that I have some hundreds of contacts indicating in the main that the great majority of those people do favor the enactment of the measure which is pending here today.

Nor will I attempt to quote into the RECORD from any of the communications which I have received, of which there have been many, from people who are in the position of being executives within the railroad industry, or the owners of stockholdings within the industry, and without exception, I think I should say, those communications, which have been many in number, have been opposed to the enactment of this measure.

Nor will I attempt to put into the RECORD the many communications which I have received from citizens who do not fall within any of the directly affected classifications, but who are simply good citizens of our State, who know about this argument, who know about the proposed amendment of the Railway Labor Act, and have attitudes upon it.

I may say I have not received a single letter from a single citizen of our State who is not in one of the directly affected classifications, which has not insisted upon the preservation and recognition of our constitutional provision. I have received many letters disapproving the enactment of the legislation in any way.

I do have, however, a considerable number of communications from men who are directly affected by the act and who are employees. Some being members of the operating brotherhoods and some being members of the nonoperating brotherhoods. I shall not read the names of any of the writers into the RECORD, because I know full well that there sometimes are persons—and I hope there are none in our State—in labor organizations who have visited retributive action upon members of their organizations who have decided not to side with the leadership. I do want to read into the RECORD at this time some 15 or more of the communications which I have received, in some cases from only one workman or employee, and in some cases from as many as seven, one of them from a great deal larger number, who do not favor this particular measure.

Mr. President, at this time I wish to read into the RECORD, because I realize that this matter is a controversial one, both in my own State and in other States, some 15 or more communications received from some very fine citizens who are among the employees who would be affected by this measure. In their communications they state their opposition to the bill.

I have already said that I have received many communications favoring the bill from persons in the clerical and maintenance-of-way and shop groups, but very few favoring this measure from members of the operating brotherhoods.

The first letter comes from Plant City, Fla. The letter is addressed to me, and is signed by seven men. I know only three of them. I know those three to be lifelong citizens of that very fine city and to be splendid Americans by every proper standard. I read their letter:

> We, the undersigned members of Brotherhood of Railway and Steamship Clerks, Freight Handlers, Express and Station Employees, respectfully request that you vote against and use your influence to defeat the bill now before Congress, introduced in the House of Representatives on March 21, and given the number H. R. 7769, and in the Senate on March 22, given the number S. 3295, and list some of our reasons against this bill.
> In requiring that we belong to some organization, it removes our right of freedom to choose for ourselves whether we want to belong to an organiaztion or not; and should the organiaztion set up some policy to which we are absolutely opposed, we would still have to belong.
> It would give the leaders too much power and authority over the organization, as it requires the carriers to pay to the organization any dues, fees, or assessments they might desire, and deduct them from the wages of the employees.
> It would remove the incentive of the leaders to try to conduct the organization in such a manner that the employees would desire to belong to it.
> It is contrary to the American way of life, as it takes away the privilege to "Choose ye this day whom ye will serve."

That letter is signed, as I have said, by seven very fine citizens of Plant City, who describe themselves as employees of the unions mentioned in their communication.

The next letter which I shall read comes from a lifelong friend of mine who happens to have been an employee of the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad ever since his boyhood. He is a conductor on that railroad. His letter reads as follows:

> I see in the labor paper where the Senate Labor Committee approved a bill making it possible to bring a closed-shop union agreement onto the railroads. I am very much opposed to this closed shop because it will force railroad men to belong to a union, and follow the dictates of union leaders. If he loses his standing with the union, he loses his job, and his right to work for a living. It is loss of privilege and personal rights; it will put the union officials in position to have a strangle hold on the railroads of the country, just like John L. Lewis has on the coal fields. I imagine most of the miners would ditch John L. if they could, because they have to stay out on strike about a third of the time. I don't see how they make a living.
> SPESSARD, you know I have worked for the Coast Line for 30 years; and sitting here tonight, I know hundreds of railroad men, but I do not know one man that does not belong to a railroad union. So why do they want to make it compulsory for a railroad man to belong to a union in order to keep his job? The union officials are out to grab power, and put the squeeze on somebody, or everybody—the workers, the stockholders, and the public in general. I hope you will strongly oppose this measure when it is brought up for vote in the Senate. I only hope it has not already passed before my letter reaches you.

As I understand it, the bill permits open shops on the railroads, but I know if this bill becomes law the union officers will find a way to bring about a closed shop, and thereby assume dictatorial powers. At present under the open shop a man can drop his membership any time, and leave the union officials without funds; and in this way the officials do not become too unreasonable. But under a closed shop if a man drops his membership he would lose his job and right to work. It is just not fair; it is not needed, and not wanted.

That letter is signed, as I say, by a man who has been a friend of mine since boyhood. He is a long-time conductor for the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad.

The next letter which I shall read comes from Lake City, Fla., in the northern part of our State. The letter reads as follows:

For the past 10 years I have been happily employed by one of the great and finest railway systems in the country. Under the Railway Labor Act as it now stands railroad men are protected in their right to join any union for which they are eligible, or not to join if they do not choose to do so—

He underscores the words "not to join if they do not choose to do so"— and railroad companies are forbidden to deduct union dues, fess, and assessments from an employee's wages. However, certain labor leaders now want to abandon this system of voluntary membership in unions and substitute a system of membership by compulsion. They are therefore pressing for passage of S. 3295, which would permit railroads to enter into closed-shop contracts with unions under which employees, regardless of their own wishes, would be compelled to become union members to hold their jobs.

If you have not as yet had an opportunity of studying S. 3295, I trust you will do so at the earliest convenient moment. It seems to me that the fundamental question posed by this bill is simply this:

"Shall the system of membership in railway unions as the result of democratic free and voluntary choice be continued? Or shall it be replaced by a system of coerced and controlled membership?"

In this day and time the individual is bombared continually by many domestic and foreign isms, and it is, indeed, gratifying to witness a resurgence of plain old Americanism in many parts of the country. I cannot avoid the feeling that any system under which the individual is denied his constitutional and inherent right of free choice in matters of this nature—as proposed in S. 3295—is the exact antithesis of Americanism as you and I interpret it. Also, I do not feel that you will be in sympathy with the deceitful intention of the proposed legislation, and urge you to exert your influence in every possible way toward its defeat.

That letter is signed by another sturdy and outstanding citizen of Florida, who lives in Lake City, in northern Florida.

The next letter comes from a long-time conductor whom I happened to meet as I passed through the Union Station in Jacksonville. He subsequently wrote me this letter, which I shall read in part:

DEAR SENATOR: I am the conductor who spoke to you on your way home at the Jacksonville Union Station, and have always supported you.

I am asking you to consider voting against the bill, S. 3295 or H. R. 7789, pertaining to compulsory membership in railway labor unions. I have been employed by the ACL for over 35 years; during that time I have belonged to the Brotherhood of Railway Clerks, the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen, and the Order of Railway Conductors. I have belonged to the Order of Railway Conductors for over 30 years; but last year I withdrew from the order, and I believe my reasons are sufficient, and I believe you would have done likewise under the same circumstances.

I admire your stand on the Taft-Hartley Act. I think as you do on this bil. I have never believed that a man must belong to any union before he can work. I believe that interferes with his rights as an American citizen. I firmly believe that the railway unions should take into consideration that the public likewise should be considered. Your consideration on this bill, I assure you, will be appreciated.

That letter is signed by a conductor of the highest standing, who now is approaching his retirement.

The next letter comes from a member of the Brotherhood of Railway Clerks. He lives in Daytona Beach. He is another very fine citizen. His letter is addressed to me, and reads as follows:

I am a member of the Brotherhood of Railway Clerks, and am asking you to vote against the bill of coerced and controlled membership in the unions. This sounds too much like dictatorship, and not free Americanship.

He signs the letter with his name.

The next is from a particularly outstanding citizen, who writes as a member of one of the clerical organizations. I think I shall read the entire letter into the RECORD at this time:

DEAR SENATOR: I am going to ask or beg of you to do all in your power to defeat this amendment to the Railway Labor Act.

You probably heard Mr. George M. Harrison's, president of the Brotherhood of Railway and Steamship Clerks, Freight Handlers, Express and Station Employees Union, side of this bill, of all the free riders as he calls them, and the benefit this bill would do the employees, but members of local 2063, here in Jacksonville, do not agree with him.

I am a member of this lodge in good standing and have been for about 6 years, I was asked to join this union when I went to work for the Express Co. here in Jacksonville, I was not forced to join, I did because they were 100-percent union, they still are 100 percent except one employee, this employee has been working for the Express Co. over 25 years and was a member up till September 1, 1949, when Mr. Harrison put an assessment on the members and he did not believe it to be fair so he quit the union rather than pay that assessment.

Senator, I sure would hate to belong to a church, lodge, club, or union or any other kind of membership where you were forced to belong and could not quit if you did not believe in what they were doing to be right.

Every Christmas the Express Co. employs between 300 and 500 extra employees for the Christmas rush, now these extra employees will have to pay the entrance fee into the union plus a month's dues before they can work for the Express Co., but the union will not protect them or accept them in the union till they have been working for the company for 90 days, and these extra employees will not work any longer than 30 days at the most, there is nothing fair in that.

At the installation of officers of the lodges in Jacksonville, which were held at the Mayflower Hotel, one of Mr. Harrison's vice presidents made a speech in which he said the company was going to take out of our salaries the union dues and all the assessments and that Mr. Harrison has the power to put what assessments he saw fit upon us, that the company was going to get 5 percent for doing this, and there was nothing we could do about it but quit our jobs, then they would take it out before we were paid off anyhow. Senator, if it comes to that we sure are in foul shape, believe me.

Senator, if you will ask the people that work for the Express Co. there in Bartow or anywhere that you happen to run across any express employees, they will tell you that they are a member of the union, where Mr. Harrison gets that thousands and thousands of employees that are free riders, as he calls them, must be these extra Christmas employees.

Thanking you for your stand against this bill, I am.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HENDRICKSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. HOLLAND. I shall yield as soon as I have completed reference to this particular letter. I have followed the suggestion of this very fine citizen, and whenever I had a chance to talk to an express employee, in the 7-week visit that I have recently made throughout my State, I did so. That is, every person that I knew to be an express employee. I could not find the first one who was not a member of the union, and I found many who agreed with the positions taken by this particular letter writer. There were in that particular group more who wanted the legislation, however, than there were opposed. I am now glad to yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. HILL. I thank the Senator. I merely wish to say that the author of the letter evidently is under an erroneous impression about the bill, because the bill would not apply to those who might be temporarily employed to meet the Christmas rush. The bill expressly provides that an employee must have been employed for 60 days before any collective-bargaining agreement could in any way require him to join a union.

Mr. HOLLAND. I may say to the Senator that I understand that perfectly. But the Senator evidently did not follow the reading of the letter carefully, because the writer of the letter cited that fact as, in his opinion, the only possible source from which the statement could have been made that there were thousands of free riders. He said he did not know of a single express company employee who was not already a member of the union, and that in order to make any such statement, that there were thousands of free riders, he was very sure that they had to include those temporary employees. That was his statement, not mine. That is his feeling about the bill, not mine, as I have just read it into the RECORD.

The next comes from Milton, Fla., a way out in west Florida, from one of the most respected citizens there. It reads:

Knowing your great interest in the general welfare of the big unorganized of our country I am writing to urge your opposition to the above listed bill, for I can only see more trouble for us if it should become a law. We, who are unorganized, have been carrying the load of the well organized too long and it is now time to stop and reverse the order if possible.

Mr. President, I think I should say in fairness, before I leave this, that this letter is out of place, because it does not appear to have been written by a member or by a present employee of the company, and therefore should not have appeared in this particular group. There is a very large group of such letters in my file, written by members of the general public, and this apparently got into the wrong classification. The next one is from a railroad employee of the city of Jacksonville, speaking, as he says, for others than himself, though he signs only his own name, and therefore I read it only as an individual expression, and I shall read that part of it which I think is pertinent:

Please vote "no" to Senate bill 3295. We members of the railway labor union have not been consulted or had a chance to vote for or against a union shop, and we don't want it. The closed or union shop is undemocratic and should not be allowed in the country. It's maybe O. K. for Russia.

Respectfully yours.

It is signed by that particular employee.

The next is from an employee of the railroads, from the city of Fort Pierce, Fla., reading as follows:

I have just finished reading excerpts from Senate bill 3295, which I understand proposes to amend the Railway Labor Act to provide for compulsory membership in a union.

At the present time I am one of the many exempted employees and would gain nothing by union membership. I believe and have always believed that the right to join or not to join a union should be vested in the individual and for this reason believe that Senate bill 3295 should be defeated.

Your cooperation in assisting in the defeat of this unnecessary piece of legislation would be appreciated.

The letter is signed by that particular employee.

The next is a letter from my own county, from the little city of Lake Wales. It is from an employee of the railroad, whom I have long known. He writes to me as follows:

I note from last week's issue of Labor paper, that the railroad union-shop bill has been passed by the Senate Labor Committee, and I would like to urge you to do everything within your power to defeat this bill when it comes to the Senate for debate.

In my opinion, as well as the opinion of many other railroad men, this bill, if made into law, will do more to restrict the rights of the workingmen than any legislation that has been enacted in many years. The old argument being used so strongly by the supporters of this bill is the free-rider side of it, but that is only to rally support from those who fail to see beyond this point. One only has to look into the all-powerful miners' union, the automobile workers' union, and the longshoremen's union, to see just what will happen in the railroad unions if this bill is passed. I would like to state that I am a member of a railroad union and have been for better than 8 years, and I believe in the principles of labor organization, but this bill carries implications that will eventually destroy all advantages of unionism, but the strangle hold will be so firm that the workingmen will be powerless.

Under the present law, a man does not have to be a member nor is he compelled to become a member in order to work, and I do not believe that he should be forced to join a union in order to work. The union officers, under the present law, must work for the best interests of the members, or if they fail to do so, the members drop out, which is really the only protest the members have against the officers, but, if this new law is enacted, they will be able to conduct the union affairs as they desire, as well as charge whatever dues they desire, and the members will be forced to pay or quit their job, which seems to me would be a very serious violation of our constitutional rights.

He concludes by saying:

Your vote and influence in defeating this bill will be greatly appreciated.

He then signs the letter.

I may say, Mr. President, that in the effort to accomplish the enactment of the amendment which I am sponsoring here, I showed that portion of these communications which had arrived prior to the date of our adjournment in September to my good friend here, the senior Senator from Alabama, and requested him to reconsider the question of including in this measure the identical provisions which were in the Taft-Hartley bill. I am sure he understands that people in the 18 States, approximately, who have provisions within their constitutions or statutory law, which have the approval of the great majority of their citizens on this vital question of not requiring either membership or nonmembership in unions as a condition of employment or of continued employment—people do not want this bill, or any bill in this field; and the bill, if enacted in the face of that opposition, is merely going to encounter continuing difficulties, whereas I think that everyone who is a true friend of the bill would want it to meet with the general approval of the public which it serves, and not be subjected to frequent and recurring attacks or efforts to amend the railway labor law. So far as I was concerned, I was in great hopes that the Senator from Alabama and his associates on the committee would agree to the drafting of this bill in the same identical words which now appear in the Taft-Hartley law, and I am still regretful that they did not agree to do so, either in September or until this date. I may say that one would think from the comments of the distinguished majority leader in the RECORD yesterday that we were going to be consulted on this matter before the matter came up, following the vote on the rent-control measure today, but I think I should say in fairness that the consultation was apparently confined entirely to a consultation with the heads of the unions which heretofore had withheld their approval of the bill. There was no consultation with anyone so far as I know on this question of preservation of the rights of the States, until I happened to go into the Senate dining room between 1:30 and 2 o'clock and found my distinguished friend from Alabama dining there, and furnished him with a copy of the amendment. I learned from him a few moments later that it had not been considered.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. HOLLAND. I will yield in a moment. I want to call to the attention of my distinguished friend the fact that the proposition of denying any force whatever to the solemn declarations of the people of about 18 States—and I learn from a memorandum which has been added here that there are perhaps more in this category now than the 18 who were in it when we debated this measure a year ago—is unsound, and it invites continued strife and trouble. Incidentally, it departs from the sound fundamentals of the Senator's own position in certain other vital matters in which the Senator has stood loyally and most convincingly from time to time with his brethren who come from the southern portion of the United States, insisting upon the fact that the solemn declarations, constitutional and statutory, of those States which are affected there, and which, by the way, are fewer than the 18 in number which are affected here, should be listened to and considered and given weight by the Congress of the United States. I am extremely sorry that the Senator from Alabama is not willing to remember that that has been his position in another class of matters under the so-called civil-rights program, and I regret that he does not see fit to give such solemn expressions of at least 18 sovereign States the same kind of recognition and regard that he insists upon having given to similar declarations of the good people of the State of Alabama. Incidentally, the good citizens of the State of Florida join him in the position which he takes on the issues under the civil-rights program to which I have referred. It is my great regret that he does not apply the same reasoning to this other field which is regarded by our people as tremendously vital to our kind of government and our way of life.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLLAND. I yield.

Mr. HILL. I wish the RECORD to show that I regard legislation with reference to personnel in the railroad transportation industry as being in an entirely different and separate field from that of so-called civil rights to which the distinguished Senator from Florida has alluded. I believe it to be a field in which the Federal Government must exercise its jurisdiction. I do not believe it can be done by the States. I do not wish to defeat the purposes of the proposed legislation, which everyone says he favors, by giving to the State any veto power or other right which would bring about that result. I think the physical facts of the situation are such that if we give to a State such a right as the Senator from Florida seeks to give it, we would simply defeat the purposes of the legislation. There would be no reason for taking the time of the Senate to consider legislation if we adopt the Senator's amendment, because, in my opinion, the sum and substance of his amendment is to kill the legislation.

Mr. HOLLAND. In reply to the able remarks of my distinguished friend, I would say that the addition of this amendment to the Taft-Hartley law was not regarded by anyone as having killed the salutary effects of that law. To the contrary, many salutary effects have continued to flow from that law. May I say further that I have not been under any misapprehension as to the stand taken by my distinguished friend. I believe I have recognized his position in the remarks I have made heretofore. I merely expressed my regret that he is taking the position which he takes, and my inability to understand how he is able to differentiate between the expression of the solemn declarations of the State of Florida and the State of Alabama in one field, which he believes should be recognized, and that in another field the Senator believes they should not be recognized by Congress, although they are recognized under the provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act, particularly when such recognition has not involved any emasculation of that act itself.

Now I come to the next letter. It is from a long-time friend of mine who lives in Lakeland, Fla. It reads:

I am writing to ask you to strongly oppose the railroad union-shop bill, which was O. K.'d by the Labor Committee last week. This bill will obviously give strong powers to the labor leaders or they would not be so strongly supporting it.

Mr. President, I digress from the reading of the text of the letter to remark that there is great soundness and great cogency in the reasoning which lies behind that simple terse statement of a railroadman. I continue to read from the letter:

It is designed to bring a union shop, or compulsory membership in unions, to the railroad industry.

I am a railroad trainman, and a member of Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, Lodge 718, at Lakeland, Fla. I am in favor of collective bargaining, but I can see grave dangers in this thing of forcing a workingman to belong to a union whether he desires to or not. I hope that you also can see the dangers involved and will oppose this measure.

It is signed by this excellent citizen of long union membership and many years of excellent standing as a citizen in the same county in which I live.

This next letter comes from a fellow citizen who lives in Bartow, Fla., which is my home town. Some of the letter is personal, and therefore I shall not read that portion, but I will place in the RECORD his declarations on this subject. He says:

I am disturbed over the fact that the Senate Labor Committee recently placed its O. K. on the railroad union-shop bill. This bill is intended to bring about a union shop in the railroad industry, and makes it compulsory for railroad men to belong to a union whether they want to or not. This would just be loss of more freedom and privileges to the workingman. The workers will have to obey the order of union bosses before they obtain or hold a job.

The union bosses see where they will achieve great power or they would not be so strongly supporting this bill.

I am employed by the A. C. L. Railroad and have been for 13 years, and I am a union member, but I want to remain in a position to tell the union bosses to go to the devil if they get unreasonable in their demands.

Almost every union member I have talked t is opposed to a closed shop, or the provision or possibility of compulsory membership. The union bosses are in favor of compulsory membership, but not the members. If this bill becomes law, the union bosses will find some way to force a closed shop off on the membership whether they want it or not.

Please vigorously oppose the bill permitting union-shop agreements on the railroad properties when it comes on the Senate floor for debate.

It is signed by this good citizen from my home town.

The next letter is a lengthy one. I shall not encumber the RECORD by reading all of it. It comes from Jacksonville, Fla. It is written by a member of the Brotherhood of Railway Clerks. He has been a member of the brotherhood for nearly 25 years. I do not know the gentleman, but his letter is of such caliber that I am sure he is a good citizen. He says:

One George M. Harrison and his bailiwick of stooges and racketeers in the upper regions of a labor union, called "the Brotherhood of Railway Clerks," have for months been propagandizing the dues-paying members of said union to urge our Congressmen and Senators to pass a bill designated as H. R. 7789 and S. 3295 for the purpose of ramming a closed shop down the throats of all workers in our particular and allied kinds of work in the railroad industry.

As a dues-paying member in the Brotherhood of Railway Clerks for nearly 25 years, I do not appreciate our union heads in their failing efforts to legislate this nefarious scheme of a closed shop.

Racketeering is becoming so strong in many unions today that they are actually becoming repulsive to members of long standing.

The only legitimate income of union heads, as such, is from the dues-paying members who labor for hard-to-get-along-with corporations, etc. As long as I work for a corporation or person who pays my salary, I want my hiring and firing to be in their hands and not in the hands of a union.

Since the present election laws in labor constitutions perpetuate the same individuals for life in the highest positions in union officialdom, I suggest that laws be passed to bring a direct vote to the members for presidents and other top officials of labor unions each 4 years and appoint a board to determine the eligibility of contestants and aspirants to union official positions. The present setup is bordering on oligarchy under the guise of democracy.

If the majority of Americans are willing to turn this country and the world over to Joe Stalin, then I see no harm in having a closed-shop union law. In fact, we then will have a lot of shops closed soon after the closed-shop law hits the American worker. Take a gander of the coal mines today. Their shop is closed; many mines are closed. John L. Lewis is never closed.

Employers have some rights along with the worker. In my 25 years of union experience, I have found the hiring and wage-paying managements to be more mature-minded than have been the union officials in the constant war between labor and management. The worker is always the goat in these things of which we are sorely tired of as workers. We can get along without George M. Harrison, the closed shop, the BRC, but we cannot do so good without our jobs. If George M. Harrison cannot merit our confidence, he is not entitled to participate in rulership of a dues-paying union membership.

The urge is imperative—by all means defeat the closed-shop legislation.

When labor unions become oppressive, demanding, and tax-minded against the worker, we want the worker's right to stop his payment of dues and tribute to tyranny protected, and his job protected from union rackets and racketeers.

May I urge you to permit this letter to be viewed by as many Congressmen and Senators as is consistently possible, and I want to assure you that not one member in our lodge No. 2063 here in Jacksonville has spoken in favor of the closed shop in my presence. All members are against the closed-shop law here.

It is signed by this long-time member of the Brotherhood of Railway Clerks.

The next comes from a representative of the employees of two short-line railroads in our State which are not now unionized, but the employees believe that this measure would tend to force their unionization. One of them is an intrastate line. The other operates only in Georgia and Florida. Incidentally, the distinguished Senator from Alabama referred to one intrastate line in our State, which is one of our longest lines, and one of our best. I refer to the Florida East Coast Railway, which runs only from the City of Jacksonville, Fla., down the east coast to the tip of the peninsula, with various spurs reaching over toward the middle portion of the peninsula—for example, to the Lake Okeechobee region and to other similar regions up the peninsula from that point. At least one of those intrastate roads has a distinctly unfavorable point of view toward the pending measure, if this telegram speaks properly for the employees of this particular line, the Live Oak, Perry and Gulf Railroad, which is an intrastate line operating wholly within the State of Florida, as does the Florida East Coast Railway. This telegram is from Perry, Fla.:

Please work for defeat of Senate bill number 3295 coming up September 12. Have discussed this bill with 75 percent of L. O. P. & G. and South Georgia Railway employees today, which are all nonunion men. We, the little man, want this bill defeated.

The telegram is signed by a man who describes himself as one of the car accountants, and as speaking for the great majority of the employees of the L. O. P. & G. Railroad and the South Georgia Railway Co.

The next comes from a citizen of Pensacola, Fla., and reads as follows:

Having served in the First World War and being in the service of a railroad since March 1911, I feel that at the present I can as a free American write you in opposition to the proposed closed-shop bill, now before the appropriate committee of Congress with the blessings of the President of the United States.

Our inheritance is of a free people and a free government first conceived by the Declaration of Independence and sustained by the Constitution of the United States. Such step as a closed shop, in my opinion, would be a further step toward Socialism, Kremlinism, and communism, as is the case in England and Europe. Let's keep the United States of America a free country; let's keep labor, as well as every loyal citizen who believes in our inheritance of a free government and freemen, free. I believe this to be the views of the clear thinking railroad employees.

As an individual, I beg of you to think clearly and place the welfare of our form of government above selfish and political greed of the sponsors of this bill.

The next is likewise from a citizen of Pensacola. I do not happen to know him, but I read his letter into the RECORD. He describes himself as an employee of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co. I quote from his letter:

I understand that the railway union-shop bill (S. 3295 and H. R. 7789) has been recomended for passage into law by committees of both the House of Representatives and the Senate of the United States.

I am very much opposed to this bill because as it now reads it would so amend the Railway Labor Act as to authorize railroad companies and unions to enter into agreements which would require "as a condition of continued employment" that "all employees shall become members" of the union.

This bill would also authorize deductions for union dues, initiation fees, and assessments from the wages of employees without their individual authorization.

On that point, I feel that I should digress to say that he apparently did not know about the requirement placed in the bill, as it is now being considered, for assignment of payments out of the wages of the individuals.

I continue with the letter:

No limit on the amounts of such deductions is provided nor does the bill specify the purpose for which assessments may be made.

Of all the high-handed tyranny I ever heard of, this is it. This means that there would be removed from the Railway Labor Act its present protection of the freedom of the individual railroad employee to join or not to join a union as he pleases, and that under such an agreement as the bill would legalize, every railroad employee who is eligible for membership and who refused to join the union and remain a member thereof would have to be discharged.

As a railroad employee I solicit your earnest consideration in the interest of preserving the freedom of the individual.

That letter is signed by the citizen to whom I have referred.

The last of this particular classification is a letter from an engineer of the Southern Railway, who, incidentally, now resides in Valdosta, Ga., although he has generally been regarded as a Floridian. He sent a mimeographed letter to many persons within our State imploring that the State not stand for the enactment of this particular legislation.

This writer says:

There is, at this time, a proposed amendment to the Railway Labor Act, that would, if made into law, compel all railroads to institute a closed shop for all employees in their service. This does not represent the desires of the ranks of the employees; it is merely a scheme to place the employees absolutely at the mercy of the officials of the labor unions.

In practice it would work something like this: On a railroad where the B. of L. E. represents the men running engines, if a fireman is promoted to a job running an engine, he would be compelled to join the B. of L. E., and then, if he is cut off as an engineer on account of slack business, he would be compelled to be a member of the firemen's organization in order to be allowed to take a job as fireman.

I must say by way of digression that the man who wrote this letter did not know, any more than did any Senator until the amendment was proposed today, with the blessing of certain of the railway labor organizations, that such an amendment would be proposed, providing, in effect, that membership in one union could be continuing, and could satisfy the requirements of the law.

I continue reading the letter:

Now, this will happen to him many, many times the first 20 years or so after he is promoted.

Under the closed-shop rule, a man could not work at all if he was not a member of the union representing his craft. If, at any time, some other member took a notion to "get his job," all he would have to do would be to get some trumped-up charge against him and get him expelled from the union, and the railroad would be compelled to dismiss him from the service, and he could never get his job back unless he could get reinstated into the union, and that would be virtually impossible, as it would have to be voted on by the members, and any of them who wanted his place on the railroad could vote not to let him regain his membership, and he would be doomed.

I wish to dwell just a moment on that part of the letter, with respect to which I should be glad to hear the position taken by the sponsors of the bill. This old railroad man says that in the event of a trumped-up charged which would result in the firing of a man from a union, he would consequently lose his job, and could not get back on.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLLAND. Let me complete my reading of this letter. Then the Senator may in his own time reply if he wishes to do so. I shall be glad to yield for a question as soon as I finish reading the letter.

I continue reading the letter:

In the early days of railroads, the men were absolutely at the mercy of the petty officials of the road for which he worked, and they suffered plenty. In those days most officals had their favorites or pets and these got the best of everything, regardless of ability, integrity, or seniority, and it was to rid ourselves of this very condition that we organized.

Now, if we get the closed shop, we will place ourselves right back in the same fix we were before we were organized, and it will be worse because the union officials do not have any stockholders nor board of directors to answer to, and their power will be absolute.

These railroad labor organizations were formed to better the condition of the men in the railway service, and they have done a good job in the past; they united into a brotherhood of men working under the fatherhood of God and no church, no fraternal society, nor any other religious sect has ever done more to improve the material, intellectual, or spiritual condition of the men they represent, nor can they ever do more.

I now stop to comment upon this portion of the letter, because it makes it crystal clear that to the writer of this letter, an old railroad union man, his brotherhood, his lodge, represents much more than a mere labor organization. As I suggested some time ago in the course of these remarks, to him it is a fraternal society. To him it is a brotherhood of members who are interested in each other, and who have confidence in each other. He does not want to see that sort of brotherhood broken up by a situation which will invite conspiring together on the part of some to get rid of someone else who has a job which is desired by one of the conspirators.

I continue with the reading of the letter:

So I urge all the people to write your Senators to work and vote against the closed shop for railroad employees, and let us retain our liberty, and be in a position to prune out and replace any of our railway labor executives that we find are not working for our best interest.

For the good of all of the people.

Yours truly.

The letter is signed by the gentleman who signs as an engineer of the Southern Railway.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator now yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. HOLLAND. I yield.

Mr. HILL. With reference to the statement in the gentleman's letter that some railway employees might be fired from the union on some trumped-up charge and thereby lose his employment, I should like to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that under the bill no employee could be denied employment because he was turned out of a union on a trumped-up charge or any other charge, or for any other reason whatever, except and only if the employee failed to pay his dues, initiation fees, and assessments.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, I am glad the Senator brought that out, because I think it points up not only the portion of the letter to which the Senator was referring, but another portion of the letter in which this writer—and the statement is made by writers of other letters—makes it clear that this kind of legislation makes the members subject to assessments, and different kinds of extra charges in various fields. The Senator has just stated, if I understood him, that the failure to pay an assessment was one of the grounds for which a member could be fired, and that that is recognized as part of the policy of the bill.

Mr. HILL. The language is, "Periodic dues, initiation fees, and assessments." The Senator knows that assessments are levied by the membership of the union. For any other reason than failure to pay the normal fees and assessments one might be turned out of the union, but he could not be denied his employment with the railroad.

Mr. HOLLAND. However, I may say to the Senator that the text of the letter does not say, "unless permitted by the membership, at a meeting called for the purpose, or approved by a majority of the entire membership," or anything of that kind. Not once, but in several of the letters I have just read it has been made very clear that one of the grounds for fear and opposition on the part of these fine railroad men who are opposed to the bill has been that it deals with the subject of assessment in various fields, in various amounts, not within their control or reach. One of them, if the Senator recalls, remarked that after having been a member of one of the old and most highly respected organizations of operating brotherhoods for many years—I believe he said 20 or 25 years—he resigned only last year, rather than pay a certain assessment which was imposed. Another one, who had been a member of the clerks' organization, that organization headed, I believe, by Mr. Harrison—so he refers to him in his letter—resigned for the same reason, or wants the right to resign rather than have to pay assessments which he feels are unreasonable.

Mr. President, this whole question runs right to the very heart of this inquiry. Are we going to give to any man, and assume for the time being that most of the men who are in high position in the railway organizations are sound citizens, and we have no assurance as to how that will go in years to come—are we going to give to them the power and the right and the privilege, through assessments voted or ordered under the provisions of their charter, the charter their organizations set up, to force their members either to pay or to be expelled, and suffer the pains and penalties of expulsion under this act?

Mr. President, coming from a State which has soundly declared its public policy, its judgment, to be that it should never agree to the imposition of a condition for either original employment or continued employment based on either union membership on the one hand or failure to have union membership on the other hand, I could never view with equanimity any such position. I certainly must listen with great sympathy to the clearly expressed fears of these men, many of them fine men, known to me to be fine men, home owners, heads of families and taxpayers and citizens of our State of many years standing, as good citizens as we have, who fear this setup and who, in my humble judgment at least, have put their finger on so many objectionable features in this legislation that I do not see how any Senator, coming from a State which has declared its public policy in this matter either against the closed shop or against the union shop, or both, could possibly be deaf to such complaints and such inquiries.

I may say to the Senator from Alabama again that I hope overnight he and those who with him are sponsors of the bill may again consider this situation, because the enactment of the bill in opposition to the announced public policy of so many States is an open invitation to continued opposition and to continued efforts to amend, or to emasculate, or to destroy the legislation.

Mr. President, speaking not only as a Member of the Senate, but as a citizen, I want to see whatever legislation comes out of here to be of such respectable quality, of such general acceptance, that it will have a chance to work out and will have a chance to preserve to the railroad employees the preferred treatment which they have been given ever since 1926, and which was rerecognized at the time we enacted the Taft-Hartley Act, in that they were specifically exempted from that portion of the act which made it possible to invoke the injunction against other Nation-wide industries whose uninterrupted operation was of vital importance to the whole Nation. And if there is a Nation-wide industry which is of vital importance to the whole Nation it is the railway industry. There can be no doubt about that. Yet preferred consideration has been given to this group of men, I think largely because of their very fine quality as a group and as individuals, and they express over and over again in these letters which I have read, and I have read only a portion of the letters in my file, those difficulties as being present now in their thinking. They are good citizens. They are thinking not only about themselves. They are thinking about the general public. They are thinking about the employer. They are thinking about the principles that are involved.

I want to say to my friend the Senator from Alabama that I hope he will reexamine this matter in the light of not only effectuating speedy enactment of the bill but also of getting an acceptable bill. So far as the Senator from Florida is concerned, he is going to be completely agreeable to speedy consideration of the measure when he completes his argument, which will not be long from now. There are other Senators, however, who feel keenly the importance of this position, and whose States have spoken authoritatively for them and their representatives in this particular field, either by the enactment of constitutional measures or by the enactment or statutes which have been upheld, not merely by their own courts but by the Supreme Court of the United States, as being valid exercise of the power of the several States within their several territorial limits.

Mr. WHERRY addressed the Chair.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, I had indicated that I would yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I had desired the Senator to yield, but frankly he has gotten away from the question to which I wished to address myself. I wanted to ask him about fees and assessments. I think the discussion of the Senator really goes to the whole question of whether or not one honestly favors unions. There can be an honest disagreement as to whether individuals favor labor unions. The question in this instance is whether those who enjoy the fruits and the benefits of the unions should make a fair contribution to the support of the unions.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, I desire respectfully to differ from my good friend from Alabama in his recent statement, because I think it must be very clear from a reading of the letters that many of the senders are consistent union men of lifetime standing, who believe in the unions, and who believe in the good that has been done by the unions, and who want to see unions preserved, but who believe also very conscientiously that unions will be harmed rather than helped by the enactment of the proposed legislation.

I may say to the Senator, to advert to a point which I made some time ago, that if he will read the hearings upon the original passage of the Railway Labor Act, he will find that the heads of all the brotherhoods at that time—well, the Senator from Florida will not say all, but he believes there was no disagreement among them at that time—insisted upon the inclusion of the open-shop provision. The Senator from Florida has not read that record at a late enough date to be sure that all of them, but I know that a large number of them insisted upon that position, and I know that that has been consistently the position of many of them, and that many persons writing these letters still maintain what used to be the soundest kind of fundamentals in the unionism of railroad brotherhoods. I express regret that it is not still the fundamental conviction of more of the leadership amongst the brotherhoods, because I think that their decision made at the time of the enactment of the law was wise. I believe that their policy as maintained from that time until now, or at least until recent days, has been wise. I believe that those men who are standing up to assert their fear of this type of legislation and their unwillingness to see it creep into the unions, into the brotherhoods, have made such fine records that we should sympathize with them and make some efforts to preserve to them what they regard as fundamentals in railroad unionism.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLLAND. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Senator for yielding? I should like to obtain the reaction not only of the distinguished Senator from Florida, but if possible also that of the Senator from Alabama. In Nebraska, in 1947, there was passed what is known as chapter 48, section 217. Following is the title: "Labor Organizations; No Denial of Employment; Closed Shop Not Permitted."

That is in bold type in the heading of the section. This is what the section provides:

> To make operative the provisions of sections 13, 14, and 15 of article XV of the Constitution of Nebraska:
> No person shall be denied employment because of membership in or affiliation with, or resignation or expulsion from a labor organization or because of refusal to join or affiliate with a labor organization; nor shall any individual or corporation or association of any kind enter into any contract, written or oral, to exclude persons from employment because of membership in or nonmembership in a labor organization.

I hope the distinguished Senator from Florida heard the provisions of the Nebraska statute.

Mr. HOLLAND. I was following the reading of the statute word by word because I happen to have a copy of it.

Mr. WHERRY. I did not know that. What I want to ask the distinguished Senator from Florida is this: Does he feel that if the proposed Federal legislation now before us, as amended, were passed, it would override the provisions of chapter 48, section 217, of our Nebraska laws at this time?

Mr. HOLLAND. It would override those provisions, beyond any shadow of a doubt, and it is so intended. The colloquies prevailing here on the floor this afternoon have made it very clear that it is recognized by the sponsors of the legislation that in the failure of a clear declaration of Federal law which is contradictory to State constitutional and statutory provisions of the type quoted by the Senator, those provisions are operative. But when such a law as the one proposed here is enacted, they become inoperative, because the Federal Government then will have preempted that field.

Let me say to the Senator that the section he has read—and I followed with interest his reading of it—is a portion of the enabling act to give force and effect to a constitutional provision which was voted by his people.

Mr. WHERRY. Certainly.

Mr. HOLLAND. That was voted by his people in accordance with the provisions of the Nebraska Constitution.

Mr. WHERRY. Yes.

Mr. HOLLAND. And the Senator from Nebraska has read a portion of the enabling act.

Mr. WHERRY. That is correct.

Mr. HOLLAND. However, the constitutional provision appears in sections 13, 14, and 15 of the Nebraska State Constitution, and the general meat of it is given in section 13 of the Nebraska State Constitution, which was adopted in 1946. With the indulgence of the Senator from Nebraska, I shall read it into the RECORD at this point.

Mr. WHERRY. I should like to have the Senator do so.

The provision there is—

To make operative the provisions of sections 13, 14, and 15 of article XV of the Constitution of Nebraska.

That was enacted into law. I know what is contained in the Nebraska State Constitution, and that statute was passed to make that portion of its operative.

Mr. HOLLAND. Exactly. On the contrary, the purpose of the measure now before us is to make that portion of the Nebraska Constitution inoperative.

Mr. WHERRY. Yes; that is the point, as I have indicated.

Mr. HOLLAND. This measure would make that portion of the Nebraska Constitution inoperative, by contradicting it. Thus, this measure would completely defeat the intention of the good people of Nebraska, as expressed twice—first in a constitutional amendment; and, second, in the enabling act the Senator has read into the RECORD.

Mr. President, I was going to read into the RECORD the provisions of section 13 of the Nebraska State Constitution, adopted in 1946. It reads as follows:

No person shall be denied employment because of membership in or affiliation with, or resignation or expulsion from a labor organization or because of refusal to join or affiliate with a labor organization; nor shall any individual or corporation or association of any kind enter into any contract, written or oral, to exclude persons from employment because of membership in or nonmembership in a labor organization.

Mr. WHERRY. I was going to read that into the RECORD, and I am glad the Senator from Florida has done so.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, I am happy to say to the distinguished Senator that his amendment is almost identical with the one adopted in our own State, and it differs from that adopted in some other States, in that it looks in both directions. It is completely fair and impartial, in that it provides that neither membership nor nonmembership may ever be imposed as a condition applicable either to employment or continued employment.

Mr. WHERRY. That is correct; it works both ways.

Mr. HOLLAND. Apparently the enabling provision was either necessary to make the constitutional provision effective, or was thought to be necessary. So it was enacted. Both those matters were before the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Lincoln Federal Labor Union, No. 19,129, American Federation of Labor, and others against Northwestern Iron and Metal Co., and others, which was appealed from the Nebraska courts to the United States Supreme Court.

Mr. WHERRY. That is correct.

Mr. HOLLAND. Let me say that the United States Supreme Court thought such a good job had been done by the Nebraska courts and by the Nebraska Legislature and people, that by a unanimous decision—of nine to nothing—of the Justices who then were members of the United States Supreme Court, they upheld the constitutionality, from the Federal viewpoint, of both the Nebraska Constitution and the Nebraska statutory expressions.

Mr. WHERRY. That is correct.

Mr. HOLLAND. But what is now sought to be done is that, notwithstanding the fact that the people of Nebraska have spoken at least twice—through a constitutional provision and through a statutory enactment—and notwithstanding that their own courts and the Supreme Court of the United States, by unanimous decision, have upheld that action, now some well-deposed citizens who are Members of Congress wish to prevent the operation of the Nebraska Constitution and of the Nebraska enabling act, and wish to prevent their receiving any confirmation or value from the approving opinions of the Nebraska courts of last resort and of the Federal courts of last resort, by entering into this field affirmatively, through the enactment of Federal legislation, in such a way as to completely knock down the effect of the spoken will of the people of Nebraska in the field covered by the measure which now is pending here in the Senate.

Mr. HILL and Mr. WHERRY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. HOLLAND. I am glad to yield to either of the Senators who now are on their feet and are addressing the Chair.

Mr. HILL. If the Senator from Florida will yield first to me, let me say that he expressed what I had in mind when he said, "In the field covered by the measure now pending." That is the field covered by the union shop. The reason I say "the union shop" is that the Senator realizes that there is a distinct difference between the union shop and the closed shop.

Mr. WHERRY. Certainly.

Mr. HILL. This bill applies only to the union shop.

Mr. WHERRY. My question was——

Mr. HILL. I understand the Senator's question. So far as the union shop is concerned, this proposed legislation, if enacted, will take priority over the enactment of a State.

The thought of the committee, in reporting the bill, was—as I said earlier, perhaps two or three times—that the labor-management relations in the railroad industry are so squarely in interstate commerce that the Federal Government is justified in asserting, and should assert, the jurisdiction which it has in this matter.

The fact is that since the employees of the railroads cross State lines—for instance in going from Nebraska to adjoining States—all the time, every day, the purpose of the bill really will be defeated if the Holland amendment is added to the bill. The Federal Government has to assert its jurisdiction in interstate matters.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, the Senator by his admission has admitted himself almost out of court, so to speak, because in the case of the Taft-Hartley Act, nothing but the union shop is involved. The closed shop is entirely banned by the affirmative provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act. The only thing that is legal in this field, as left by the Taft-Hartley Act, is the union shop; but in the field covered by the union shop and by the Taft-Hartley Act, the wisdom of the Senate, as it was expressed many times by decided majorities, has been to preserve and to respect the effect of constitutional provisions or statutory provisions, or both, such as those mentioned by the Senator from Nebraska in the case of the State of Nebraska.

So it is no answer at all to say that this provision applies only to the union shop, because we have debated all that before, in connection with the Taft-Hartley bill, now the Taft-Hartley law, which itself applies only to the union shop, because the closed shop is completely banned by other provisions of the Taft-Hartley law.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at this point, to permit me to say a word?

Mr. HOLLAND. I should prefer to complete my statement, and then I shall be glad to yield again.

With reference to the last point made by the Senator from Alabama, I call the attention of the Senator from Nebraska to the fact that although the members of the operating brotherhoods of the railroads frequently cross State lines—they do not do so in all cases, but in many cases they do—the unions which have shown the great interest in connection with this proposed legislation, and have been the only ones behind it—until today, when we had a change in front by at least some of them—have been those whose members serve in clerical positions or shop positions or maintenance-of-way positions, and are just as settled as to their locale as are the employees in any other industry which one can think of.

Secondly, if there are any industries which all the way through are engaged in interstate commerce, those industries include quite a group which are under the provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act, but not under the provisions of this one act, such as, for instance, radio industry and the employees of concerns or firms in that industry, the telegraphers, the operators of the various telephone systems in the United States, and the employees of the truck operators of the Nation—an industry which has grown to be a tremendous network of interstate traffic, as the Senator well knows.

In fact, I think—and without having any facts to support my opinion at this time, this is only an expression of my opinion—that a larger percentage of the persons actively employed in the motor-trucking industry actually cross State lines in the operation of those trucks than in the case of those who operate the railroads. Of course, only the facts themselves can prove that point; but the Senator from Florida thinks that the facts, when they are presented, will show that because the large number of the clerical employees, maintenance-of-way employees, shop men, and the like do have fixed positions, the group who come under the corresponding classifications in the motortruck industry will be found to include a much smaller number of persons, in my opinion—much smaller than the number of persons in similar classifications in the railroad industry.

Now I am glad to yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Nebraska will agree that the field covered by the Taft-Hartley law is much more varied and, generally, much broader than the field covered by this measure. This measure is limited to railway employees. For instance, the Taft-Hartley law would cover the employees in an airplane factory. The airplanes they manufacture move in interstate commerce; but those who work in the plant and make the airplanes, do not move back and forth in interstate commerce, as do the railroad engineers, brakemen, firemen, conductors, and other persons who operate the railroads.

So the committee felt that the persons dealt with by this bill, and to which this bill is limited, are in a separate and different posture or position than that of employees in American industry generally, as covered by the Taft-Hartley law.

Mr. WHERRY. Of course, Mr. President, there is no way in the world we could actually exempt those who are engaged in working for the railroads in interstate commerce and those whose work is confined to intrastate operations; or at least it would be very difficult to establish the facts in that connection. But I certainly can see that a great number of railroad employees have permanent jobs within the State and are located just as definitely as are workers in airplane factories.

Mr. HILL. But the Senator can see there are large numbers of them moving. This question was very carefully considered by the committee, and the action taken had the unanimous support of the membership of the committee. I may say to my distinguished friend, as he, of course, well knows, being the minority leader, that the minority is well and ably represented on that committee, from the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] on down. There are many very able and distinguished men on that committee. We thrashed this whole matter out, I may say.

Mr. WHERRY. I am not questioning the ability of the members of the committee, and I deeply appreciate the answers given by the distinguished Senator from Alabama. But it looked to me as though the Senator from Florida clarified his amendment. I merely wanted to get information about the statute, because I recall the terrific debate which was held in the Nebraska State Legislature, in passing the enabling clause, to provide what the people of the State voted to place in their constitution. It behooves me as one representing that State to see to it that the will of the people is not invalidated through a Federal statute, if it encroaches upon the provisions they have placed in their constitution. I was asking for information, because the union shop is involved. I wanted to get the opinion of my good friend from Alabama and also the opinion of the Senator from Florida, both of whose answers I shall appreciate. I desire to get the different viewpoints. My question was, Does the Senator feel that the passage of this proposed piece of legislation would in any way override the provision of our State constitution and of the statute which has been enacted?

Mr. HOLLAND. Categorically answering that question, I may say the intention of this bill is to do just that, and to point up my remark, I may say that in three different ways this bill will take away something which belongs now to the good people of Nebraska, to the good people of Florida, and to the good people of some 18 or 20 States, all told, who, in their solemn judgment—and I am glad to say that there are still some questions as to which the people of the States do have a solemn judgment—they have held that they do not want this kind of bill to apply to them. I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that in three ways the State of Nebraska would have filched from it—well, I shall not use that word, because I could not use such a word when I am thinking about my friend from Alabama—but it is deprived, completely deprived, of three sound values belonging to it, and equally belonging to the good people of the State of Florida. I shall enumerate them. The first is that it deprives them of the fact that in the exercise of our own sovereign will, acting through our representative government, the legislature, and then through vote of our people in an election, and, in the case of Nebraska, through another act, still, an enabling act, a sound declaration, a dignified declaration of the judgment of the people of the Senator's State on a question of grave public policy affecting the living together of your people in harmony and with freedom of opportunity—that is lost, that expression of judgment through constitutional and Federal enactment, through all types of representative government which the people have in the State of Nebraska—while the Senator's people operate through one house, there, some of the rest of us operate through two houses; still the Senator's people in the legislature are the representatives of the folks back home in the several counties, and through them, by the vote of the people, and then again by the vote of the legislature, and the unicameral legislature carrying still further the intent of the people of Nebraska, they have claimed the right to protect themselves against a policy which is thought to be unsound in Nebraska. The people of Nebraska are deprived of that expression of their own will. Secondly, they are deprived of the fruits of their victory in the courts of their land, not only the courts of first resort and of last resort, in their own State of Nebraska, but of the court of last resort of the land, the Supreme Court of the United States of America, which has held that here is a valid exercise of the State jurisdiction, having so held by a nine to nothing decision in a matter affecting the very thing which we are talking about here, the expression by the State of Nebraska of its will in this field. The third thing which is done to deprive the people of Nebraska of a substantial value is that at least an entering wedge is offered here, a far-reaching wedge to deprive them of the value and protection flowing out of determinations made in the Congress of the United States in 1947, in 1948, and in 1949, when this specific question was debated—and debated, with the exception of the junior Senator from Florida, with ability and understanding—and when substantial majorities of the Senate, the Members of the Senate, expressed it as their will—and it is still their will, in connection with the entire field covered by the Taft-Hartley Act—that dignified expressions of the States, such as those referred to in the State of Nebraska, shall be respected, shall be confirmed, shall be enforced under Federal law. And so that third deprivation is the deprivation of the people of the Senator's State of the benefit of an act taken in part by the distinguished Senator from Nebraska. I do not recall offhand the position of the Senator, but here is the list of the yea-and-nay votes on the last issue voted upon by the Senate, which was on June 30, 1949, when certain amendments to the Taft-Hartley Act were being considered. I may say that this issue was voted upon at that time, and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] and his colleague [Mr. BUTLER] both voted with the preponderant majority of the Senate, which cast 53 votes against 41 votes which were cast in favor of the other theory—the theory which is sought to be imposed by the legislation now pending.

So that if the Senator went along on this legislation, he would in effect be undermining not only the first two values which I mentioned, but the third value, which flows from his own act, in part, as a participant in the enactment of the Taft-Hartley Act in 1947, and as a participant in the insistence of a strong majority of the Senate ever since that to keep in the Taft-Hartley Act this particular provision recognizing State laws.

I want to clarify my position by making it clear—and I am sure both Senators understand it clearly, but for the record—I am not claiming that the field of the Taft-Hartley Act is invaded by this particular matter, but I am stating that this measure operates in a field which is not to be differentiated by any kind of logic from the motor-vehicle business, which is covered by the Taft-Hartley Act, or from the telephone, telegraph, and radio businesses, which are covered by the Taft-Hartley Act, and that, in fact, the Senator standing upon a ground for differentiation, upon which, his more mature reflection as an able lawyer would make him, I think, refrain from standing because the measure of what constitutes interstate commerce is not whether one is actually crossing the State line; the question is whether he is in an industry whose products will cross the State line.

The same measure, under our Federal Constitution, applies to every industry covered by the Taft-Hartley Act, which applies to the two industries that are covered by this act. I am sure the Senator from Alabama would not want to have it even appear from the record that he was taking any different position from that. He seeks to differentiate the railway industry from certain others, because he says that more people in that industry actually cross from State to State, and my point on that is that that does not determine the question of whether it is within or outside interstate commerce. The question as to what is in interstate commerce, as the Senator well knows, is the question of whether the industry operates and exists interstate, and the man who is a clerk in the shipping offices at Jacksonville, of one of our great railroads, or who is a car knocker or boiler maker at Uceta or Tampa, far removed from the State line, or down at Miami, nearly 500 miles away from the State line, is just as fully in interstate commerce as is the man runing the train which happens to run from Jacksonville to Savannah; and that man is no more in interstate commerce than is the man who runs from Jacksonville down to Miami, because he is handling the mails that go out, he is handling the passengers who go out, he is handling the products which move out into interstate commerce. So I think that upon more mature reflection the Senator will come to the conclusion that the standard which he imposes is not a correct one, and that as a matter of fact, even if that incorrect one is imposed, there are numerous industries covered by the Taft-Hartley Act in which the actual engagement in interstate movement at all times is just as great as it is in the railroad industry covered by the Railway Labor Act.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLLAND. I yield gladly.

Mr. HILL. As has been said, there has been special legislation in this field since 1936, when the original National Railway Act was enacted by the Congress. This bill would apply only to the management and labor employed on the railroads and on the airlines, and, although the Senator does not agree with me on it, the fact that the railway men operate trains across State lines makes a vast difference as against an industry which is located at Topeka, Kans., and which operates a factory in but one place. If an employee of such a concern crosses the State line into Nebraska, can he, as a member of a union shop in Kansas, become a member of a union shop in Nebraska? This raises the entire question.

I hope to talk a little further on the pending measure tomorrow. The Federal Government was brought into being by the States. All the power possessed by the Federal Government was delegated and given to it by the States. There were two principal reasons for that. The States felt it necessary and saw fit in their wisdom to organize the Federal Government and to delegate powers to it in order to provide for the common defense and for the regulation of interstate commerce. In this particular instance, what we would seek to do by this bill—what the committee would do—is to exercise the power delegated by the States, feeling that this is a matter which so vitally affects interstate commerce and the activities involved are so squarely in interstate commerce that the job should be done. It can only be done by the exercise of Federal law.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, I do not like to continue to talk on a subject which has been so well discussed by both Senators who have participated in the colloquy. However, the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL] mentioned the airlines. For the RECORD and for any comment which he may care to make on it, I feel I should say that the point I made with reference to railroads not having any preponderant part of their personnel actually crossing State lines can be made with even greater force and effect with reference to airlines. I do not know whether the Senator from Alabama has been in any of the great shops maintained by airlines. We have in the city of Miami somewhere between eight and ten thousand employees, I am told, who are mechanics, clerical employees, and similar types of employees, who work for the great airlines which have their terminals in Miami. I should think that the proportion of the employees of the airlines who actually operate the planes and therefore cross the State lines or go out of the country would be so inconsiderable a proportion of the total number of employees of the airlines as to be vastly less than in the case of railroads, and of course even more vastly less than in the case of truck lines or other activities which may occur to the Senator. Therefore, it seems to be fair to state that under this proposed legislation, if deprived of the pending amendment, thousands of employees in one spot in my State would be exempt from the application of State constitutional and State statutory law, notwithstanding the fact that they are living with many thousands of their fellow citizens who would find it extremely difficult to understand why a different rule should be imposed on them than is imposed on this favored class of employees.

Mr. President, it seems to me that no clearer illustration could be made of the mischief that lies in this type of legislation. Almost a guarantee would be given by the enactment of this legislation, that we would soon have to forget about the safeguards of State legislation which appear in the Taft-Hartley Act as to all types of industry covered by that act, because in the very nature of things these people living together by the thousands will not be satisfied with being governed by different fundamental rules in the application of law to their relations with their employers.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLLAND. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. If I understand correctly, a railroad engineer who crosses a State line would receive the benefit of the pending legislation. Likewise an employee who does not cross State lines, and who lives in a certain locality and performs work which does not require him to cross State lines, would also receive benefits, if there are any, of the pending bill, even though such an employee would not move from one State to another.

Mr. HOLLAND. The Senator is correct.

Mr. WHERRY. It seems to me that we would then have to determine in our own minds what proportion of employees cross State lines. My position in Nebraska in trying to represent the will of the people in protecting a provision of their constitution would become very greatly involved, because certainly, while it is true that trains run from Nebraska to other parts of the country, offhand I would feel that the preponderance of employees of railroads are local in character and do not cross State lines. Therefore, what the Senator is saying in effect is that the pending bill, if enacted into law, would be applied to employees of railroads who do not work in interstate commerce, and that if we start with railroads we will gradually go into other industries, and thus finally break down constitutional provisions of our States and enabling statutes.

Mr. HOLLAND. That is correct. In that connection, I wish to invite the attention of the Senator from Nebraska to the motor-trucking industry. I had the great pleasure of visiting the city of Omaha. My recollection is that there is a city in Iowa across the river from Omaha.

Mr. WHERRY. Council Bluffs, Iowa.

Mr. HOLLAND. With constant truck traffic back and forth.

Mr. WHERRY. Constant.

Mr. HOLLAND. Hundreds of trucks pass back and forth, perhaps even thousands.

Mr. WHERRY. There is no doubt about it.

Mr. HOLLAND. Under the differentiation which the Senator from Alabama is asking us to adopt it is difficult for me to understand how a railroad engineer taking the train out of Nebraska and going out through Iowa and other States and the people who get the train ready and the people who keep the books on the train should all be excluded from the protection of State law, whereas the people who are crossing by the thousands in truck traffic, not only from Omaha but from other parts of the State, should be covered by a different law. Mr. President, that does not make sense. That would not appeal to the people at large as making sense. As I see it, it is an opening wedge to the destruction of the salutary provisions of the Taft-Hartley law. I believe they are salutary because it recognizes the sovereignty of States on matters which govern the living together of their people, and the day-to-day existence of their people.

To go back to my illustration in Miami, does it make sense for the thousands of people who are employed in the aviation industry to be covered by one law, and to have the tremendous number of people in other industries covered by another law, when all the people are living together and meeting in every sort of relationship and in close daily juxtaposition? Would any satisfaction come out of such an operation? My observation and my strong feeling is that there would not. The sound thing we should do, if we are to stand by the expressions of the Senate as has been frequently made in connection with the Taft-Hartley law, would be to adopt the amendment I have proposed. If the amendment is adopted I intend to vote in favor of the legislation, because then we would place the pending bill on all fours with the Taft-Hartley Act. I would find it difficult to differentiate between my position on the Taft-Hartley Act and my position on the pending bill, if perfected by the amendment which I have offered. I will state the converse to that proposition. I would find it very difficult to vote in favor of the bill without the amendment in view of the fact that, along with a majority of my colleagues, I insisted upon having the amendment added to the Taft-Hartley law before voting in favor of it. I agree with the Senator from Nebraska when he took the position that commerce is something bigger than mere transportation of goods. It relates to people living together. There is no good reason why we should have one law operating as to one portion of our people and another completely dissimilar law operating as to another great portion.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I appreciate the observations made by both Senators. It is good to have their views.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, I have not yielded the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair wishes to apologize to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. HOLLAND. I understand how the Chair could have gotten such an impression. However, I have not had a chance to check on my notes. I did not know that the matter was coming up until shortly before we took it up this afternoon. I would very much like to not yield the floor at this time, with the understanding that I have no present intention of saying anything further in the morning, but that I shall have the right to speak if I desire to do so without again asking for recognition. I may wish to round out or complete my statement if I find that I have left out something.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Florida?

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLLAND. I take this opportunity to say that I do not intend to filibuster. I have no present intention to speak in the morning, but I want to have the assurance that if I find some deficiencies of any kind in what I have said I can supply them with a few remarks in the morning. I should like to have that privilege before another Senator is recognized.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Florida?

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I wonder if we could reach an agreement as to when we may vote on the amendment as presented. Would it be possible to reach an agreement as to a time tomorrow when we could vote on it? I can well understand the position of the junior Senator from Florida with reference to his desire to make a few remarks tomorrow if he finds it necessary to do so. The distinguished senior Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] informed me that he wishes to say something on the subject tomorrow. The Senator from Alabama would like to make a few remarks. I wonder if we could not agree on a definite time tomorrow when we could vote on the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida. It usually takes 15 or 20 minutes to attend to routine business and insertions in the RECORD and to have a quorum call. I wonder if we could not agree on a definite time to vote on the amendment. The senior Senator from Florida wishes to speak for 15 or 20 minutes. The Senator from Alabama will not need more than 10 or 15 minutes.

Would it be agreeable to the junior Senator from Florida and the distinguished minority leader if we voted on the amendment as offered at 1:30 p. m. tomorrow, with the time after the quorum call to be divided equally and controlled, respectively, by the distinguished junior Senator from Florida and the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. HOLLAND. I regret not to be able to give agreement to such a request. My reason has nothing to do with my own position. At the time the matter was debated in September, six or seven other Senators expressed the desire to be heard. They wanted to make clear their position on this bill must be consistent with the position that they had taken on the Taft-Hartley law. I do not know whether all of them are of the same feeling at the present time. I know that the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. HOEY] will not be present. He has informed me that he had to go home. I do not know about the others. Therefore, I would not be willing to now set an arbitrary time to vote. I hope by the time we resume in the morning I shall have had an opportunity to talk to the other Senators to find out whether they wish to be heard. If they wish to be heard, I will so state to the Senator from Alabama. The Senator from Florida hopes that he will not have to say anything further on the subject. If he does, it will not take more than a few minutes, and will be only to round out a few of the deficiencies in what he has said already.

Mr. HILL. As I understand it, the Senator is not in a position to agree to any unanimous-consent agreement at this time as to when a vote could be had?

Mr. HOLLAND. No, except that I would hope that a vote could be taken sometime tomorrow.

Mr. HILL. I am sure that the Senator heard the distinguished Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] express great hope that the Senate might consider tomorrow a bill reported from the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, authorizing a loan to Yugoslavia. I do not know how long that bill will take, but it is certainly very much to be desired that we conclude consideration of the pending bill as early tomorrow as possible, so that the other bill may be taken up.

I am sure that the distinguished Senator from Florida will agree with the Senator from Alabama that, since it is now before the Senate, we want to finish the bill, and not temporarily lay it aside and then go back over it again, at which time the Senator from Florida might feel that he had to make his speech over again, and I might feel that I had to make my speech over again. If we can conclude the consideration of this bill at an early hour tomorrow, I think we shall have better assurance that we can dispose of the bill. Unless I am mistaken, or unless something unforeseen should occur, after the amendment of the Senator from Florida is disposed of I think we should be able to move rather rapidly toward final disposition of the bill.

Mr. HOLLAND. So far as the Senator from Florida is concerned, he has no intention of speaking on the bill after the amendment is disposed of. He will vote for the bill if his amendment is adopted, and vote against it if it is not. He does not expect to make further remarks. He does not know whether any of the seven or eight other Senators who had strong feelings on this measure in September, and whose names, by the way, appear in the debate as of that day, will wish to be heard tomorrow. But since he knows that they did have such feelings, he would not be willing to agree now to an arbitrary time for the vote. The Senator from Florida makes that statement without any expression of a desire on his part to make a second speech. He wishes to avoid the necessity of visiting such an affliction upon his friend from Alabama. He is quite willing to listen to a second speech by the Senator from Alabama, because his mellifluous tones always bring great enjoyment not only to the Senator from Florida, but I am sure to all others who are privileged to be present and hear what he has to say.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I return the tribute to my friend from Florida.

As I understand, if the Senator from Florida wishes to speak at all, it will be only to conclude, and finish off any rough edges which may remain.

Mr. HOLLAND. That is correct. However, the Senator from Florida does not foreclose himself as against answering anything which he feels is new which may be brought up. He has no intention whatever of making another speech, but he is not willing to tie his hands in such a way that he cannot defend himself if he should be assaulted tomorrow by the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. HILL. The Senator knows that if he concludes his speech now, under the rules of the Senate he is entitled not only to another speech on the amendment if he wishes to make another speech, but also to two speeches on the bill if he sees fit to make two speeches.

Mr. HOLLAND. The Senator from Florida has no intention of thus imposing on the Senate.

Mr. HILL. Knowing the capability and resourcefulness of my friend, I know that he could perhaps make some motion which would allow him two more speeches.

In the first place, the Senator from Alabama has no disposition to shut off his friend from Florida. In the second place, the Senator from Alabama has been in the Senate long enough to understand well the futility of any attempt to shut off any other Senator. I will say to the Senator from Florida that I do not believe in shutting off Senators. However, I believe that when we can unanimously agree to cut off debate, it is greatly to be desired.

Does the Senator wish to retain the floor tomorrow?

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes. The Senator from Florida knows perfectly well that he can speak at least three more times on this subject, but that is not his desire. His only purpose in asking that he retain the floor is that he would like his speech to be a single statement. If he finds—which he probably will—that it needs some polishing, and has manifest deficiencies, he would like to patch it up before it is assaulted by the Senator from Alabama tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Florida? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—EXTENSION OF RENT CONTROL

During the delivery of Mr. HOLLAND'S speech,

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Maurer, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 207) to continue for a temporary period certain provisions of the Housing and Rent Act of 1947 as amended, with an amendment; that the House insisted upon its amendment to the joint resolution, asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. SPENCE, Mr. BROWN of Georgia, Mr. PATMAN, Mr. MONRONEY, Mr. WOLCOTT, Mr. GAMBLE, and Mr. KUNKEL were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the enrolled bill (H. R. 5967) to amend the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, to clarify the status of freight forwarders and their relationship with motor common carriers.

EXTENSION OF RENT CONTROL

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLLAND. The Senator from Florida understands that the Senator from South Carolina, chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, desires to complete the work of the Congress upon the measure providing for extension of rent control, and if he may do so without losing his right to the floor, he will be glad to yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, that is my request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HENDRICKSON in the chair) laid before the Senate the following amendment of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 207) to continue for a temporary period certain provisions of the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended, together with a message from the House insisting upon its amendment and requesting a conference with the Senate thereon:

Resolved, That the joint resolution from the Senate (S. J. Res. 207) entitled "Joint resolution to continue for a temporary period certain provisions of the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended," do pass with the following amendment: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert: "That section 204 (f) of the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended, is hereby amended by striking out 'December 31, 1950' in each place it occurs therein and inserting in lieu thereof 'March 31, 1951'."

Mr. MAYBANK. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House, agree to the request of the House for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. President, I appreciate the fact that I have the privilege of suggesting the conferees. I would only suggest who should be appointed as conferees, because this matter was just called to my attention, and I have not had time to confer with the Presiding Officer. I would suggest that the ranking Democratic members of the committee—myself, the Senator from Idaho [Mr. TAYLOR], and the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT], and on the Republican side of the committee the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART] be considered by the Presiding Officer for appointment as the conferees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from South Carolina. Without objection, the motion is agreed to; and the Chair appoints as the conferees on the part of the Senate the Senators just named by the Senator from South Carolina, namely, the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MAYBANK], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. TAYLOR], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY], and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART].

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN] has just called my attention to the fact that the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] may not be here. Therefore, I suggest that in the absence of the Senator from New Hampshire, the Presiding Officer appoint the next ranking Republican member of the committee, if the Chair so desires.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair appoints the Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS], instead of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY], as one of the conferees on the part of the Senate.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business, for the consideration of new reports on the Executive Calendar.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HENDRICKSON in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Reports of committees are in order. If there be no reports of committees, without objection, the clerk will proceed to state the nominations newly reported to the calendar.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I have no objection at all, except that I wish to restate what I said last night, that there is no objection on this side of the aisle to considering nominations passed over, or any nomination on the calendar.

Mr. HILL. The only nomination passed over is one now under consideration by a Senate committee, and we would not desire to have that taken up when the committee is considering it.

Mr. WHERRY. I did not know whether the Senator knew that I stated last night that there was no objection on this side of the aisle to considering any nomination on the calendar if it were seen fit to do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the clerk will proceed to state the nominations newly reported.

DIPLOMATIC AND FOREIGN SERVICE

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Walter S. Gifford, of New York, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Great Britain.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Howard H. Tewksbury, of New Hampshire, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Paraguay.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Sidney H. Browne, of New Jersey, to be a consul general of the United States of America.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair requests that that nomination be passed over, and, without objection, it will be passed over.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Robert Y. Brown, of Alabama, to be a consul general of the United States of America.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, the nominations commencing with that of Robert Y. Brown appear to be routine nominations. Therefore I ask unanimous consent that they be confirmed en bloc.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President. now that the Sidney H. Browne nomination has been passed over, there is no objection to considering the other routine nominations en bloc, so far as the Senator from Nebraska is concerned.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Alabama? The Chair hears none, and the routine nominations in the Diplomatic and Foreign Service are confirmed en bloc, with the exception of the one passed over.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT BOARD

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Nelson A. Rockerfeller, of New York, to be Chairman of the International Development Advisory Board.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

ECONOMIC COOPERATION ADMINISTRATION

The legislative clerk read the nomination of William C. Foster, of New York, to be Administrator for Economic Cooperation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Richard M. Bissell, Jr., of Massachusetts, to be Deputy Administrator for Economic Cooperation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

TECHNICAL COOPERATION ADMINISTRATOR

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Henry G. Bennett, of Oklahoma, to be Technical Cooperation Administrator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed. That completes the Executive Calendar.

RECESS

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, as in legislative session, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 19 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Friday, December 8, 1950, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 7, 1950

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Bernard Braskamp, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who art the Supreme Ruler of the Universe and the guiding intelligence in the life of men and of nations, we pray that we may now be inspired with a reassuring sense of Thy greatness and goodness, Thy presence and power, Thy love and care.

We humbly confess that we feel so insignificant and helpless when we think of ourselves in our relationship to the many difficult problems in this time of national and world crisis.

There seems to be so little that we can do, individually, to direct the fateful course of human events. Even the wisest know so little. The odds against our moral and spiritual idealism appear so great.

Help us daily to encourage ourselves and one another with the glad assurance that in all our desires and struggles to champion and serve the cause of freedom against tyranny, of right against wrong, of good against evil, we are not alone, for the Lord of righteousness is with us.

May this assurance be our strength and the climax of our praise and the grand crescendo in all our thoughts and feelings.

Hear us in the name of the Christ who is the captain of our salvation. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Woodruff, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 5967. An act to amend the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, to clarify the status of freight forwarders and their relationship with motor common carriers.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

[Mr. JENKINS addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

CONGRATULATIONS, BOB DOUGHTON

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, the members of the Committee on Ways and Means, together with the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the minority and majority leaders, and the Parliamentarian assembled at breakfast this morning at 8:30 in the Speaker's dining room in honor of our beloved and distinguished chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON], marking his twenty-fifth anniversary as a member of the Committee on Ways and Means.

I felt sure that the Members of the House would be glad to join the members of the Committee on Ways and Means and officials of the House in paying this deserved tribute to our distinguished and beloved chairman, and to join in wishing him many happy returns.

FISCAL PHILOSOPHY IN VERSE

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, while I sat in committee this morning I was handed a little verse. I added a couple of lines to it. Now, I do not want you to think that I am a poet, but I just want to read these few lines:

We must balance our budget
And conserve our cash,
Or we will meet the same fate
As Truman's haberdash!

Now do you not think
Before it's too late,
If our country does not stop spending
It will meet the same fate?

My colleagues, look into the need
Of this European and Asiatic blending,
It's your duty to heed—
Little lending, no giving, and less spending.

DEAN ACHESON, SECRETARY OF STATE

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Speaker, 9 years ago today the Japanese air force struck the infamous blow against our people in Hawaii, a blow which will be characterized as an infamy as long as history is read.

Today we are faced with the possibility of an even greater danger than December 7. The United Nations is fighting for its life. Unless it lives, the peace of the world may die.

A stanch defender of that United Nations organization, and a man who has done much to promote its growth and solve its problems, is under attack here in our Nation's Capital. The man I speak of is Secretary of State Dean Acheson.

His great record in formulating and implementing the Marshall plan, the Atlantic Pact, the Western Hemisphere mutual defense agreement, and his latest attempt to correct the obstructive use of the veto by a single member of the Security Council, are now forgotten by those who seek to destroy this great public servant.

At a time when it is most urgent that the hands of our Secretary of State be upheld in international councils, at a time when the prestige of the United States depends upon the respect of other nations for our No. 1 foreign relations representative, we see the sorry spectacle of men who fail to see the significance of their actions in attempting to discredit our Secretary of State, and who fail to see that the goal of national security can only be attained through unity.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, to revise and extend my remarks and include a newspaper editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, we are not in the midst of an election campaign; gentlemen, we are in the midst of a war.

Therefore, there is a complete lack of responsibility in the partisan attacks aimed at our Secretary of State, Dean Acheson, as are being presently formulated not distant from here. The Members of Congress of both Houses must soberly review and evaluate the possible consequences of such conduct. This immaturity in political thinking plays directly into the hands of Communists. Nothing would suit the enemy's purpose more than the breaking down of the people's faith in the conduct of our foreign affairs. That, together with the rift that such idle and reckless talk can cause between us and friendly nations, makes the leaders of Communist aggression wring their hands in glee.

This is a time for sobriety. I emphasize that such loose talk can do nothing but cause friendly peoples soon to lose faith in the efficacy of the United States in the role of world leadership.

Wild, unsubstantiated charges against our Secretary of State, I repeat, reassure our enemies and dismay our friends.

I repeat the first paragraph of a pertinent editorial in today's New York Herald Tribune:

REPUBLICANS AND MR. ACHESON

It would be difficult to imagine a more inopportune moment for Senator IVES to have lent the prestige and influence of his name to the list of those calling for Secretary of State Acheson's replacement. The Secretary is in the midst of negotiations of the most delicate and far-reaching kind. The country is in a crisis which demands of everyone a readiness to pull together for large ends. It was perhaps too much to ask that those who have been assailing Secretary Acheson for months as a personal devil should forbear in the hour when so much goes ill, but it would have seemed more in character for Senator IVES, whose statesmanship has been of the highest order, to choose some other timing for his intervention. His words will carry a large, and conceivably a decisive, weight in today's meeting of the Senate Republican Policy Committee, where the question of making Mr. Acheson's resignation a matter of party policy will be under discussion.

DEAN ACHESON, SECRETARY OF STATE

Mr. BOLLING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOLLING. Mr. Speaker, at the most critical time in our country's history, when the fate of freemen everywhere may depend on the steadiness, wisdom, and unity of the American people, we find short-sighted individuals attacking the character and integrity of our Secretary of State, Dean Acheson. The purpose of this attack is clear and clearly political. The real result may not be understood even by the attackers themselves. But the fact is that the half-truths and untruths uttered with respect to Dean Acheson are having the effect of confusing and disuniting the American people. It is imperative today that all individuals who occupy positions of responsibility behave in a responsible manner.

Dean Acheson's record is clear. His world-wide reputation among the free peoples as an outstanding champion of freedom is enormous. He and his accomplishments will live in history long after the names of his detractors are forgotten.

Among his many great accomplishments as Secretary of State is the welding together in the Western Hemisphere of the organization of American States.

Our active cooperation with the other American Republics in the construction of dependable machinery for maintaining peace and security in the Western Hemisphere is a part of the fundamental policy of the United States to seek constantly and energetically the world-wide organization of peace in a free and stable world. The Secretary of State, Dean Acheson, personally has contributed enormously to the success of this policy in the Western Hemisphere. The Rio Pact and the Organization of American Republics represent real progress toward mutual understanding, mutual defense, and mutual assistance in this area of the world. To Mr. Acheson must be given much of the credit for this success in American foreign policy.

Mr. HUBER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUBER. Mr. Speaker, unlike the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN], I am unable to find anything amusing in the sincere statements of the gentleman from California [Mr. HOLIFIELD] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] upholding the hand of Secretary of State Acheson during this period of emergency. I want to compliment them for their patriotism and their unwillingness to engage in demagoguery when all Americans should be united regardless of political affiliation or geographical origin. If every Member of this House had voted for as much legislation designed to stop the ungodly hordes of communism as the gentleman from California [Mr. HOLIFIELD] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER], we might not be in the critical world position in which we find ourselves today. I only hope that more Members will join unselfishly to support our President, our Cabinet officers, and all those who are trying to protect us from the grave danger that threatens our country.

ANNIVERSARY OF ATTACK ON PEARL HARBOR

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, today is the anniversary of the attack on Pearl Harbor. I well remember the day the Japanese struck. I also remember the warnings I had given to the House against arming Japan.

Japan fought and used our materials of war against the United States forces. The Congress today should insist, Mr. Speaker, that we stop arming hostile communistic nations. The war matériel that has been used against our boys in Korea and the arms and munitions the United States sent to Russia and to other Communist countries should never have been sent. I warned against that also. Korea was another Pearl Harbor. Does America never learn?

Mr. Speaker, my gratitude goes out to those men who gave their lives at Pearl Harbor and those men who are giving their lives for us in Korea. The least we can do for them is to see to it that we do not give arms and ammunition to hostile governments to use against our boys. To arm our enemies is a crime against America.

DEAN ACHESON

Mr. HUGH D. SCOTT, JR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUGH D. SCOTT, JR. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BOLLING] says: "The record of the Secretary of State is clear." It is. Nine years have passed since Pearl Harbor and we have lost every diplomatic contest in our dealings with the nations of the world. It is important that we shall not lose this one, and that there shall be no surrender or appeasement to communism. The record of the Secretary of State is clear. That is why he should resign forthwith.

TURKISH SOLDIERS IN KOREA

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, reports from Korea have indicated the tremendous fortitude and gallantry of the Turkish troops who are fighting side by side with the other nations in Korea. Turkey occupies a most strategic place bordering on the Mediterranean, defending the Dardanelles and being situated on the border of Russia. For over 1,000 years the Turkish Army has shown its courage, and we are fortunate to have Turkish soldiers fighting side by side with us in Korea.

AMENDING THE HOUSING AND RENT ACT OF 1947

Mr. LYLE. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 876 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9763) to amend the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. LYLE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ALLEN] and I now yield myself such time as I may require.

Mr. Speaker, this resolution makes in order the immediate consideration of H. R. 9763. H. R. 9763 is by no means an extension of rent control, and, in my judgment, this measure has stirred up an unnecessary amount of agitation. The last Rent Control Act provided the date of December 31, 1950, for automatic decontrol in the event various States or political subdivisions thereof did not take affirmative action to extend rent control until June 1951, the date all rent control on a Federal level was to cease. That bill also authorized the States or political subdivisions thereof to decontrol by affirmative action. The present measure does not change the basic provisions of the bill; it simply extends the automatic decontrol date until March 1951. It cannot be rightfully said, Mr. Speaker, that we do violence to any democratic process when we require affirmative action rather than silence or no action at all. I am of the opinion after discussing this matter with many Members that they are unhappy over the circumstances which place rental property under controls and at the same time permits full freedom for unlimited profits in all other fields of economic endeavor. That is not, however, the question before us at this moment. The question of the extension of rent control will not be before this body until the next session. Each of us will have an opportunity then in the light of our own experiences and in the light of the circumstances in our own communities to determine the advisability of such legislation. I believe this resolution should be adopted.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I reserve my time.

Mr. LYLE. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9763) to amend the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 9763, with Mr. WHITTINGTON in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, the present bill does but one thing. It strikes out the expiration date of the present Rent Control Act, December 31, 1950, and inserts in lieu thereof March 31, 1951. It continues the existing act for 3 months, in order that the next Congress may consider the matter.

I am not an advocate of controls. I do not believe in the regimentation of free people, but the necessity for a continuation of this act is now just as great as the necessity for the original enactment of the act providing for rent control.

Our great Nation, which has been the leader of the world for 161 years, is in peril. This is a critical time. On the ice-covered, wind-swept hills of Korea our fine boys are fighting a desperate battle, a battle for the rentention of our liberties. We are fighting a great sinister force in the world. At a time like this men must give up some of their rights in order that others may be preserved. Men must forego some of their profits in order that they may retain the things that we have cherished for a century and a half.

Housing is a difficult thing to obtain. We may have a lack of food today, and tomorrow we may have plenty, but housing is something that it takes a long time to produce. By reason of the present hostilities there is bound to be a shift in the population of our people. There is bound to be great necessity for housing. There is an opportunity for some to impose on others. This act is no reflection on the good landlord. There are many good landlords, and there are some bad tenants. But it is a condition that confronts us now and one that I think we must meet.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPENCE. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. COLMER. I asked the distinguished chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee to yield to me for the purpose of making a brief statement. First, I wish to say that the gentleman from Kentucky is making a very able statement and a very true statement.

On the day before yesterday when application was made for a rule for the consideration of this bill, I was inclined to go along with it. I voted against it, not because I did not think we needed rent control. I do think we need rent control, but because I think that we need all other controls, across-the-board controls, and a general mobilization of the efforts of this country to meet the impending disaster that faces us. I hope the distinguished chairman of the committee, and the members of the committee, for whom I have a profound respect, will do everything within their power to see to it that we do have these all-out across-the-board controls, because, I repeat, again and again, that you cannot control one commodity without controling the other. The power in this bill should be continued, but we ought to, and the administrative should have it brought most forcefully to its attention that we should have these across-the-board controls.

I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

Mr. SPENCE. The President has the power now to impose controls.

Mr. COLMER. But he does not use it.

Mr. SPENCE. It is a poor citizen in this time of peril to the country who will not willingly submit to controls that are aimed at the survival of our institutions and our economy. I expect that as time goes on and the need exists there will be general controls imposed. But housing is the thing before us now. Materials are being channeled into the war effort that are necessary for the building of houses; the control of credit has made those who were desirous of constructing homes less able to do so. The necessity for rent control is as strong now as it ever has been, but in this bill we are not foreclosing that question at all; we are not settling the question of rent control; we are merely by this act sending it to the next Congress to consider whether or not we need rent control and what character of rent control we do need.

The cities now have the power to decontrol; many of them have exercised it. But if we do not pass an act such as this, the local machinery that has regulated rents will have been dissipated and destroyed, and it will be necessary to set up new machinery; it will be necessary to consider this matter anew. The enactment of this act will leave matters in statu quo so that the next Congress can consider it carefully, will have the opportunity by reason of time and other things to go into the details of the matter and will consider it in relation to the conditions that exist at that time.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me briefly?

Mr. SPENCE. I have only 10 minutes but I will yield for a brief question.

Mr. COLMER. I thank the gentleman. I agree again with what the gentleman says, and, as the gentleman will recall, I pointed that out in the Rules Committee hearing, but what I want to know now is whether the distinguished chairman of the committee can tell us if the powers that be are ready to impose these across-the-board controls that the country needs?

Mr. SPENCE. I cannot speak for the President; I do not know what his intentions are. I assume he is going to do the things that are necessary to stabilize the whole economy and to strengthen us in order that we may meet the great problems that present themselves to us, but it is inconceivable to me that a Congress would say in the light of our present conditions, in the light of the necessities that present themselves, in the light of the need for housing—for civilized man cannot live without housing—that they would not consider this bill, would vote it down, and by that means let rent control expire in many sections where it is needed and where it has not been continued by reason of the procrastination, indecision, or doubt of the local governing body.

I ask the House to vote this bill out in order that we may carefully and prudently consider what is needed in the way of rent control in the early part of the next session.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 13 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, on June 23, 1950, just about 6 months ago, we provided for the orderly decontrol of rents. We decided as a matter of policy at that time that the question of rent control was no longer one for the Federal Government, that it was strictly a local matter and should be treated as a local matter. We set up the machinery at that time by which municipalities could either continue control beyond December 31 or not in their discretion. We provided that any incorporated city, village, or town which desired to continue rent control beyond December 31, 1950, could do so by passing a resolution.

In light of the controversy in the Supreme Court today in the Los Angeles case, may I say that we did not provide that they should pass an ordinance. The law expressly says that they may declare their intent by resolution. Just to carry that thought a little further, and perhaps be a little ridiculous in order that we may see what the intent of Congress was at that time, we might have theoretically, and within our legislative rights, said that a city could continue rent control beyond December 31, 1950, if the clerk of the city wrote to the chairman of the committee down here, or if any person in the United States in a civilian capacity or otherwise declared that rent control should continue in that city. We said "resolution" and we meant what we said and we did not say or mean "ordinance" when we said "resolution."

So any city that desires the continuance of rent control beyond December 31 may by resolution continue it. The only reason, Mr. Chairman, this bill is before us today is because so many of the cities and municipalities have indicated by their failure to take action to continue rent control up to the present time that in Tighe Woods' opinion rent control at the Federal level is going out the window. The only pressure for discontinuance of these controls beyond December 31 and the only justification for it is Tighe Woods.

Do we want to keep the promise which we made to the muncipalities 6 months ago that they could by certain action or failure to take action, simple as the action might be, continue rent controls in their localities or not as they saw fit?

Is there any justification for the continuance of the automatic decontrols beyond December 31? None whatsoever, excepting to keep Mr. Tighe Woods in office. There is no economic justification for this resolution. There is a political justification for it, because let me charge without fear of successful contradiction that this resolution is sponsored by those who want to continue controls for control's sake.

Let me point out that there is no economic justification for this. The Government gets out every month—and you probably get it—a document entitled "Economic Indicators." It is a splendid authenticated document. The Bureau of Labor Statistics and all the rest of them contribute to it. It is an official document, originally gotten out for the Joint Committee on the Economic Report and later, under resolution, made available to all Members of Congress. You will have in mind that last year we passed a control bill; a production-control bill, so-called. It was predicated upon the desirability of giving the President the authority to control prices and services if and when he found that prices and services had increased or threatened to increase disproportionately, and that there would be danger to our economy unless prices and the cost of services were controlled. Now there has been a great deal of discussion as to why the President has not exercised controls over food prices, over the cost of services, over the cost of heating, over the cost of all other essentials, but, at the same time, comes in here and asks for this continuance of one category of services, namely, rent.

Let us look at the Government record in this respect. On the 1940 average monthly basis the cost of all items has increased 73.6 percent. The cost of food has increased 112 percent. The cost of apparel has increased 89 percent. The cost of fuel, electricity, and refrigeration has increased 42.1 percent. House furnishings have increased 95 percent. In contrast, rent has increased only 20.2 percent. There is the official Government record. Now, I say that there is not an economic problem confronting this Congress at the present time insofar as this resolution is concerned. If there is this emergency, which my worthy and very highly esteemed colleague, the chairman of the commitee, says exists today, then there is such an economic emergency as to compel the President to use the powers which we gave him this last year to control these prices which in all instances have increased more than three times the amount which rent has increased. So there is no economic justification for this. Yes; there is a political justification for it. There is a political justification for it because the forces which dominate the policy of this Government, which are in the driver's seat, want rent control. They are not the home owners. They want to buy their goods at low prices and sell them at high prices. They are not being fair, they are not being equitable. They are not viewing this as an economic problem, or they could not stand on their own two feet. It is a political problem.

This bill is indicative of the extent to which these forces will go to show that they do dominate Government policy, and we are expected to swallow it in the name of emergency.

No opposition witnesses were allowed to appear on this bill. We had three Government witnesses before the committee. Two of the Government witnesses showed by their testimony that they knew absolutely nothing about the situation. They talked of continuing controls in Biloxi, Miss., when controls have never been taken off in Biloxi, Miss. They used Detroit, Mich., as an area that was getting short, and in which rent control should be continued. Rent controls have never been discontinued in Detroit, Mich. This shows how little these Government people knew about the situation.

No, there are a few top brass who insist upon taking their families with them into war, who want rent control continued in the areas adjacent to the installations where they are serving. The only justification for the continuance of rent control, the only justification for the denial to the localities of the right to discontinue rent control, is that these top brass want rent control continued so they can take their families with them into war.

They tell us that in the vicinity of these camps rent control is necessary because of a housing shortage. That is a question of policy which this Congress or somebody has to solve finally. It is simply this: Do we encourage the families of men who are being sent into these camps temporarily for training to take their families with them into war? It has never been done before.

The problem here in Camp Pickett, which has caused the two United States Senators from Connecticut to raise their voices in favor of increased housing facilities, lies only in the fact that the families of those men from Connecticut insist on living in the vicinity of Camp Pickett, where their men folks are training. What is going to happen when after the 90-day training period or the 120-day training period the men move on to Korea? What happens to these families? Are they going back to the areas from which they came, or are they going to insist upon their right to stay in the vicinity of these camps and multiply this problem a hundredfold, because the new families will come in with the new men and, so long as we adhere to that as a matter of policy, we are going to have housing shortages in the vicinity of these camps. That is a problem which this Congress or the top brass in our military will have to solve outside this bill.

Let me reiterate that there is no economic justification for this bill. You are not keeping faith with the localities which have crystallized these issues within their municipalities, who have made up their minds either to continue rent control beyond December 31 or to let it die.

There are 3,250,000 units in these areas which would go out of control at the discretion of the governing bodies of these municipalities on December 31, 1951. Therein lies the necessity they claim for continuing these controls because if these areas are decontrolled, Tighe Woods will lose his job. That is the only justification for continuing rent control.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may require to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ADDONIZIO].

Mr. ADDONIZIO. Mr. Chairman, while the continuation of rent control is a matter of primary importance to the 660,000 renters of housing units in northeastern New Jersey, it is also a matter of primary importance to the Nation's expanding military and defense production needs.

We are faced today with a situation not contemplated when the present Rent Control Act was drafted. Since 1947, Congress has each year modified the rent-control law to bring about the earliest possible decontrol of local communities. As a matter of fact, the Congress has made it so easy, that the present rent-control law could more properly be considered a rent-decontrol law. Basically, the theory behind the present easy decontrol procedure is that we are at peace and that if some local community took premature decontrol action, it would be a calculated risk which would affect only that community.

However, since the Rent Act of 1950 was passed, the North Korean forces brutally and without provocation invaded southern Korea. With the expansion of our military plant since that date and with the contemplated increases in necessary production of war material, what had been formerly a matter of strictly local concern has become a matter of national concern. Many local communities have recognized their responsibilities to the Nation and, where a housing shortage has existed, have resolutely asked for continuation of Federal controls. In other communities, however, you have a sorry record of local governing bodies putting local greed before the interests of national defense and going ahead to take advantage of easy decontrol procedure in the face of a mounting housing shortage in their communities and the prospects of a still tighter housing shortage in the future. In some instances the pleas and representations of the military and naval forces representatives have been brushed aside or ignored.

On November 7, after less than an hour's consideration, the city council of Pensacola, Fla., voted to end controls on December 31 despite evidence presented by the Military and Naval Establishments that the housing situation in Pensacola is critically acute.

Lt. Col. C. J. Baldrick, representing General Boatner, told the city council that more than 300 civilian and military personnel were awaiting a chance to rent homes and that many of the military personnel were forced to leave their families because of the shortage of housing in Pensacola and the high rents charged for new construction.

Lt. Comdr. George S. Robinson, representing the naval air basic training unit, revealed to the city council that a survey of 2,400 housing units revealed only 15 vacancies and that the Pensacola Housing Authority had 1,350 units with no vacancies and a waiting list of 950.

The commander further told of the Navy's investigation of 112 places listed for rent in the local newspapers. Eighty-three of the 112 places were contacted. Fifty-six were rented before his phone call had reached the landlord or rental agent. Sixteen were still available but three of these were of a flophouse variety and five were out of the city. Five of the sixteen would permit no children; five had no central heating and in others the occupants had to share a bath with other families.

In spite of this testimony the Pensacola City Council voted for decontrol December 31. The councilman who made the decontrol motion expressed the opinion that Congress had passed the city council a "hot potato" and he was in favor of tossing it back to Congress.

Under the present rent act there is no way in which the newly developed needs of vital defense areas for rent control can be met. In San Diego, which was decontrolled on September 1, the recall of Navy Reservists and expansion of fleet and shore activities is daily increasing the shortage of housing. In the Navy housing in San Diego, families needing larger quarters cannot be shifted to larger quarters because the shift itself would keep badly needed housing from being used for a precious day or two. The situation is particularly bad in San Diego for fleet-based personnel. The permanently shore-based personnel quite naturally and understandably gets first call on the available housing. At present neither the city council nor the Office of Housing Expediter can do anything to bring Federal rent control back to this area which is vital to the needs of national defense. The situation will have to be met either at this session or early in the next session of the Congress.

Many charges and complaints have been made as to the bureaucratic administration of the rent-control law, as to the arbitrary rulings of officials with no knowledge of local conditions, and so on. We are all familiar with them. However, the truth of the matter is that every effort has been made to decontrol wherever possible, and to decentralize operations so as to provide for local administration. I am personally well acquainted with the administration of this law in my State, and I have been particularly impressed with the devotion to civic duty shown by the members of the Northeast New Jersey Rent Advisory Board. Included as members of this rent advisory board are such distinguished Americans and citizens of New Jersey as Dr. Eugene E. Agger, dean of department of economics, Rutgers University; A. N. Lockwood, past president of the New Jersey Association of Real Estate Boards; and the Honorable George R. Morrision, judge of the Middlesex County District Court.

Such distinguished citizens as these have given freely of their time and intelligence to make rent control both humane and workable in the nine counties of the northeastern New Jersey area. These are independent local citizens whose recommendations are made without a tinge of obligation to the Office of the Housing Expediter except to render to the OHE the best possible advice both as regards individual cases and general administration of rent control in the area.

Here, on the local level, a tenant representative, a landlord representative, and public interest representatives work together to resolve differences in viewpoints. These men—and women—consider not only the general problems of the landlords and the tenants in their area but they handle the individual appeals parties who feel that the decision of the area rent office was not just. The landlord and tenant can be assured that their problem will receive individual attention and the benefit of a group decision of civic-minded local citizens who are in constant contact with their problems.

To an amazing extent, apparently impossibly conflicting viewpoints are reconciled and both landlord and tenants leave with the knowledge that their cases have received the maximum consideration possible.

The Office of the Housing Expediter is to be commended for its fostering and encouraging the maximum of local administration of a Federal regulation.

The Northeast New Jersey Rent Advisory Board is democracy at work. As its members quietly go about their work, they are once again proving the strength of democracy's political institutions.

Any future rent-control legislation should be designed to strengthen and extend the influence of these local groups in administering rent control on the local level.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH].

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] with his great ability and ingenuity always endeavors to impress the Members with the importance of some of the so-called objections to rent control which come to his mind. In this instance, of course, ever since 1947 he has been against rent control. Only yesterday during the hearing before the Committee on Rules, I asked some of the witnesses whether they could tell me of a single income-property owner who lost his property because of rent control. The fact is that the owners of property have been the beneficiaries of this law because ever since rent control went into effect they have had their apartments and houses occupied 100 percent. The owners are not obliged to make improvements on the premises and all the landlords have made money. Certainly there were some small real-property owners who did not receive increases which they thought they were entitled to. But when they made application for hardship increases or an adjustment and showed the need for such increase, same was granted in 84 percent of the cases, so I am informed.

Let us be candid. I know and you know that most of the opposition to rent control emanates from men who acquired the big tenement and apartment buildings after the crash for 15 and 20 cents on the dollar. These men and the real-estate lobby, as we all know, spent over a million dollars in its attempt to defeat any rent-control law. They are the most avaricious crowd I have ever come across. These men, who are so anxious to do away with all rent-control legislation in this emergency, are not satisfied with 50- to 100-percent return on their investment; they want 200 to 500 percent on the properties they acquired during the depression. They are the men who, whenever they had the chance to boost the rents, have done so. What chance do the poor tenants have who find it so hard with the high cost of living to pay these increases? I tell you we will have a great deal of trouble in most of the cities of the country if this extension is not granted. It is only for 3 months.

The gentleman has also called for controls over everything. Well, I have personally urged and advocated control ever since last June 1, when the steel, lumber, and other industries started to increase their prices from 30 percent to as much as 75 percent. But the President feels that he should not recommend or issue an Executive order putting on controls until he has fully studied the facts involving the imbalance in the national economy.

He is for control of prices where it is necessary, but he does not wish to impose controls where it is not necessary. This legislation is necessary. It only extends the decontrol provisions of the present act for 3 months, in cases where the cities have been unable to get together and legislate on this important subject. In view of that fact, I hope that you gentlemen who have a heart and a conscience will support this bill and vote for it so as to make it possible for these tenants to have a roof over their heads, at reasonable rentals.

In the city of Chicago we have extended rent control for 6 months but there are many other metropolitan areas where action has not been taken, although needed, first, because of continued pressure by the vicious and powerful real-estate lobby, and secondly, because many local governing bodies have been confronted with various legal technicalities as a result of the Federal court decision in Los Angeles.

What is the situation in Chicago today? Rental housing is virtually not available. Of the small number of dwellings actually produced for rent in the past several years, the lowest rentals were from $85 to $115 per month. However, of the 270,000 dwellings necessary at this moment to adequately house low-income families, 87,000 are needed at rentals of less than $43 per month. Another 24,000 units are needed at rentals between $43 and $49.

The present occupancy figures for Chicago are 99.2 percent. The figures for other major population areas all show vacancies of less than 2 percent, and these percentages cover all types of vacancies. With the rapid expansion of industrial activity in these large centers of population under the defense program, with the need for workers mounting and families moving into cities at a rapid pace, the situation will become infinitely more critical in the next 2 or 3 months. These workers, giving their all in the defense effort, must have the protection of rent control against the unscrupulous landlords who are ready to bleed them white, as I said before. Consequently I urge a favorable vote on this meritorious and humane bill. I am confident this bill will pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] has expired.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. COLE].

Mr. COLE of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, this bill is born in a fog of political expediency. It was conceived during the last political campaign, when the President of the United States felt it was necessary, by some means, fair, and, I say advisedly, foul, that he might stem the tide which was about to overwhelm the Democratic Party. He announced that it might be necessary for him to call a special session of Congress, at which time we would consider extension of rent control. So since that time it has been necessary for the President of the United States to sustain his idea that we need an extension of rent control.

The newspapers have been full of the fact that this bill calls for an extension of rent control. A radio commentator the other night, if you please, said, "Here in these dire days, unity between the great parties is needed, and we should have bipartisan enactment of this bill for the extension of rent control."

I have before me the bulletin of the national committee of the Democratic Party, Capital Comment. It contains this statement made December 2, 1950:

> Federal rent controls will expire on December 31 unless Congress extends them.

This is a patent misrepresentation.

That, Mr. Chairman, seems to be the issue today as presented by the President, the Democratic Party, and by some newspapers which have misunderstood the issue, and by other people who want the issue to be misunderstood.

Mr. Chairman, we must not make a mistake. As the gentleman from Texas who proposed the resolution adopting the rule said, this bill is not to extend rent control, and it is not. What is the issue here? The only issue presented by the bill as said by every Member of this House, in the committee, and on the floor today, is the extension of the automatic decontrol provision of the present law. In other words, one method of decontrolling rentals is eliminated by this bill. It leaves two other methods of decontrolling rentals; namely, rentals may be decontrolled by affirmative action of the municipality, or they may yet be decontrolled by action of the Expediter. Rent control, then, does continue until next year, the middle of 1951, irrespective of whether or not this bill is passed. Rent control will continue in more than 800 cities and municipalities irrespective of whether this bill is passed, and rent control will continue in every other municipality now under control and which believes that it needs it. No area, no city, no municipality, no State can be decontrolled if that particular area believes that it requires rent control.

So, Mr. Chairman, in the beginning of my statement I wish definitely and positively to clarify the fact that this issue is not the extension of rent control.

The other argument made in favor of this bill is also a phony one. Witnesses appeared before our committee, and those speakers who have already appeared before the House in favor of the bill, have said that it is a war emergency proposition. They have said that the bill is a necessary part of our defense and stabilization program. I want to quote what the President has said about it. He said:

> To carry out this program successfully and to safeguard our economy it will be necessary to keep rents in the vital defense areas from raising to unreasonable heights.

All right, if the President is sincere in that statement, if rent control is needed today as a safeguard to our economy, if the Democratic Party is sincere in that statement today, then I say to the President and to the Democratic Party that the power they now have to control prices and wages should be used.

Does this bill do anything to promote defense or economic stabilization? The answer, of course, is "No." And why is that? Because there are 1,000 areas in the United States which are now decontrolled but which formerly were under control. Those localities are in former and present defense areas. Those areas which are now decontrolled are adjacent to and near Army installations. They have been decontrolled irrespective of whether or not at the present time great numbers of workers are moving into the areas. They are decontrolled irrespective of whether or not bases are being reactivated; they are decontrolled irrespective of whether or not it is causing inflationary trends in the Nation.

Mr. Chairman, the only reason we have control today is because about 1,600 areas have not taken the step to decontrol. Will they take the step to decontrol? Or will they not take the step to decontrol? If they take the step to decontrol, it will not be decided upon the need to promote our national defense or economic stability. It will be taken upon a local determination of a local need.

Thus, on examination of the operation of the present rent-control law, as amended by this present bill, we find that both controlled and decontrolled areas have attained that status irrespective of our national defense or national economic needs. This is true today, and will be true afterward if the bill is passed.

Mr. Chairman, I challenge the supporters of this bill, its proponents, to show how this legislation can promote the national defense activities or economic welfare of this Nation.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLE of Kansas. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. KEATING. In connection with any one of these areas which have already decontrolled, this bill would not give them authority to recontrol, would it?

Mr. COLE of Kansas. Absolutely not.

Mr. KEATING. Even if we extend this law?

Mr. COLE of Kansas. Absolutely not.

Mr. KEATING. And any one of these areas which has not yet decontrolled can act today or at any time up to December 31 to extend control or decontrol?

Mr. COLE of Kansas. That is definitely right.

Mr. Chairman, I have not attempted to argue the right or wrong of rent control. I have supported rent control in the past; I have fought rent control in the past. I have done that because I believe that in times of great emergency controls which I abhor may be necessary. But apparently our emergency is not that extreme. The President does not believe it is or we would have price and wage control. However, if the extreme emergency has arrived, if you believe that it is here, this is not the bill to carry out the program, as I have previously shown.

In the Washington Daily News of December 5 appears a very interesting picture of a charming individual by the name of Alan Valentine. Underneath the picture it is stated that he was unanimously approved by the Senate Banking and Currency Committee as head of the Economic Stabilization Administration. He said that "group prices and wages should be stabilized with general controls when a certain economic plateau is reached."

Mr. Chairman, this apparently is the attitude of the administration in asking for this bill. First, political expediency, and, second, a desire to reach a plateau of economic inflation before controls are placed upon all commodities.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman two additional minutes.

Mr. COLE of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, but below that plateau is a group of "second-class" citizens, to borrow a word I have heard used here sometimes. Those second-class citizens are apparently the home owners and the landlords of America. Prices have risen, wages have risen, the economic structure has been boosted to an alarming height, with one exception. The one exception are those people who have the commodity, "houses," to lease to their neighbors.

Mr. Chairman, this bill does nothing to correct the economic instability in which this country finds itself, this bill does nothing to further the defense efforts of America, this bill does nothing to help those people who may be called upon to move from one community to another and enter into defense work. This bill, Mr. Chairman, does nothing but pull the President of the United States out of the political hole in which he found himself last November. If it passes, he can say, "I have accomplished something." The truth is, it accomplishes nothing. I repeat, in spite of the fact of political propaganda claims that the bill provides rent control extension, I hope I have shown to you that this is rent control detraction.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLE of Kansas. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Will this legislation permit the communities that have not taken action on rent control up to December 31 to consider it further after December 31?

Mr. COLE of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. That is the only thing it will do?

Mr. COLE of Kansas. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. DAVIS].

Mr. DAVIS of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the passage of this bill. On June 13, 1950, we passed in this body a bill extending rent control until December 31, 1950.

That bill, as it was finally enacted into law, contains a provision that any municipality desiring to remain under rent control after December 31, 1950, may vote through its governing body to do so, and continue rent control in that municipality until June 30, 1951.

It is not necessary at all that this bill be enacted in order to let municipalities which desire to continue rent control after December 31 have the right to do so. They have that right under existing law.

All that is necessary to be done is that the governing body of the municipality vote before December 31, 1950, to continue rent control until June 30, 1951. When that vote is taken, rent control automatically continues under existing law until June 30, 1951, in that area. The machinery for enforcing rent control in such areas continues to exist. The present law contains all necessary machinery, both local and national, to continue rent control until June 30, 1951, in each and every jurisdiction which desires to continue it. There is, therefore, no basis for the argument which has been advanced that this present bill is necessary to hold together rent control enforcement machinery until such time as the Eighty-second Congress can examine the situation and determine whether or not the Korean crisis requires a further extension of rent control.

For the past 2 years I have voted against continuation of rent controls. It is utterly unfair to the citizen who owns a dwelling house and desires to entr it to say to him "you must pay increased carpenter wages, you must pay increased plumber's wages, you must pay increased cost of lumber, cement, roofing, paint and all other materials. All these you must pay for at the 1950 rate, but you can only charge rent at the 1942 rate." This is unjust. It is not democratic.

In addition to this, a great part of the rental housing in this country is not under rent control, and never has been. New construction has been erected upon which the owners are at liberty to charge whatever rate is fixed by competition. There may be dwelling houses on the same street, one of which is under rent control, and the other not under it. The problem has grown into a hodgepodge of inequities and unfair situations.

Congress made it clear when the law was extended this year that it would finally expire on December 31, 1950, except as to such cities and areas as took affirmative action to continue it for 6 months until June 30, 1951.

If the Korean war has changed the situation to such an extent that rent control again is necessary in the war effort, then let controls be placed on everything else at the same time, and do not make the owner of rental dwelling property the goat for another period while the powers that be play politics with controls on all other necessities of life and with wages.

If the war effort requires rent control, it certainly requires controls on food and the other necessities of life. Also if the war effort requires rent control again, then let an equitable bill be worked out—and there is plenty of time to work it out between now and June 30, 1951—which will place rent control on a 1950 basis and take it off the 1942 basis.

For these reasons I am opposed to any extension of this legislation at this time.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, the Members of this House know how I feel generally on any kind of controls. I am against all controls except in emergencies. We passed the defense-production control bill a few months ago. If the President undertakes to carry out the intention of Congress and wants to place controls on some commodities and wages or across the board on everything tomorrow, he can do it. But, he cannot put controls on rents. Now, the purpose of this bill is not to take away the States rights provisions incorporated in the present law. Any city, community, or State automatically gets rid of Federal rent control under present law, unless affirmative action is taken by such body prior to December 31 to continue rent control.

The gentleman from Kansas intimated that politics entered into this bill. Gentlemen, this is no time to play politics on either side. How can you say that there is any politics in this bill? It contains only 6 lines. It just extends the operation of the present law 3 months so that we can consider, when we come back here, whether or not we need rent control, if we are going to have controls on all other commodities. Now, you think about this seriously. Yes, you saw what the Committee on Rules did. You saw them change their minds upon further consideration and investigation and vote out the rule. The able Congressman from Mississippi [Mr. COLMER], a member of the Committee on Rules, previously voted against it. He said a few minutes ago on the floor he was now convinced that this bill should be passed under present circumstances and he expected to vote for it.

You know I advocated all along and introduced an amendment a year or two ago to the effect that every land owner was entitled to a reasonable profit on his investment. About 2 years ago the House adopted this amendment, but the conferees of the House and Senate changed it to the point where it was not effective and I did not support the conference committee report. I have not been pleased at all with the way the rent-control laws have been administered. I took the position then and feel the same way now that every land owner is entitled to a reasonable return on his investment. I venture to say to the gentleman from Michigan and the gentleman from Kansas that if we had tried to change the present law by this bill we would encounter difficulty. We do not know whether or not circumstances will justify us in extending rent control next year or not.

This bill does but one thing: It gives us time to consider whether or not world conditions justify rent controls of any kind. Gentlemen, do not engender politics in this. I made a fight some time ago against cross-the-board controls, because there were only 12 or 15 commodities out of line at that time. I thought we ought to have controls on those commodities out of line at that time as well as on wages for producing those commodities, and if necessary later on controls across the board on prices and wages. Should we have controls across the board on commodities and wages we probably would be forced to have controls on rent.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. For a question.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. If this bill is not passed, could local communities between now and the 31st of December on their own initiative extend rent control?

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Yes; they can by affirmative action, but unless they take affirmative action, under the present law, they will be out from under control. You will have no machinery; you will have no local board or rent control office of any kind. There will be 25,000 cities and communities out from under Federal control, which affects 7,500,000 rental units. That is what you will have without affirmative action by the communities and States to continue rent control. All this bill does is to extend the present law for three more months so it can be determined whether or not another law is necessary. Under the law, you have to take affirmative action if you have controls any longer.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. That is what I was asking. Can local communities take affirmative action between now and the 31st of December?

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Absolutely, every local community in the land between now and December 31, or between now and March 31 under this bill, can meet and say, "We want controls." What is in this bill? How can anybody oppose a bill of this kind? If you were to try to load it down and change the policy from a States' rights policy it would be a different proposition, but we are only trying to get a little time to say whether or not we want to continue controls under present war conditions, and also in the event controls are placed on prices and wages. That is all it means.

Today it looks very much as if controls will be placed on commodities and labor soon, and if this is done, we will not have the machinery and cannot place controls of any kind on rent unless Congress passes this bill. We will have time in the next session to consider whether or not we want any type of rent control. That is all there is to it.

Wherever a State or local community has voted to do away with rent control, under the bill we are considering now it cannot be recontrolled. How can anybody oppose the bill?

The gentlemen on the other side who spoke against this bill are mighty fine and able men. They say this bill does not give you anything. It does extend the present law 90 days, and this is the reason I am going to vote for it. I am sure these gentlemen would not support a stronger rent-control bill at this time. We do not know whether or not we want further rent control next year, but if this law is not extended, we will not have any machinery to put on rent controls if controls are placed on every commodity in the United States and all of labor. Do you want to be caught in that position?

All you are doing is just saying, "Let us extend this States' rights rent-control bill for three more months so that the new Congress can determine whether or not we want any form of rent control." You cannot reinvoke rent control anywhere. You who do not have it in your States or in your communities will not be affected by this bill, but, on the other hand, you can take controls off in any community that wants to do it, or any State that wants to do so, not only from now to December 31 but, if this bill passes, for three more months.

I do not see how anybody can oppose a bill like this.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. KEATING. Is there not one exception to the rather sweeping statement that the gentleman made that this bill is needed to continue the machinery of Federal rent control? Is it not a fact that if this bill is not amended the machinery of Federal rent control will have to be continued anyway in order to take care of those communities which have already passed resolutions and which may hereafter pass resolutions to extend rent control?

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Only to a limited extent.

Mr. KEATING. I thought that if they had passed that resolution, then Federal rent control was in those communities until June 30.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Every community in the United States that now has rent control, unless it takes affirmative action before December 31, will be out from under rent control, but that does not apply to those that do take affirmative action. Therefore, the argument of the gentleman from Kansas and the gentleman from Michigan that this proposed legislation is just to pay the expenses of Tighe Woods does not hold water, because Tighe Woods will have to be paid anyhow.

We will not know until the first of the year whether we will need rent control or not. If so, we may want a different form of rent control. It depends altogether on the critical war situation and whether or not controls are to be placed on commodities and labor. We will be in position to know early next year whether or not conditions and circumstances will justify the extension of control on rent. I do not mean to say that I will support rent control next year, but I do want time in the face of world conditions today to give it consideration since it appears now that we are going to have controls soon on everything else.

Mr. KEATING. If the gentleman will yield further, to a degree I agree with him. I would be hesitant at the moment to cut off all Federal rent control because of the possibility that we might need it later as a part of general control. But I understand there will be machinery for Federal rent control continued anyway so that we will be in a position even without this legislation to meet that problem, together with the problem of other controls early in the next session. Am I correct in that statement?

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. You will be giving the communities three more months to decide whether or not under present world conditions they want rent control. They certainly ought to have that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE].

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I asked a question of the gentleman from Georgia, and I am not sure whether he understood me correctly because his answer did not correspond to what I thought I had read in the committee report. I would like to ask the gentleman from Michigan this question: Between now and the 31st of December can any community continue rent control by affirmative action of the governing body?

Mr. WOLCOTT. All that any municipality has to do is to pass a resolution containing the fact that it is desired that rent control continue in that municipality. Rent control then will automatically continue in that locality up to the minute of time as provided in the Federal act which is June 30. Therefore, any community that wants to continue rent control beyond December 31 merely has to pass a resolution under existing law which will automatically continue rent control beyond December 31 until June 30 of next year.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Then if one believes that the local community is the best judge of whether it wants rent control or not, the conclusion is that we do not need to pass this law to permit them to exercise their judgment?

Mr. WOLCOTT. The gentleman is correct. We do not need to pass this law at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has expired.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of the time to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO].

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, I was greatly interested in the discussion in reference to whether or not the governing body of a municipality had the right to pass a resolution to decontrol rent under the present law until December 31. Apparently there is a loophole in the present law, because at least in two communities in my district which have acted to decontrol rents they found that their resolution was not all that was required. They discovered it was necessary to obtain approval or confirmation of that resolution by the Rent Administrator, Tighe Woods. At least in one instance the Administrator saw fit to place such resolution in a pigeonhole to delay it or forget it. Rent control makes its own problems. Hardly anyone is silly enough to build anything for rent while rent control is in force.

I want to read a telegram received just a little while ago from the city attorney of Pontiac, Mich., a city of nearly 80,000 people. Here it is:

PONTIAC, MICH.,
December 7, 1950, 9:54 a. m.

Pontiac acted on rent decontrol by resolution. This action should not be invalidated by amendment. Oppose any change in rent law which would allow the term "resolution" to be construed as requiring or meaning an ordinance.

Signed, "William E. Ewart, city attorney, Pontiac, Mich."

This may not have any direct relation to the resolution before us today, but I believe it worth while to present to the House and the country a case where fear is expressed that the will of the people at the grass roots will be defeated and the action of the local governing body destroyed after they have acted upon and desire decontrol of rent.

I have consistently voted against the extension of rent control since the end of the war. I am opposed to this resolution and shall vote against it. The administration of rent control as I have observed it in my congressional district, and particularly as it applied to the small property owners, has been to force such owners to sell their property. This has added to the scarcity of units for rent. In too many cases rent control resulted in legalized robbery. The right to acquire and own property is an American right. To deprive people of that right is un-American and a direct blow to free government.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO] has expired.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 minute.

If a city has decontrolled, it remains decontrolled, and the passage of this act has no effect upon it. This bill merely gives it the opportunity until March 31, next, to decontrol if it desires to do so, but every city that has decontrolled remains decontrolled.

Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of the time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MULTER].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. MULTER] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Chairman, I wish to try to clear up some of the confusion that has been created, not intentionally but nevertheless created, by those who are opposing the enactment of this very simple bill. It does nothing but change the date December 31, 1950, to the date March 31, 1951, in the existing law. In doing so it extends the law, it continues it as it exists today for another 90 days, without in any way affecting any locality's right to decontrol if it wants to decontrol, as set forth in the existing law. It does not and will not reimpose controls upon any area which has heretofore decontrolled. It will keep the status quo. Conditions as they exist today will be continued for another 90 days after December 31 of this year, so that when we come back in the Eighty-second Congress we can then review the entire situation and hear everybody who wants to be heard on the subject and come in here and tell you what, if anything, should be done about the continuance of rent control.

We gave the President the right to control prices and wages, and everyone I am sure knows that he is now in the process of setting up machinery to control prices and wages. I think we were told when we had the bill before us for consideration that it would take anywhere from 6 months to a year to set up the proper machinery under which the Government could properly function in controlling those items. It would be absurd, I say, to ask us to wait until the President moves to control prices and wages before we continue or extend existing rent controls.

The argument that rents have not risen as much as other commodities or as much as wages is quite beside the point if we agree that we must control inflation. It is not a question of whether one commodity rose more than another or whether rents have kept pace. If a landlord feels he is not getting sufficient rent he can get relief and the landlords have been treated very well under the existing bill. If the landlord feels that he did not get a fair deal he has the right to appeal and present his case again and get what he is entitled to. In most instances, as I say, the landlords have been treated very fairly. The important thing to bear in mind now is that the police action in Korea as it was called when we passed this law 6 months ago has now, in the language of General MacArthur, developed into a new war. We are mobilizing for war and for all-out war. Steps must be taken and will be taken to channel material and necessary items into the war effort, into the mobilization for all-out war. Housing will necessarily have to take a back seat as mortar, and stone, and steel, and other items that go into housing must be channeled into the war effort. This situation as to housing must necessarily get worse and not better, unfortunately, in the years ahead. All we are trying to do by this bill is to keep the situation exactly as it is now until we can review the entire picture next month and come back to you with a complete report and tell you exactly what must be done and how it will have to be done. This business about the top brass, or Mr. Woods' wanting this bill extended is just nonsense. Mr. Woods is going to remain in his job until June 30, 1951, even if we do not pass this bill. What will happen is that if we do not pass this bill, in some 1,700 communities where live in excess of 25,000,000 people the rent machinery will immediately disappear; there will be no means of continuing control there at all, and if we then decide we must reimpose controls after December 31, if we should let them die now, Mr. Woods will have the necessity of building another organization. All we are asking is that you preserve this as it is now.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and thirteen Members are present, a quorum.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 204 (f) of the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended, is hereby amended by striking out "December 31, 1950" in each place it occurs therein and inserting in lieu thereof "March 31, 1951."

Mr. POULSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. MULTER] just made the statement that all this pending resolution does is change a date, and that is a correct statement. It extends the Rent Control Act for another three months, it extends for another three months the power and authority of the bureaucrats and the hold they have upon the throats of a certain segment of our population.

It also continues in power these bureaucrats with full authority. It does not give the people of the United States any more rights than they now have through their duly elected bodies. Under the existing law their city councils, or other elected organizations, can protect them so far as rent control is concerned, if they need protection, by an affirmative vote to extend this for 60 days or 6 months. If the particular bodies referred to feel that their communities do not need rent control, and they certainly know this better than anybody here in Washington, they can by lack of vote release the people from the control of these bureaucrats. So, either by affirmative action or by lack of affirmative action the duly elected representatives in each community can determine for the particular community involved whether the people shall have rent control or not.

Let us see what happens if this resolution is passed. Are the proponents of this measure anxious to give the people any additional rights? Let us refer for a moment to the city of Los Angeles. The local authorities of that city under their conception of the law voted decontrol last July. Mr. Tighe Woods refused to sign the necessary documents and used all of the tricks known to attorneys and to bureaucrats to postpone action. He was rejected in several courts and finally in a district court they ruled that the action of the Los Angeles City Council was not legal.

The provisions of the bill which we recently passed said that the people in any community could determine through their duly elected bodies whether or not they should have rent control. Mr. Woods was not going to pay any attention to that. He actually said they needed rent control.

Let us see whether these various communities need rent control or not. Look at the "for rent" ads in any Los Angeles city newspaper. There are hundreds and hundreds of places for rent. That situation also exists in all the surrounding territory.

Let me give you an example of what this rent control has done. A young man in my acounting office came back from the service and had to pay $75 a month rent in a city adjoining Los Angeles, while others who had not been in the service and were earning high wages in a factory were only paying $35 a month.

What happened when they permitted rent decontrol in that city? The veteran's rent went down to $50, and the others who had not served in the Army and who had benefited from high wages and from rent control had their rent raised to $50.

Mr. Chairman, if we need rent control within 90 days, Congress can pass such a law, but in the meantime there will have been an opportunity for rents to adjust themselves and level off so that new rent controls, if needed later, can start from the proper base. As the situation exists now some rents are unfair, some are out of line—some too high, some too low. Without this 90-day extension they can be adjusted equitably.

If we pass H. R. 9763 it means that Tighe Woods, the most power-hungry bureaucrat in Washington, will use every legal technicality to absolutely thwart the intent of the city councils. This will certainly not give the people decontrol. His actions will be the same as those in the case of the city of Los Angeles. I say defeat this resolution at this time.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POULSON. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DONDERO. Did they use the tactics on Los Angeles by telling your city commissioners they should have passed an ordinance instead of a resolution?

Mr. POULSON. Yes; they took advantage of every technicality and tried to interpret the law as they saw fit, in order to defeat the intent of the city council of Los Angeles. Tighe Woods wanted to be the one to determine whether or not Los Angeles should have rent control, rather than the residents of Los Angeles through their duly elected representatives, the Los Angeles City Council.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I am for this resolution and I think a majority of the Members of the House ought to be for it. I think it ought to pass, and for this reason. We are in one of the grimmest emergencies our country has ever known. We had rent control throughout the war, we had rent control subsequent to the war for 5 years up to now, and now when we are on the threshold of the greatest effort which we are asking the American people to make in respect to mobilization, for their own security, we propose to take it off.

This is not a question of what each local community does. The local communities have power to decontrol in an affirmative way under the bill as it stands and under the bill as it will be extended. The only difference is that instead of a resolution of the governing body of the local community itself duly adopted after hearing, the resolution has to be approved by the State's Governor. This bill continues the law as it stands today, so that it does not take away from the local community the power to decontrol if it wants to. A community can decontrol if it wants to, with the permission of its State government; if we did not pass this resolution it would have to act affirmatively to keep controls. I think that is the fundamental issue we have here, shall we extend this for 90 days, on the threshold of a gigantic mobilization, continuing the policy we pursued throughout the war, and during the postwar period up to now? We do not want to rock a very important boat before we actually pass into the mobilization effort.

The people of New York are now protected by an effective State rent-control law, but they nevertheless continue deeply interested in Federal rent control, for New York makes and sells in goods and services over $20,000,000,000 a year to the rest of the country; hence, inflation in the country and a breakdown in standards of living due to runaway rents have a direct and immediate effect on the people of New York.

The ranking minority member on the Committee on Banking and Currency just told us that most other things have gone up about 100 points in the index since pre-World War II, and that rents have only gone up about 20 points. Certainly, the reason for that is that rents have been controlled. The extent of the rise is no indication whether Federal rent control is fair or unfair. The question is what happened to the landlords in the country. Constant surveys have shown that they fared quite well. The answer is that the Congress has continued rent control year after year, because this thesis that the landlords were losing all kinds of money could not stand up.

What we are doing today is a very simple thing. We are trying to keep from rocking the boat—suspending rent control—which represents in the area of 25 percent and more of the normal family's outgo for the basic things of life, at a time when we expect the greatest mobilization effort that the American people have ever made, a mobilization program heroic in its proportions—at a time when the American people are facing the grimmest alternative which the American people have ever faced in peacetime.

I have been urging the President to utilize the powers given him in the Defense Production Act of 1950 to immediately impose price controls on basic cost-of-living items to halt the runaway inflation in the cost of living—a factor basic to mobilization in the present situation. I have urged also that the whole Congress demand that the President exercise this power. We must continue to make this demand, but here in rent control we can ourselves help to halt inflation in a critical and material area of the cost of living. It certainly is our clear duty to do so by passing this resolution.

I think we have to practice what we preach. If we expect the American people to do this great job of mobilization then we have to keep them covered by the protection of rent control which we have given them heretofore and which we were convinced was necessary to enable them to see that the job is done.

One other word. The question of the localities being able to vote their own control is a trying one, in the face of the present mobilization situation. The chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency in the other body in a speech on the floor there on December 1, said there would be a shift, he estimated, of 7,000,000 people in the United States in connection with military and defense activities and in connection with other requirements of the mobilization program. Therefore we can hardly expect a town or locality to pass now before December 31, prospectively on the situation which it will face with respect to retaining rent controls a few months from now. We have to keep the Federal umbrella over the whole situation until we see where this mobilization problem is pinching housing and where it does not pinch, I think it is little enough to ask that the present law be continued for 90 days in view of the sacrifices we are asking of the American people, of American troops and their families, and the emergency which we see existing.

Gentlemen, I think it is purely a question of practicing what we preach. If we do not pass this resolution we are unlikely to be taken seriously on the whole issue of halting the runaway cost of living.

Mr. JACOBS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of this bill. I wish to leave a thought with you which has not yet been expressed. I will illustrate it by a true example of a community where such conditions obtain.

I understand what the gentleman refers to when he talks about freedom. The Keystone Division from Pennsylvania, though, did not have much freedom when they were loaded on a train and taken out to Camp Atterbury, Ind. Camp Atterbury is located in a territory where there are some housing facilities under rent control and there are some housing facilities that are not under rent control. Those communities where there is not rent control are, by and large, small communities.

My colleague, Mr. NOLAND, from the Seventh Indiana District, and I inspected that territory around Camp Atterbury. I will give you two examples of what we found in a decontrolled area. A 14 x 14 sleeping room was renting for $90 per month to a soldier who was not enjoying all of the traditional freedom we talk about but who was beckoned by Uncle Sam to leave Pennsylvania and go out to Camp Atterbury and train to serve his country on the field of battle.

A cottage that might have sold for $800 or $900 during the 1930's, heated by a heating stove in the parlor, was renting for $85 per month; unfurnished.

The people that will be gouged for rents in that general community that has become heavily populated by virtue of these soldiers having their families come down to be near them—perhaps for the last time—will not be voters for the city councilmen who will either take action or, as in this case, will no doubt neglect to take action, to continue rent control. They are there, and they are paying the rent, and they will pay any rent they possibly can in order to have their loved ones near them during this period they are being trained perhaps to be shipped overseas.

Therefore, because I know and you know, everyone of you know, that in those conditions those city councils will not act on behalf of the strangers that happen to be within their gates temporarily, this becomes a national issue, because it was not the city of Franklin or the city of Columbus, Ind., or Martinsville, Ind., that brought those soldiers from the Keystone State out there, it was the Federal Government, and it is a Federal question. This body cannot dodge its responsibility in that regard, because those city councilmen that must pass upon the resolution to extend rent control, being human, are going to think more of the fellow that lives on Main Street and votes in the next election than they are of this soldier that we saw paying $90 a month for a 14 x 14 room or $85 a month for an old cottage, unfurnished, and heated by a pot-bellied stove.

Yes, I know what you are talking about when you talk about freedom. So, for the boys who are at Camp Atterbury and in the many other camps throughout the country, let me say this; freedom is a two-way street. He who by virtue of war or national emergency is called away to camp and this applies not only to tenants, but to landlords, too, has to have a facility where he can live. The housing shortage was created because men and materials went to war in defense of landlords and tenants alike. Let me tell you that you should remember our war-displaced citizen too, because he is entitled to a little freedom. One person who is opposed to rent control wrote me and told me he was in favor of freedom. So he proposed we forbid the soldiers the right to bring their families into the area of the training camps. A heap of freedom for the soldier, would not you say?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. McDONOUGH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the resolution on the ground that it will only extend bureaucratic control over local government to an extent which is not necessary under the circumstances. If we pass this resolution, we are in effect saying that we have no confidence in the integrity and ability or belief in the right of the local governments to determine for themselves whether rent control should exist in their jurisdictions.

I further believe that no bureaucrat not elected by the people should be placed in a position by the Congress or the Government of having authority which exceeds the right of the elected representatives of the people and responsible to the people to act for them. I say that in reference to the distressing experience we have had in the last several months in connection with rent control in Los Angeles. The City Council of Los Angeles, made up of 15 elected officials in that city, held hearings and proceeded to consider the question of decontrol of rents. The council chamber holds about 380 people. It was filled to capacity. As a matter of fact, under affidavit the sergeant at arms of the City Council of Los Angeles said there were 450 people in the council chamber. Both sides were given a full hearing. Previous to the action which the city council took, there was a survey as to whether rent control was necessary in the city of Los Angeles. The report indicated that vacancies existed which would justify the decontrol of rents. The city council voted by a vote of 10 to 4 in favor of decontrol and submitted the resolution of their action to the Housing Expediter. While he was considering the resolution passed by the Los Angeles City Council, he became influenced by hearsay and by those who were opposed to the action taken by the Los Angeles City Council.

In the Los Angeles city attorney's review of Tighe Woods' letter to the Los Angeles City Council in which he informs them that he will not approve the resolution they passed by 11 to 4 to decontrol rents in Los Angeles, the city attorney said, and I quote:

> The Housing Expediter has gone beyond all accepted concepts of judicial or administrative practice and has introduced a new type of administrative procedure, namely, review by rumor. The Housing Expediter chooses to rely on asserted information of a hearsay nature, the source of which he does not disclose. It is interesting to note that the language used by the Housing Expediter in making these charges is identical with the allegations found in the papers filed in the case of Miller v. Woods.
> The Housing Expediter refers to, "a petition from a group purporting to act on behalf of 300,000 tenant families in the city, requesting that I withhold action on the resolution until inquiry had been made in the certain matters raised in the petition." The Housing Expediter states that, "among these was the charge that the city council action was in complete disregard of available and known evidence of an already existing shortage of rental housing accommodations, which would be further aggravated by the expected influx of large numbers of aircraft workers."
> Reference is made to a copy of the housing survey conducted at the request of the city council by the Peacock Research Associates. The Housing Expediter further states, "This impartial survey, completed in April 1950, shows a vacancy factor of 2.6 percent for all dwelling units in Los Angeles and, in units having monthly rentals up to $57.49, the vacancy factor ranges from 1.4 to 3.5 percent." What he neglected to point out is that in the rental bracket between $57.50 and $64.99, the vacancy factor shown by the report is 5.4 percent. From the Peacock report, it can be determined that the vacancy factor, based on total rental housing accommodations, is slightly in excess of 4.5 percent. Be that as it may, the Housing Expediter states in his communication that "I felt it my duty as a public officer to take whatever steps my best judgment dictated to guard against decontrol which might result from hasty and uninformed action."
> In short, it is clear that the Housing Expediter is attempting to substitute his judgment as to what he believes should be done, for that of the city council. The Housing Expediter, in so determining, has resorted to information which does not appear to be a part of any record made before the council in this matter.

The upshot of the whole thing is that up to now the case has gone through several courts and finally an opinion was rendered by the District Court of Appeals in the District of Columbia to the effect that a simple resolution is not the intent of the Congress and that an ordinance must be passed in order to decontrol rents. I called the Expediter's office the other day in reference to that and found that he does not agree with the District Court of Appeals that an ordinance must be passed but that he believes a simple resolution is all that is necessary. The reason he does not believe an ordinance is necessary is because a thousand cases have already been passed upon by the Housing Expediter on the basis of a simple resolution by the local government in various parts of the Nation and such a holding would nullify the action taken on those thousand cases. The question now before the Supreme Court is whether the cases already passed upon by the Housing Expediter are legal and according to the intent of the Congress. Why should not the Expediter sign the decontrol order? I am for protecting this Nation in the event of any armed conflict, and in the conflict in which we are now engaged, to the ultimate extent. And I believe that we can put our confidence in the local governments to protect our country in the event of any armed conflict. I certainly think the defiant, prejudicial, arrogant attitude of the Expediter in the case of Los Angeles is sufficient example to show that this Congress cannot afford to delegate its power to any Washington bureaucrat who will nullify its intentions and attempt to subordinate local government by the maladministration of an act of Congress.

In the city of San Diego, which is a very congested area, and where there are more people employed in the Armed Forces of the United States than in any other part of California, rents were decontrolled. I am informed they are getting along very nicely. The situation in Los Angeles has been fraught with prejudice, with feelings, with animosities, to the point where the Housing Expediter has subordinated the action of the elected legislative body, the city council, and taken instead hearsay and rumor, stood on that rather than the public record. I maintain we should not continue that authority any place in the United States. Because of the experience we have had in Los Angeles, I recommend that you vote "No" on the resolution.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California [Mr. McDONOUGH] has expired.

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Now, Mr. Chairman, let us stop calling names and discuss this bill on its merits. You can call Mr. Woods arrogant, and everything else you like, but when you get down to what happened in Los Angeles you will find that the court said that Mr. Woods was right in rejecting the action of the Los Angeles City Council but that he was wrong in the reason he assigned. The court said that any locality might decontrol if it will adopt a resolution in accordance with the local applicable law. The Council of Los Angeles did not do that. It is quite right that Mr. Woods said they did not have enough evidence before them. The court said to Mr. Woods: "You have no right to review that. What the local council does on the question, regardless of evidence, is binding upon you. The only thing you can do is to look to see whether or not the local council acted in accordance with applicable law."

Now, what is the applicable law? Here it is.

Mr. McDONOUGH. Do you know the charter of the City of Los Angeles?

Mr. MULTER. Yes. As the Court of Appeals of the United States says, it is this:

> You can adopt a resolution and put it into effect immediately if it is an administrative matter, but if it is a legislative matter, if it is going to enact a law such as rent control, if it is going to repeal a law such as rent control, if it is going to deal with policy, that is, whether there will be rent control or no rent control, that is a legislative act, and then it must be passed by the city council, and before it can become effective 30 days must elapse, and during that 30 days the people of Los Angeles have a right to petition for a referendum to review what the city council has done.

That was not done in Los Angeles. The council tried to make the law effective without the right of the people to a referendum. They deprived them of the 30 days within which to act. With reference to that, the Circuit Court of Appeals has said this:

> The use of the word "resolution" instead of "ordinance" in a Federal statute is of no importance. Congress was enacting a statute applicable to scores of cities, towns, and villages, and many different procedures, restrictions, and terminologies. The Congress intended that each community should determine by its own local method an issue of importance to the community.

In effect the Circuit Court of Appeals said, "You do that in accordance with local law. Give your people in Los Angeles the right to a referendum if they want it. If they do not want it, the law becomes effective." But if they do, you must permit them to vote upon it. If they say "No rent control," there will be none; if they say "Rent control," there will be control. That is what we in this Congress said they should do. Now, I am glad to yield.

Mr. McDONOUGH. The gentleman referred to the District Court of Appeals.

Mr. MULTER. No; the United States Court of Appeals.

Mr. McDONOUGH. All right, the United States Court of Appeals, in which an ordinance with the right of referendum within a 30-day period should occur before the action was conclusive.

Mr. MULTER. Yes.

Mr. McDONOUGH. Does the gentleman know whether or not that was the reason why Tighe Woods refused to sign the resolution or to permit it to come up for action?

Mr. MULTER. Yes; I know that. Mr. Woods did not give that reason.

Mr. McDONOUGH. I have evidence to the effect that that was not the reason, and furthermore that Tighe Woods does not agree with the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia that an ordinance is necessary in order to decontrol either in Los Angeles or in any other city.

Mr. MULTER. The gentleman and I have disagreed with courts before, but as good citizens we abide by their decisions.

Mr. McDONOUGH. But the administration does not.

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Woods is abiding by the decisions of all courts. The court said:

> Mr. Woods, do not review any of the facts, but only if the council acted legally.

Mr. Woods said that hereafter he would only look to the legality of the enactment of the resolution and not go beyond that.

Mr. McDONOUGH. If Mr. Woods had signed the resolution which was passed by the city of Los Angeles, no question would have been raised.

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Woods based his decision on the illegal action of the Los Angeles council.

Mr. McDONOUGH. But he did not in a thousand other cases.

Mr. MULTER. That is not so.

Mr. POULSON. Why, then, did he wait 3½ weeks before he acted?

Mr. MULTER. Are we not quibbling when we ask whether it was days or weeks before he acted? He was required to look into the legality of the action of the Los Angeles Council. The court has held the action illegal. Enact a proper law, give your people the right to be heard. After they vote on the question, their will will be done.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the first period.

Mr. Chairman, if the country must be afflicted with a majority on the right made up of Jeffersonian Democrats, of New Dealers, Fair Dealers, and some others, it is unfortunate, I would say, that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JACOBS], who has the respect of us all, is not going to be with us next session. It is my understanding that he came here as a representative of either the CIO or the A. F of L. or of both; and if I get his record right, he has served those organizations as well as others in his district faithfully and well as he has seen the issues. Just why those organizations should have deserted him at the last election I do not understand.

If I might be permitted to express a wish, it would be that the gentleman move to some district now represented by some rabid New Dealer, there be elected and come back to the House, because I am sure that his influence would be stabilizing, constructive, and helpful to the country as a whole.

Mr. JACOBS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Yes, but this is not for a speech.

Mr. JACOBS. Then the gentleman does not want to yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Just for a question.

Mr. JACOBS. I should like to make the observation——

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Cannot the gentleman get his own time for that?

Mr. JACOBS. No; I have already struck out my word. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Certainly.

Mr. JACOBS. I just wanted to say with reference to my future that in the days of my youth my father used to tell me that in town there were two men; one of them was rich, the other was poor. He said that the poor man made a fortune tending to his own business, and the rich man lost a fortune by tending to other people's business.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I knew that story was to be a gentle hint to me. It might comfort the gentleman to learn that by trying to attend to the business of the people of my district and expose the fallacy of the New Dealers my constituents retained me while the gentleman is out. Nevertheless, I thank him for his advice.

Now, about this rent control: In answer to the gentleman from New York [Mr. JAVITS], the fact, if it be a fact, that some in his district are profiteers and are oppressing tenants is no reason why other honest, reasonable landlords should be penalized. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JACOBS] cited an example where landlords were imposing upon tenants. We can cite examples on both sides.

Let me give you one illustration on the other side, not about rent control, but about the Government handling of property. In my district there is a maiden lady, Miss Hoppe, some 87 years old who supplements her income by selling Christmas gifts or cards on the street from a little wagon. She owned a piece of property that the Government wanted to use when the war came on; so she signed a lease with the Government giving it possession of that property for a nominal rent in order that it might erect one of these housing projects—just temporary shacks that were to be removed in a year or two under the terms of the lease, except that the lease carried the provision that the Administrator might in an emergency by order extend the lease. She is still being deprived of the use of that property by the order of a bureaucrat. She is forced from time to time to supplement her income in order to eat. She does not wear a great many clothes. A lady of that age does not have to dress up much and she has given up all hope, I understand, of trying to attract a husband or obtain the means of support through marriage. She is not on relief, either. She just refuses charity from either State, Nation, or friends. But the Government will not give her back that little piece of property. That is the way it treats an honest, worthy citizen.

Mr. Chairman, this legislation is the most vicious piece of legislation, the most unfair, that so far as I know, has ever been enacted by the Congress. The farmers get a subsidy, the workers have a minimum hours-and-wage law, and the cost of those two programs is paid either by those who hire or by those who consume the farmers' products, ultimately by all of us. But what does this control law do? It puts the whole cost on the property owner. If we desire to help tenants, if that is our desire, if that be necessary, and we want to be fair and decent about the thing, why do we not have a law under which all the taxpayers contribute to the tenants' subsidy, permit the property owners to have a fair and reasonable income from their property? Just what have we got against the property owners that we want to soak them for a special benefit to their tenants? Is is because there are more tenants than there are property owners?

Mr. TACKETT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, during peacetime I have never favored nor voted for rent control or any other controls of the normal operation of our private enterprise system.

I do realize that peacetime legislation for the operation of our democracy must be considerably distinguished from legislation for the operation of our Government during wartime. I have always advocated States' rights and administration of even Federal legislation by the local affected people at the grass-roots level. However, during wartime every one of us should contribute to the defense effort; therefore, we must have controls of wages, sales prices upon commodities, rents, et cetera, if we expect to preclude inflation, the unbalancing of our economy, and war profiteering by some while others sacrifice—even their lives.

While opposing this bill, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN], highly criticizes the argument of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JACOBS], upon the basis that Mr. JACOBS was unsuccessful in his reelection efforts some few days ago. I have never yet found it necessary for a Member of this House, who has recently been successful in a political election, to criticize the arguments of another Member upon the basis that his adversary to the proposal under discussion has been unsuccessful in his political efforts to return to Congress. Every single, solitary one of us is subject to removal from political life every time there is an election wherein he or she has opposition. Some of those men who take up the time of this body boasting over their reelection could fail to be so fortunate at the next election. Every once in a while people change their minds about the advocacies and activities of their respective representatives in Congress. The fellow who feels himself indispensable and with a cinch on continued political office is just in the proper frame of mind to discover that he has been existing in an atmosphere of illusion.

Oh, yes, I was one of the lucky candidates during this last election, maybe because I did not have an opponent; but I am indeed grateful that I can fully realize the possibility of a defeat every time I put my name on the ballot.

I do sincerely hope that I shall never find myself in the predicament of having so little for argument concerning any legislation under discussion as to criticize and denounce my adversary's argument solely upon the basis that he was unsuccessful in his reelection. Many smart people, considerably smarter than a lot of us, have been defeated in political elections.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] says that the CIO and the A. F. of L. sent the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JACOBS] to Congress and that he has done a fair job of representing no one except the members of those organizations. If that accusation be true, it is my sincere opinion that it would not hurt anything for these labor organizations to send a lot of such people with the caliber, the honesty, the integrity, and the ability of ANDREW JACOBS to Congress. Allow me to remind the gentleman from Michigan that back during the early days of the Eighty-first Congress when we were considering the Lesinski labor bill, the Sims substitute labor bill, and the Wood labor bill that the gentleman from Indiana was as fair as could be expected of any man who ever represented any group of people during the entire deliberation of this body upon legislation affecting labor and management.

Surely you will recall that the gentleman from Indiana pointed out what he considered the good features of the Wood bill which was disliked by the labor leaders. You will further recall that he pointed out to this body what he considered the bad features of the Lesinski bill which was so highly favored by the labor leaders. Then I shall never forget his fairness in pointing out what he considered to be the good and bad provisions of the Sims substitute.

It cannot be successfully contended by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] or any other person that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JACOBS] has acted in a biased and prejudiced manner on behalf of any select group. As a parochial-school man, he has been able to see and advise this Congress of the necessity for public-school assistance.

There has never been a fairer, a more honorable or conscientious gentleman in this Congress than ANDREW JACOBS, of Indiana, who was unsuccessful in his reelection efforts. His qualifications, ability, and statesmanship are undeniable; his efforts as a good American on behalf of the people of the United States are highly commendable.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TACKETT. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Apparently the gentleman who is now speaking did not understand what I did say. I attempted to praise the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JACOBS]. He then came back at me with a statement that a fellow got wealthy by attending to his own business. Naturally I had to answer that.

Under the permission given to revise and extend the remarks made when the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TACKETT] yielded to me, permit me to add that he is completely mistaken when he said that I charged as said that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JACOBS] when he came to Congress did not represent anyone except those people. "Those" being used for the CIO and the A. F. of L. I said and the stenographer's minutes will bear me out, that I understood that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JACOBS] was sent here by the CIO and the A. F. of L. but I could not honestly say, nor did I say he represented no one else. The gentleman from Indiana, while a labor attorney before coming to Congress, and many times speaking for labor, has in my opinion, fairly and honestly expressed his own views on labor legislation, in fact unless I am mistaken he has sometimes spoken and voted in opposition to expressed views of the CIO. Nor did I, as stated by the gentleman from Arkansas, criticize the argument of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JACOBS] "upon the ground that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JACOBS] was unsuccessful in his reelection efforts." My reference to Mr. JACOBS' unsuccessful effort was made only after he had by a story intimated that I might well profit by attending to my own business in my own district. My reply was, it seemed, an appropriate one to the story the gentleman told.

The gentleman admitted to me he did not hear what the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JACOBS] had said. He might have avoided error in his statement had he known what had been said.

Mr. TACKETT. During my tenure in Congress, I have never heard the gentleman from Michigan praise anybody except himself.

Mr. JACKSON of California. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, since I have been a Member of this body, I have consistently been an opponent of Federal rent control. I have not opposed Federal rent control because I felt that no shortage of housing existed at any time. I have not opposed Federal rent control because I did not want to see our citizens in decent housing. I have not opposed Federal rent control because I desired to abet or aid rent gougers or that small minority of any citizenry who take advantage of any situation whenever possible. I have opposed Federal rent control because I consider it and will always consider it an unreasonable and illegal restriction upon the right of American citizens as guaranteed under the Constitution of the United States to own and control real and personal property. I have felt that such methods as those pursued in rent control evade the Constitution and are not in keeping with our traditions, our institutions, and our ideals. If we are going to deprive the American citizen of his right to control and to own personal or real property, let us do it by a constitutional amendment through the front door. Let us not do it by using a legal blackjack upon him.

So far as the Los Angeles situation is concerned, I believe that the actions of Mr. Woods were the capricious and arbitrary actions of a third-rate bureaucrat with altogether too much power. The wording of the Housing and Rent Act of 1947 was surely clear enough, and the intent of the Congress was equally unmistakable. The law was so clear that many hundreds of communities throughout this country acted in good faith through their local legislative bodies in ordering decontrol by resolution. They took the Congress at its word and decontrolled in the manner provided by law. There was no question raised at that time by Mr. Woods as to the legality of the acts of those city councils. It was only when a great metropolitan area of this country took the step that Mr. Woods took impassioned umbrage.

It was in spite of the act, in spite of the step taken by the Los Angeles City Council in good faith and predicated upon the words contained in the law. Mr. Woods refused initially to take any action at all, and then took recourse by every devious means at his disposal to evade the clear intent of the people of the city of Los Angeles as expressed through their legal legislative body.

The danger inherent in the Los Angeles rent-control fiasco is frightening. It simply means that any appointed bureaucrat sitting here in Washington, D. C., or anywhere else throughout the Nation, can deprive the citizens of this country of their lawful right to decide at least a few of the important fundamental issues at the local level. There are very few of those prerogatives left to the communities today. Their taxing powers have been almost entirely taken away from them, until we find that today 75 cents of every tax dollar is diverted into Washington. There are only a few simple privileges left to them. If the acts of a man like Tighe Woods are to be supported, if this petty dictator is to be backed in his defiance of the Congress of the United States and of the people of the United States, then we have indeed reached a sad state.

The bill under consideration states:

That section 204 (f) of the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended, is hereby amended by striking out "December 31, 1950" in each place it occurs therein and inserting in lieu thereof "March 31, 1951."

There are hundreds of thousands of people in Los Angeles who believe the bill should read like this: "That section 204 (f) of the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended, is hereby amended by striking out the powers of the people and of the Congress in each place it occurs therein and inserting in lieu thereof 'Mr. Tighe Woods.' "

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, during the campaign of a few weeks ago this proposition of Federal rent control was a rather hot issue in my district, especially in my home town, where Federal rent control has been removed in the last few days.

During the campaign I appeared at the office of the city council and made it very clear to my people that I would not support an extension of Federal rent control. Therefore, I am absolutely opposed to this bill. I think those who are promoting this extension are primarily seeking to make this a permanent policy of our Federal Government and to embrace rent controls permanently in the economy of the people of the United States. I have no patience or sympathy for such a proposition. I have asked for this time simply to make my position very clear to the people in my district, who are sometimes interested in what I do and what I do not do.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, it may be remembered that when we had the rent control bill before us last summer an amendment was submitted by me and adopted by the House which would have fixed the date of expiration of the rent-control law as of January 31, 1951, instead of December 31, 1950. Unfortunately, that amendment was removed in the conference with the Senate; otherwise we would not have had this troublesome problem with us today. It was submitted primarily in order to allow time for the State legislatures when they meet in regular session in January to act upon the matter and thus have genuine decentralized decisions as to whether and when control is to be continued.

Inasmuch, however, as the terminal date was fixed at December 31, 1950, and the bill before us would extend it for 3 months, I am going to vote for it for the same reason I submitted that amendment when we were considering this subject before. But I have to add this further statement, that unless by the time this bill expires the President of the United States has moved to stabilize the other elements of our economy, there cannot be any justification for putting this one element, rent control, on a permanent basis, that would freeze one segment of our economy, while at the same time other elements are actually being encouraged by the administration to seek higher wages or increased profits and to use the emergency to better their standards of living.

It just is not right to freeze these people, the owners of rental housing, who have been held down the longest and tightest while encouraging other groups which have had the greatest gains to press for still further gains. The President ought to fish or cut bait. He ought to freeze the whole price, wage, and rental structure, as we tried to get the administration to do last July, right after the emergency arose in Korea, or he ought to unfreeze those people who have been held down the longest.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JUDD. I yield.

Mr. JAVITS. It is a fact that this is one thing that we can do here. This is one thing that those of us can do who agree that there should be all-out controls which may point the way for the President to do it. This resolution is something that we can do, and very importantly, in that general direction.

Mr. JUDD. Yes; and I am going to vote for it, but I am serving notice now that I am not going to vote for extensions again, unless in the meantime the President of the United States moves to get real stability in our economy instead of playing politics with particular groups that have the most votes at the expense of those who do not have so many votes.

Mr. McDONOUGH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JUDD. I yield.

Mr. McDONOUGH. I am interested in that statement which the gentleman just made. I think for the benefit of the Committee we ought to know what groups the President is encouraging not to apply controls to. Who are they?

Mr. JUDD. You know the groups.

Mr. McDONOUGH. Well, who are they?

Mr. JUDD. You know which groups are gaining wage and price increases, while people who own rental property, often have their life savings invested in a little fourplex or duplex, have been frozen. Most of them have not received more than a 20 or 25 percent increase over what they got in 1942 whereas wages have gone up 65 percent and 75 percent and with recent increases even more than that.

Mr. McDONOUGH. Should they not receive more at this time so that those who have been held down to a 20-percent increase since 1942 will be given a chance to come up at least to a level with those who are not now being controlled?

Mr. JUDD. Yes. If you look back on it, I think that if the House had known when it extended this act the last time that the Korean situation was going to develop, the chances are the House would have allowed the bill to expire in order to let all elements of the economy sort of reach their own level as prices and wages had done, before another freeze was put on. It is unfair that parts of the economy have been free to seek their proper level while other parts have not been able to do so. Now we are putting on a new freeze on rents, or we may be doing that, when they have been held in artificial unbalance, rather than at a period when things have reached by a process of natural adjustment a reasonable equity and balance between prices, wages, profits, and rents and all the other factors that go into the cost of living.

Mr. REGAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JUDD. I yield.

Mr. REGAN. Would it not be fair, then, to let this present rent-control act expire on December 31 and after the first of the year the Eighty-second Congress can consider all of the various problems of control of prices and wages and rents and so forth, and place them altogether under the same umbrella if the Eighty-second Congress elects to do so?

That would give everyone a fair and even break.

Mr. JUDD. It would not quite do to remove the restrictions at this particular time when we are right on the verge of new housing shortages which we know are going to develop in certain parts of the country as a result of the expanding defense effort. That would be taking action at the least advantageous time. What I want is to get the President to come along with suitable action on the other elements rather than let the Congress just hold the line on one segment of the economy while other parts of the economy are still turned loose.

Mr. REGAN. I think that is right.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the bill and all amendments thereto close in 30 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, does not the gentleman believe that we should have enough time on this so that the other body can express their own will uninfluenced by anything that we do?

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, we are not going into that question.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAINS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which is at the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RAINS: After line 6, add the following new section:

"SECTION 2. Section 204 of the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended, is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"'(k) No resolution adopted before or after the date of the enactment of this subsection by any local governing body for the purpose of making the declaration specified in section 204 (f) (1) or for the purpose of terminating rent control as provided in section 204 (j) (3) shall be ineffective for such purpose solely because under applicable local law legislative action cou'd not be taken by such resolution.'"

Mr. DEANE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time allotted to me may be granted to the gentleman from Alabama.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. RAINS. Mr. Chairman, I have no intention of taking part in the argument with reference to the case pertaining to the city of Los Angeles. That is not my purpose.

First, I would like you to remember that in the Senate report which accompanied the Rent Control Act of 1949 were these words:

In other words, the action of the local governing body would be final and not subject to review, appeal, or change by any other authority.

The House report, which went with the bill we passed, the same as this one, says:

In other words, the action of the local governing body in the matter would be final and not subject to review, approval, or change by any other authority.

That was stated in our report. The adoption of this amendment which I have offered will prevent the invalidation of the actions of more than 1,000 cities which acted by resolution, in compliance with the exact congressional mandate in the Housing and Rent Act. It is those cities which acted in accordance with the mandate set out in the law with which I am concerned, and not some legal technicality involving referendum. In other words, in light of the court opinion which has been discussed, if your city decontrolled by a resolution, even though this Congress said it was an administrative act, that decontrol action may be illegal. So simply to validate the decontrol resolutions of more than a thousand cities, who acted in good faith, in compliance with the instructions and regulations set out in this bill, I ask you to adopt this amendment. I do not think this amendment affects one way or the other the case of the city of Los Angeles; I think that has to do with the referendum and not with the adoption of a resolution. We provide that the city shall follow the method prescribed by law for the particular city in adopting a resolution. If Los Angeles did not follow it, that is a matter for the courts. But in these cities which did follow it and where it turns on the use of the word "resolution" or "ordinance" they should not be penalized by that kind of decision. Simply because of those cities I ask for the approval of this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. JOHNSON] is recognized.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, I do not like rent control any more than any man in this room, but sometimes conditions dictate what your decisions in these matters shall be. I can look at this specific proposal best by looking at my own congressional district. In it are 10 Army and Navy installations; the Armed Forces of the United States are doubling their numbers in a very few months. We are not in a normal condition, and it looks as though it will be a long time before the country would be in a normal condition.

I can just see it as plain as day: In my crowded district of 665,000 people with all these military installations, that if we lift rent controls the rents will go up very rapidiy. The demand for houses is excessive there. There will not be enough places for these people to be taken care of. Every military person you add to the Armed Forces means another person added to the civil service. The law of supply and demand will be disjointed as there will be much more demand than there will be supply.

Right now a large part of the personnel at these posts live outside of the post.

Much as I hate rent control I do not think we can avoid the facts that are before us. We are in an acute emergency. Vast numbers of people will again go into California to become members of the Armed Forces and to work in the various military establishments as civilians. All of them must have a place to live and again we will be caught acutely short of houses. We may be forced into an all-out war and this will bring other workers to the vast war industries of California.

I do not want to impose a general rent-control law on the whole country, as in many places it is not needed. We have permitted the local governments to decontrol and certainly they will know how to handle the situation, if no rent control is necessary. Some have already done so, but I can see some spots that I think will need help and if I am mistaken the local community can decontrol. All I want to do is to hold the status quo until the next Congress can have time to look into the matter, in view of the fact that we are in an acute emergency, which might become more widespread. We yet cannot see what is going to happen.

If the emergency declines, which we all hope will happen, I will want to get rid of this control. Also, I wish to concur heartily in what my colleague from Minnesota [Mr. JUDD] said, namely, that the President and his departments should do something about the inflationary trends that are rampant due in part to loose fiscal policies. If controls are to come they should go across the board and effect all parts of our economic system and not alone be directed at the people who furnish housing to those who do not own a home.

If this resolution is not passed, we will lose control on December 31, 1950. Rents will spiral and if the emergency should get worse, which looks probable now, we would lose much time getting controls back, which all seem to agree will be necessary in case of a war. Then we will have higher costs all across the board and the dollar will become cheaper than it now is and persons with a fixed income such as pensioners, civil-service workers, teachers, Army and Navy personnel and so forth, will again get a financial beating. Those localities that do not wish to control will continue under control and nothing will be required to be done there in case a full-scale emergency dictates that the country must again have war controls. If things level off we can then get rid of the whole control problem before the end of this extension, which should not be more than 90 days and maybe only 60 days as the Senate agreed upon.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. O'HARA] is recognized.

Mr. O'HARA of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, like my distinguished and really beloved friend from Indiana [Mr. JACOBS], I shall not be returning to the Eighty-second Congress. I am sure that the gentleman who represents the district in Michigan where I was born and spent my childhood did not intend in his reference to the gentleman from Indiana anything except a facetious pat on the back. No one in this body has been more highly esteemed by his colleagues, and no one has combined in greater measure brilliant eloquence in debate with warm endearing charm of personality than the gentleman from Indiana. No defeat at the polls can taint the purity of such a character nor detract from the reputation he has established on a national level and in his one term in the Congress as a great and outstanding statesman. I am sure that in this appraisal of ANDY JACOBS, the gentleman from Michigan, will concur, and that the reference to the circumstances of November 7 last was not intended to have either personal sting or partisan gloat. The district now represented by Mr. HOFFMAN and wherein I was born and grew up was represented in this body for 11 terms by the Honorable La Rue Hamilton, now buried in Niles, Mich., the city of his nativity. Although he was a Republican, and my family was devoted to the cause of democracy, and contested with him on the hustings, I think of La Rue Hamilton as a great statesman and a great American. The differences in party affiliations and in ways of thinking and of philosophies do not determine the measure we place upon the attributes of ability, the qualities of character and the sincerity of public service of our colleagues.

But because some reference has been made to the defeat of the gentleman from Indiana, and because the circumstances of November 7 last in the second congressional district of Illinois might be argued as having some bearing upon the matter of rent control now before us, I wish to assure my colleages that my support of rent control and other liberal legislation in the Eighty-first Congress was not a factor in the circumstance that, as the returns at this time and prior to further examination that may be made show. I will not be seated in January next as a Member of the Eighty-second Congress.

In the elections in Chicago there was injected a local issue that had not the slightest bearing upon the work of the Congress or the policies and achievements of the national administration. In the intensity of the feeling on this matter, strictly local, all consideration of national issues was completely erased. This was the reason—and everyone in Chicago, both Democratic and Republican, is thoroughly familiar with the fact—for the defeat of four Democratic Congressmen as well as the senior Senator from Illinois.

The fact that in the face of this tremendous and unprecented landslide built entirely upon one local matter having not the remotest connection with any national issue, I polled in the second district in excess of 35,000 more votes than the candidate who was the target of the attack, is conclusive proof, at least to my satisfaction, that my actions and my votes in the Eighty-first Congress met with the overwhelming approval of the people of the second district.

The difference of 35,000 votes had to be accounted for in split votes. That tells the story. I bring this to the attention of my colleagues in no sense of making excuse or giving explanation for a personal defeat. My sole motivation is a desire to keep the second district of Illinois in the right light. It is, and will remain, a liberal district.

The tremendous vote it cast for my reelection, giving me an overwhelming majority of the split votes, clearly and undeniably proved that the electorate of the second district of Illinois approved of my support of continuing rent control, of decent housing for all of our people and within their means, for extended social security, for a higher minimum wage, for fair labor legislation, for the crushing of the ugly head of discrimination wherever it showed itself, and for the right of the common man to enjoy his share of the sunlight in a land of plenty and of equality.

The difficulty of splitting a ticket, especially in the precincts where machines were used in voting, combined with other circumstances later to be established and upon which work is now being industriously pursued accounted for the narrow gap apparently shown in the canvass.

The men and women of my district, I have not the slightest doubt, think that it would be an inexcusable folly if at this time we did not extend rent control for a period sufficiently long to give the Eighty-second Congress ample time to reexamine the housing shortage in the light of conditions existing in the early months of 1951. I heard in this chamber just a day or two ago a Republican member and a Democratic member of the Rules Committee describe this as the darkest and most dangerous hour in American history. We are in a fight for survival. Whether world war III comes or does not come, there is ahead a long stretch of terrific expense for defense. We must pay as we go. Ahead is a long stretch of high taxes, a decade of sacrifice and sacrifice and sacrifice if we are to survive. Does anyone think that in such a time, and under such a stress, the domiciles of American families can be abandoned to the insecurity of chance and to the operation of a cruel and unrestrained law of supply and demand?

My responsibility as a Member of this body ends with the third session of the Eighty-first Congress. As a member of the Committee on Banking and Currency and on the floor of this Chamber I have actively and with complete sincerity supported the extension of rent control until such time as the easing of the housing shortage permitted a return to normal conditions. I am happy that I was privileged, as a member of the committee, the only member from the large city of Chicago, to play some part in giving protection to the tenants of Chicago until June 30 of 1951. The great Governor of Illinois, the Honorable Adlai E. Stevenson, and the great mayor of Chicago, the Honorable Martin Kennelly, with the members of the General Assembly of Illinois and the City Council of Chicago, faithfully cooperated, first, by the passage of the necessary enabling legislation in Springfield, sections 23–111 of the Cities and Villages Act, which removed any possible question of the validity of the later resolution of the City Council of Chicago; and, second, the resolution of the City Council of Chicago which, in effect, extended controls in Chicago until June 30, 1951. Thus through the teamwork of the senior and junior Senators of Illinois, the Democratic Members from Illinois in this body, the Governor of Illinois, and the mayor of Chicago, with the cooperation of the General Assembly of Illinois and the City Council of Chicago, the people of Chicago are assured the protection of rent control until June 30, 1951, come what will.

I hope that the Eighty-second Congress, in its reexamination of the problem under the conditions resulting from the international involvement, will act with the same concern for the welfare of our people as has the Eighty-first Congress.

There is one other phase I would like to touch upon, Mr. Chairman. This has to do with the hotels. When we were considering the rent-control bill of 1949 in this committee, I offered an amendment to include housing units in hotels, and the committee voted down my amendment and adopted an amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. RAINS] which excluded the hotels. I opposed the Rains amendment on the floor of the House and demanded the yeas and nays. The roll call, No. 31 of the first session, appears on page 2544 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 15, 1949.

It shows the adoption of the Rains amendment by a vote of 237 to 175. I led the fight, both in committee and on the floor of the House, to include permanent residents in hotel accommodations within the definition covering housing units under rent control. But after our defeat in the House, the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS] succeeded in saving the permanent hotel residents in Chicago by working out in conference a compromise by which hotel rent control was maintained in cities of 2,500,000 population and over. This meant, of course, its restriction to Chicago and New York. Later, New York went out of Federal rent control, so that the hotel control was restricted solely to the city of Chicago.

When we were considering the rent-control bill of 1950, my colleagues will recall that, although the other body had voted to remove the hotels, and, as I have pointed out, that applied only to the hotels in Chicago, the House voted to keep the controls on, and that I supported this action in the House; and certainly no Member was any more active in advocacy, which, of course, would be natural, since the provision affected only the hotels in the city from which I came. The point now is, as I see it, that we have in the rent-control law a hotel provision that applies only to the city of Chicago. It did not originate in Illinois. It is the child of our own creation, and I must acknowledge that no one in the House has a greater share of responsibility for it than have I.

Since then we have had an election, and the plain fact is that a great majority of the hotel tenants in my district, and I am informed in similar hotel precincts in other districts in Chicago, voted for the opposition. If this were intended by them to be an index of their sentiment as tenants in hotels on a matter in which they have a personal interest, it should receive proper consideration. I am not attempting to interpret. If there is no longer a shortage of housing accommodations in the hotel field, and if, instead, there is a percentage of vacancies insuring against the possibility of unnatural rental increases and assuring a stabilization in rents measured by normal considerations, it would be expected that the tenants would not feel that they had any personal interest in rent control being continued in the class of habitations occupied by them.

This I brought to the attention of the Honorable Tighe Woods when he appeared before our committee. Whatever my own position had been, or whatever were my own views, when the voters had spoken, I accepted their voice as that of my master; and certainly, if both the hotels and their guests had no desire for continuing rent control for permanent hotel guests, I would have no desire to force upon them the control neither wanted. Furthermore, while I have always fought and voted for rent control when I honestly believed from the facts available to me that such control was necessitated by a continuing housing shortage, I have always maintained, as have my colleagues, that, when the shortage was relieved, controls should go.

Frankly, as the only Chicago member of the committee, I do not relish the thought that any industry in Chicago should be under restrictions not placed upon a similar industry in other cities. If the contention of the hotels in Chicago is based upon the fact, and if that contention is supported by the sentiment of the hotel guests, as might constructively be presumed from the voting on November 7, I would say that a reexamination of the present situation by the Housing Expediter as it applies to permanent residents in hotel accommodations would be justified. I am not attempting to pass upon the facts. As a matter of honor, as I see it, and in compliance with the will of the people as voiced in the polling places, and with a keen sense of my responsibility as the only member of the committee from Chicago to all the people of Chicago and all the industries in that great city, I am laying before my colleagues such information as I possess. I repeat, I am attempting no interpretation and I have no personal knowledge of the facts.

Whether Chicago, which now is the only city in the country where hotel accommodations are under rent control, should remain so, or whether the controls there should be lifted to conform with the pattern in all other cities, is to be determined by the Housing Expediter on the facts as they actually exist, whether the demand for housing in that class has been reasonably met. I quote from Mr. Woods' testimony before our committee:

> Mr. WOODS. Mr. O'HARA, I can say this: That under the present act it would still be possible to decontrol the Chicago hotels as a class of accommodations, if the one standard were met, that the demand for housing in that class had been reasonably met. We have not attempted a survey. Knowing your interest in this legislation and your vital interest in Chicago, I can assure you that as fast as I can put a team in there we will start a survey to determine whether that point has been reached. If it has been been reached, the answer is obvious. We do not want to control any class where the demand is not there because, I agree with you, it would certainly lift a headache off our shoulders and especially our local office if we could get out of that class, because the present legislation has not been designed to take care of hotel problems.

It was the understanding of our committee, I believe I can state, that the Expediter would conduct this study and act immediately upon such facts as the study should develop and the equities should demand. Mr. Chairman, I am voting for the present measure, as I have supported and voted for all of the rent-control measures previously presented in the Eighty-first Congress by the great and beloved chairman of the committee, under whom I have had the honor of serving in the Eighty-first Congress, and memories of whom I shall cherish always with the warmest glow of affection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN].

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I want to express my regret at the reception I received from the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TACKETT] who sits on the majority side just a while ago. It is very, very seldom indeed that I attempt to praise any New Dealer or any Fair Dealer or even any Democrat who has not been certified here as being a Jeffersonian or Jackson Democrat, what might be termed "an old-style reactionary Democrat." On the other hand, I have never criticized any Member on either side as the gentleman would know had he paid attention to the record. So it is unfortunate, it is discouraging, at least to me it seems unfortunate and terribly discouraging to note that attitude when I try to say something in praise of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JACOBS], and I think I went just as far as any one Republican could. I expressed my opinion that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JACOBS] was a good legislator.

Then look what I get. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TACKETT] comes along and makes a statement which was neither a just nor accurate interpretation of my remarks. He admitted a moment ago he had not heard what the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JACOBS] had said to me and to which I naturally replied in kind. So, of course, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TACKETT] did not know what he was talking about when he jumped on me. He did not say anything about rent control. So perhaps he had no real argument. However, he did say I was boasting about my reelection. That statement is not in accord with the fact. I am not that dumb. I may stand for reelection again. The fellow who brags about himself, at least up in my district, is just as sure of being defeated as that daylight follows darkness. Do not make any mistake about that.

If on some occasion hereafter I should inadvertently reply to a criticism from the majority side and attempt to word a phrase of praise, please be a little more charitable. Do not discourage me in that effort, because whether it is laudable or not, I know you like it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Washington [Mr. MITCHELL].

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. RAINS]. As I read his amendment it would curtail the rights of the people of the State of Washington who have the power of referendum. If the gentleman's amendment is adopted, it is my understanding that the people of Seattle would not be able to file a referendum petition in opposition to whatever action the city council might take, and, therefore, the people would be foreclosed from taking full advantage of local applicable law.

The United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, in the Los Angeles rent-control case, interpreted the present act as intending "that each community should determine by its own local methods an issue of importance to the community."

In the State of Washington our local method would include a referral to the people if a sufficient number of people so petitioned.

The United States court of appeals decided, in the case mentioned, that the city council rent-control resolution was a legislative action and, therefore, could properly be referred to the people. The court said:

> But if an action is the declaration and adoption of a policy and program by which affairs of general public concern are to be controlled, the action is a legislative act.

It goes on to say that this act can be properly referred to the people. I do not believe that this body desires to change that to circumvent local law. I do not believe it seeks to say that a piece of legislation cannot be referred to the people, if referral represents full utilization of local applicable law.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment will be defeated.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. COLE].

Mr. COLE of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I want to address myself to those Members who are disturbed about this bill by reason of the fact that we are in a critical war situation, and they desire to do everything possible to further the mobilization effort. Some of those Members on my side particularly said that they must vote for this bill because it is an extension of rent control and a part of the mobilization effort. I want to reiterate that this legislation does not extend rent control. There are now in America 1,000 cities of 1,000 population or more still under rent control. There will be cities under control after this bill has been passed upon, whether the bill is enacted or not. If the situation in your particular locality is so critical, may I say, it will still remain under rent control, if they so desire. After the next Congress is in session, and it becomes necessary for the Congress to determine whether or not we shall have rent control, it will not make the slightest whit of difference whether this bill is passed. The new Congress must determine then, at that time, what is a fair rent-control law for all cities, for all areas, for all municipalities, whether they are now under rent control or whether they are not now under rent control. All will be reexamined, and the rights of tenants and landlords fixed. They will be fixed upon a national basis of equality, in view of the national stabilization program. They will not be fixed upon a basis of whether they are, or are not, now controlled.

Therefore, your vote today will not affect a mobilization effort today or tomorrow. I say that a vote against this measure merely is a vote against the political expediency which has brought forth this proposed legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. McKINNON].

Mr. McKINNON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to call your attention to two basic facts right now. One is on this amendment that has been offered. If that amendment is adopted, what we are going to do in effect is to legislate nationally and try to tell our city councils what they can or cannot do locally in the way of their own city ordinances and city resolutions and take away, possibly, the rights of some of the people in some communities to have a referendum. I think it would be far better if we defeat the particular amendment and stay with our present bill. I think the court of appeals has clarified that somewhat.

The second part to bear in mind is that this bill is not a declaration of renewed faith in rent control but merely a continuance for a brief 90-day period to require affirmative action before decontrol can be had. Any community that wishes may secure decontrol.

In fact, the record shows that there have been 991 decontrol actions in the United States since April of 1949.

It is not difficult for a city council to decontrol if it wishes to, and if that action meets with the favorable opinion of the community affected. No community is tied down by this extension. On the other hand, we are facing a different international situation today than we faced 6 months ago. We will probably come under all-out controls in a little while. For that reason, I think it is very reasonable and very necessary for us to continue this rent-control organization in the various communities that are affected until such time as we can have a real appraisal of our national and international situation and determine whether we are going to have all-out controls or are going to have no controls. If we go into an all-out control period, then this rent control setup will save unnecessary confusion and expense and will be most helpful to our communities.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. MULTER].

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute for the Rains amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MULTER as a substitute for the amendment offered by Mr. RAINS: "The word 'resolution' as used herein shall include resolution, law, or ordinance, but shall not be effective unless adopted in accordance with local applicable law."

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Chairman, unfortunately the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama was not considered by our committee. It came to us for the first time on the floor here. I am very much afraid that the effect of it would be to change local laws.

When we passed the law originally 6 months ago we provided that localities should decontrol either by action of their local governing body or by popular referendum. In many States, like Washington and California, the locality has the right by referendum to review and reverse, if necessary, the action of their local council. If you adopt the Rains amendment you will take away from the people in those localities the right to review the action of their local council either to have or not to have rent control, in accordance with what they want.

What I have done is offer a substitute so as to take away any possibility of anybody in the future claiming that when we used the word "resolution" we were using it in its technical sense. My substitute will provide that the word "resolution" shall mean a resolution, law, or ordinance, provided only that it is adopted in accordance with the local applicable law, so that we will not change anything insofar as each locality is concerned. They will still have the right to act in accordance with their local law, either by referendum or by the action of their governing council or by review by the people if the people desire it within the limited time. I urge that the substitute be adopted.

Mr. CARROLL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MULTER. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. CARROLL. Let us assume that the city and county of Denver decided by resolution to abandon rent control, and that resolution was acted upon by the city council. What would be the effect of the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. MULTER. If the local law says that that is the way you adopt the law, that is the end of it, but if your local law gives the people the right to petition for a referendum to review that action of your council, they will have the right to do so under my amendment.

Mr. CARROLL. In other words, they could resort to the city charter if necessary?

Mr. MULTER. They must follow the city charter, under my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT].

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, if I understand the substitute offered by the gentleman from New York correctly, it says that the word "resolution" will mean an ordinance. The law at the present time does not say that the resolution shall mean an ordinance. That question is now pending before the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of the city of Los Angeles and others against Tighe Woods and others. It is expected that the Supreme Court of the United States will hand down a decision in the matter next Monday. If they do not hand down the decision on Monday, they will not be able to act until January, because I understand the Court is to be in recess until January. It seems to me both amendments, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. RAINS] and the substitute amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. MULTER] should be defeated because all we can possibly do by adopting either the one or the other of them is to confuse the issue which is now pending in the Supreme Court of the United States. The issue is very clearly framed as to whether it was the intention of the Congress for the municipalities to go through the procedure which under their charter would be necessary in the enactment of an ordinance when a resolution is mentioned in the law which the Congress passed. Either one of these amendments which have been offered would merely confuse the issue, because, if we accept that interpretation, then that is the interpretation only as of today and does not mean that that interpretation should be placed on the law as our intention as of last June. If the Supreme Court holds that the action taken by the city of Los Angeles is invalid for any reason, then, immediately following that, this Congress must take cognizance of the situation and pass legislation in order to do equity to the people who will be affected in cases where they have acted in good faith in order to protect them against suits for treble damages, criminal prosecutions, and so forth. Therefore, we might have to have legislation early next week in case the Supreme Court holds the action illegal. For that reason I think we should keep the matter in status quo until the Supreme Court acts.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SPENCE] chairman of the committee, to conclude debate.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I have just been informed that the other body has passed the rent-control extension bill by a vote of 55 to 28.

Mr. Chairman, it always gives me pleasure to agree with my good friend the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT]. We do not agree very often, but I do now have the distinct pleasure of agreeing with him in what he says. I am heartily in accord with the objectives sought to be achieved by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. RAINS]. I feel the Expediter should without hesitation act upon resolutions which are passed by municipalities in conformity with local law. His amendment provides that a resolution shall not be ineffective because it does not comply with the local law. The local law exists to protect the rights of the citizens. If the governing body does not act in conformity with local law, its action is absolutely void. A municipality speaks by its record, and its record must conform to its charter provisions. When we pass an amendment like the proposed amendment, it seems to me we are endeavoring by a Federal act to take away rights which are guaranteed to the citizens by the constitution and laws of a State.

Municipal law is the result of experience. A city's charter is created by the legislature of the State, and the provisions in that charter are made to protect the rights of the citizens. However much I think it desirable for the Expediter to act promptly on the resolution of the governing body, if that body does not act in conformity with the law, it does not express the will of the city. The only way the governing body can express the will of the city is to act in conformity with the charter. In many instances the charter gives the right of referendum and other rights which would be taken away if it is enacted otherwise.

I am opposed to both of the amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. All time has expired.

The question is on the substitute amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. MULTER], for the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. RAINS].

The question was taken; and the substitute amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. RAINS].

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee will rise.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WHITTINGTON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 9763) to amend the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended, pursuant to House Resolution 876, he reported the same back to the House.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I am, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT].

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WOLCOTT moves to recommit the bill H. R. 9763 to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WOLCOTT) there were—ayes 73, noes 89.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present. The roll call is automatic. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 153, nays 223, not voting 53, as follows:

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Senate joint resolution (S. J. Res. 207) to continue for a temporary period certain provisions of the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That section 204 (f) of the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended, is hereby amended by striking out "December 31, 1950" in each place it occurs therein and inserting in lieu thereof "February 28, 1951."

SEC. 2. Section 204 (j) (3) of the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended, is hereby amended by inserting before the period at the end thereof a colon and the following: "Provided further, That as used in this act the term 'resolution' shall not be construed to be limited to ordinances or other legislative acts, and any resolution heretofore adopted by any local governing body is hereby declared to be effective for the purpose of this section 204 (j) (3) or section 204 (f) (1), whether or not such resolution was legislative in character; and no suit or action shall be brought under section 205 of this act, or any other provision of law, on the basis of any administrative decision or the decision of any court that the resolution described in this act must be a legislative act."

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SPENCE: Strike out all after enacting clause of Senate Joint Resolution 207 and insert the provisions of the bill H. R. 9763 as passed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The proceedings whereby the House bill (H. R. 9763) was passed were vacated, and that bill was laid on the table.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Senate joint resolution (S. J. Res. 207) to continue for a temporary period certain provisions of the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended, with an amendment of the House thereto, insist on the amendment of the House and ask for a conference with the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. SPENCE, BROWN of Georgia, PATMAN, MONRONEY, WOLCOTT, GAMBLE, and KUNKEL.

GENERAL LEAVE TO EXTEND

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have five legislative days to extend their remarks on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

REFERENCE OF BILL TO HOUSE CALENDAR

Mr. BIEMILLER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BIEMILLER. Mr. Speaker, on the 7th of August the bill H. R. 7789, which was reported by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, was referred to the Union Calendar. I believe that this was done in error and that the bill should have been referred to the House Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has examined the bill and finds that it is not chargeable to the Treasury. Therefore, the reference to the Union Calendar was in error and the bill is now referred to the House Calendar as of the date it was originally reported by the committee.

COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN AFFAIRS

Mr. PRIEST. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Foreign Affairs may have until midnight tonight to file a report on the bill H. R. 9853.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does that request carry with it the right of the minority to file minority views?

Mr. PRIEST. Mr. Speaker, I include that in my request, that the minority may file their views.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

NATURALIZATION OF ALIENS

Mr. LYLE. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 874 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9780) providing the privilege of becoming a naturalized citizen of the United States to all aliens having a legal right to permanent residence. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on the Judiciary, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. LYLE. Mr. Speaker, I yield one-half the time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ALLEN].

At this point I yield myself such time as I may desire.

Mr. Speaker, this resolution makes in order the immediate consideration of H. R. 9780, a bill introduced by the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER]. The purpose of the bill is briefly explained in the report filed by my colleague the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. GOSSETT] in this language:

The purpose of the bill is to remove the racial restrictions on the naturalization of aliens who have a legal right to permanent residence in the United States, without alteration of the excluding sections of the immigration laws or disturbance of the existing immigration quotas.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LYLE. I yield.

Mr. SABATH. Similar laws have been passed in the last two years for other aliens.

Mr. LYLE. On three occasions, as I understand it.

Mr. SABATH. This is in line with legislation that the House has adopted heretofore for other nationals, mostly for the boys who have fought on the other side and for the parents of those who did not return from the other side?

Mr. LYLE. That is correct.

Mr. SABATH. And it is a unanimous report from the Judiciary Committee and a unanimous report from the Rules Committee?

Mr. LYLE. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LYLE. I yield.

Mr. COX. Does the gentleman know of any opposition on either side of the aisle to this bill?

Mr. LYLE. No. I know of none.

Mr. COX. The hearing before the Rules Committee indicated that it was a measure that the House might accept by unanimous consent. May I ask the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ALLEN] if he knows of any opposition to the bill.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I know of no opposition to the bill.

Mr. LYLE. I have no requests for time on this side, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I have no requests for time, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. LYLE. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 9780) providing the privilege of becoming a naturalized citizen of the United States to all aliens having a legal right to permanent residence, and ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 303 of the Nationality Act of 1940, as amended (60 Stat. 416; 8 U. S. C. Supp. 703), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 303. The right to become a naturalized citizen of the United States, subject to the provisions of this act, shall not be denied or abridged because of race: Provided, That no alien, who, under law existing immediately prior to the enactment of this section, as here amended, would have been ineligible to immigrate to the United States because of race shall become eligible for immigration to the United States by reason of the enactment of this section, as here amended."

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to remove the racial bar against the naturalization of people who are legally in the United States as permanent residents.

The bill applies principally to people born in Japan who have been lawfully admitted to the United States before the 1st of July, 1924. Many of them are parents of native-born United States citizens, who served in the Armed Forces. We are all familiar with the magnificent record of the four hundred and twenty-second combat team, composed of the sons of the people who could become American citizens under this legislation.

On three occasions the substance of this bill passed the House. The former measure, House Joint Resolution 238, was vetoed by the President in September 1950 because the section relating to security measures was incorporated in that resolution by the conference committee. Subsequently, this section, objected to by the Chief Executive, has become a part of the Internal Security Act of 1950 so it is no longer necessary, being the law of the land today.

The basic principle of this bill has been unanimously regarded as sound public policy, and the present situation in Asia makes it truly imperative to have it enacted into law.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

(Mr. McDONOUGH asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD.)

Mr. McDONOUGH. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of the passage of H. R. 9780 because I believe the aliens affected, many of them the parents of American-born sons who defended this country during World War II, are entitled to become naturalized citizens.

I supported this legislation when it passed the House the first time in June 1949, and I also agreed to the conference report when it passed the House on August 14 of this year.

The bill at present before the House is in better form than the original bill presented since it has been amended to conform with the provisions of the Security Act. In its present form the bill insures that any Asiatic that is granted the privilege of United States citizenship will not become affiliated with communism. If he should become affiliated with communism within 5 years after he is naturalized, he would lose his citizenship, and this provision will prevent the spread of communism and insure a better type of new citizen.

I believe H. R. 9780 should be approved as it removes discrimination against persons of certain races which heretofore has prevented such persons from becoming citizens of the United States even though they were entitled to legal permanent residence in this country.

It is my hope that the Senate will also speedily approve this bill without delay to provide right to citizenship for the aliens who will come under its provisions and clear the way for the fathers and mothers of American-born Japanese and Koreans who fought valiantly for the United States in World War II.

THE KOREAN SITUATION

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, there is, perhaps, no more accurate barometer of public opinion than constituent mail received by Members of Congress. If the mail which I am receiving is indicative of the trends of thought among our people, they are bewildered by the tragic turn of events in Korea. They are demanding, and properly so, that our boys be reinforced and given weapons with which to repel the enemy—or evacuated before it is too late.

Occasionally a letter from a constituent is outstanding because of its forthright expression of common sense and rationalism. The following letter, received from the wife of one of our servicemen in Korea, I believe, reflects generally the thinking of our people, as well as calling to our attention the shocking state of unpreparedness prevailing when our boys were ordered into Korea:

This letter has been put off for some time because I thought—and we all were told—the Korean War was over. Since the latest turn of events, however, we see that it is far from true; and since it is, there are several questions I would like answered, please.

If our soldiers are all supplied with warm clothes, why must my husband write me to send him these articles? He is an officer, but since he is on the battlefield where he cannot get to a quartermaster store or a post exchange, why was not he issued warm clothes, too?

And today I heard that our men are expected to eventually establish a line and hold it in Korea. In almost every one of my husband's letters he mentions the old equipment. In one letter he said most of their equipment was used during the Pacific War, then saw 5 years' occupation duty—and now they are expected to win a new war with it. He is a spotter pilot with * * * division, and he said except for one or two, all their planes are old and they do not expect replacements before the first of the year. Why cannot they expect replacements or at least parts for the old ones?

Why weren't they given new equipment long before now? It seems to me they should have had it in the very beginning. Couldn't this possibly be one of the reasons why the Chinese are able to overrun our men so easily in spite of our superior Air Force? How can our men fight when they have nothing to fight with? I think it is high time the people of America—especially the ones who do have loved ones in this war—wake up to the things that are going on and to the fact that our lives are more endangered every day because our boys in Korea aren't backed enough by the people at home to finish this thing before it gets bigger. I, for one, am in favor of dropping enough atomic bombs in Russia to make the whole country radioactive—then maybe we could have peace. I am not the type who usually writes letters like this, but when there is a possibility that my small son may never see his father again just because someone doesn't want to hurt someone else's feelings, or some such rot, I think it is time for letter writing or anything else that will stir up action. What do you think?

Mr. Speaker, this letter is from a devoted wife who would probably desire to have her husband with her more than anything else in the world. Yet she does not ask to get him out of the Army to let others do his fighting for him. On the contrary, she merely adds her voice to those of others who want support for their loved ones while they fight that the folks back home may live in peace and security.

I would not deny my responsibility as a Member of Congress, nor would I attempt to transfer the blame elsewhere, for the existence of these conditions. Congress must bear its rightful share of the responsibility—limited though it is—and take such action as it has authority to take to correct these mistakes, whether they be ours or others.

The fact remains that Congress had nothing to do with sending our boys into Korea. Our military leaders had told us that Korea was outside our "perimeter of defense," and as such was indefensible from a military standpoint. It was the President—the Commander in Chief—who made the decision to send our boys to Korea, and the Congress had no patriotic alternative than to give them all the support possible within its constitutional limitations. I do not question the decision of the President to send troops into Korea, but it is now obvious that tragic mistakes in this venture have cost countless American lives that conceivably might have been saved.

Mr. Speaker, the letter which I read a moment ago points out some of these mistakes. It is too late to correct errors of the past, but we can avoid recurrences of such inexcusable shortcomings. If it is true that our soldiers are fighting with used, antiquated, and outmoded equipment in zero weather without adequate clothing, I suggest that we withdraw our troops from Korea as speedily as possible in the face of inevitable massacre by the Chinese Communists. We should use the Chinese Nationalists on the mainland to divert some of the pressure from our troops in attempting to hold the line or evacuate; blockade the Chinese mainland and use our air power to cut Communist supply lines moving to the front.

At home our only choice is full and complete mobilization, including price, wage, and allocation controls. Only through the combined efforts of our people at home, coupled with the heroic sacrifies of our fighting men, will we be able to repel the atheistic hordes who would enslave the world.

PROGRAM FOR DECEMBER 8, 1950

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute to ascertain the program for tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, it is my intention to adjourn until tomorrow.

A conference is in progress in connection with the bill which was under consideration yesterday, and my agreement with those interested in the conference was that if when the House terminated the legislative business of the day I had received no report I would announce to the House that while we would meet tomorrow there would be no business transacted, because the Members are entitled to know definitely just what the situation is. So, while the House will meet tomorrow, I am announcing now that there will be no legislative business.

On tomorrow I will announce the program as far as I can for next week.

The SPEAKER. Would not the gentleman from Massachusetts like to include in that unless some matter of emergency demanded consideration?

Mr. McCORMACK. I gladly accept the Speaker's suggestion and appreciate it.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts tell us whether tomorrow there will be an opportunity for the Members to express their views on current events?

Mr. McCORMACK. We are meeting tomorrow.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I am asking the question now because I wish, and I know there are others who wish likewise, to speak for 5 or 10 minutes.

Mr. McCORMACK. We are meeting tomorrow. If Members want to talk, they may.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I have asked the gentleman from Massachusetts to yield in order to inquire of the majority leader whether or not the so-called air subsidy bill, if an agreement is reached within the committee so that all parties are satisfied, will be brought up tomorrow?

Mr. McCORMACK. I want to advise the House definitely. I left it open until the end of the legislative business of the day.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. That will not come up until Monday?

Mr. McCORMACK. I told those interested the situation and we had an understanding that they would advise me and if they did not conclude their conference then I was going to announce to the House there would be no business tomorrow. If they arrived at an agreement, that is another thing. I have made the announcement already. If something of an emergency nature should come up that will be considered. There is no business on tomorrow. If they have arrived at an agreement then we can bring the matter up on Monday.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. The bill will be scheduled for further consideration on Monday.

SPECIAL ORDERS GRANTED

Mr. JAVITS asked and was given permission to address the House for 15 minutes on Monday next, following the legislative program and any special orders heretofore entered.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan asked and was given permission to address the House for 10 minutes on tomorrow, following the legislative program and any special orders heretofore entered.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HUGH D. SCOTT, JR.] is recognized for 20 minutes.

CONGRESS SHOULD BE ADVISED OF THE WORLD SITUATION

Mr. HUGH D. SCOTT, JR. Mr. Speaker, we are dealing with questions of life and death and in a representative democracy the people have the right to know what is going on. If they are not satisfied with the action being taken they can suggest alternatives.

If the President expects to receive public confidence he must take the people into his confidence and conduct our international affairs in the manner provided by the supreme law of the land. Up to now the activities of the Secretary of State as far as testimony is concerned have been confined to ultraprivate executive sessions before the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House and the similar committee in the other body. Other Members of the Congress are neither invited nor permitted to ascertain what may be in the mind of the Secretary of State. The members of our great Committee on Foreign Affairs are not permitted, according to my understanding, to visit or to inspect any of the areas of combat at this time. The iron curtain of secrecy is down here just as effectively so far as actual information is concerned as if we were living in Russia.

Granted we have speculation, granted newspapers publish immediately after the Secretary of State's remarks what he is supposed to have said, our judgment must be based upon rumor and guesswork (and not always on accurate speculations) and the meanderings of columnists of various degrees of credibility.

Among those things which we have been told is the report that Messrs. Attlee and Truman have come to an agreement to leave the final decision in Korea up to General MacArthur. If General MacArthur is to have that decision the public is entitled to know whether he will proceed as a free agent, whether his authority is military and diplomatic and political or strictly military, whether his hands are to be tied by being forbidden to bomb any supply lines, concentrations of the enemy or airfields, or whether the general, as generals in wartime are ordinarily permitted to do, is to have at his command all of the implements of warfare and of defense, attack, and counterattack. General MacArthur himself has said the attempt to tie the hands of a military commander under these circumstances is without precedent in the history of warfare. If you are interested in locating where that is, see the March 29 issue of United States News. General MacArthur's hands should be untied.

Furthermore, it seems to me we have use for the Chinese Nationalists, their air force, their military, every possible service. The guerrilla forces ought also to be given the utmost careful consideration, because I am aware that at least 250,000 Chinese are available in the north, who might not be available—and perhaps there are more, who might not be available if they had to contend with increased guerrilla activity upon the mainland of China. All of us have received mail indicating that the State Department lacks the confidence of the public. I think that if your mail is like mine it is overwhelming in demand that Secretary of State Acheson should have the grace and the patriotism to resign. If our foreign policy was designed to stop Communist aggression, as some apologists of the administration would have us believe over the years, that that was to be considered our foreign policy, why did we not do it when there was warfare on the Italian border in 1945 and 1946? If we were drawing a line to contain communism, why did we not intervene in Iran in 1946, in Turkey in 1947, or in Greece, when we sent a fleet to Greece in 1948. That was our opportunity to stimulate counterrevolutionary activities in Albania and elsewhere, an opportunity which we missed. In 1949, in Berlin, when we were forced to use the air lift, the world took hope and courage optimistic from indications that we were at last to have a foreign policy involving the containment of communism. But, it was a brief hope. In 1950 the question arises as to why we picked Korea, which military authorities had at that time claimed to be indefensible without an adequate Navy to maintain our forces and contrary to all of the military and naval advice which has been taught to our Armed Forces and war colleges concerning the involvement on the mainland of Asia. Our foreign policy, however, was not to contain communism; it was, on the contrary, a policy of appeasement. Perhaps this story has been too often told to warrant continued repetition of how those things which we promised to China in 1943, in December, at Cairo, were taken away from China by the historic double-cross at Yalta, at which time Alger Hiss, I believe, was the only Russian-speaking member of our delegation; at Yalta, where China, whose paramount interests were involved, was not even represented, and how afterwards Dean Acheson took good care to say, we were told, to the Chinese Nationalist Government, the defacto and dejure government of China, that unless they accepted Communists into their government, we would withdraw military aid. As you know, that offer to accept Communists in that government was refused by Chiang Kai-shek. I can well imagine him saying "You might have subversives in your Government, but I do not want them in mine." Had he said that, I am sure many of us would not have blamed him. Again we recall that the then Secretary of State in 1948 at a press conference on the 13th of March repeated that he was—I am not referring to Mr. Acheson now, but the then Secretary of State, that he still felt that the Government of China should accept Communists within their Government. I am sure we all recall the other steps of appeasement, the promise to Korea, the unified, independent free democratic Republic of Korea at Cairo and elsewhere. I am sure we recall the addition, through the instigation of our own State Department, of the so-called liberals in the Parliament of Korea; many not liberals but Communists. I am sure they recall the betrayal of the Prime Minister on the day of the invasion of Seoul, and all the long and sorry history of appeasement. Who are these architects of appeasement? Why does the public lack confidence in the President's advisers? Because they are congenital appeasers, let us call the roll of a few of them:

The Assistant Secretary, Dean Rusk, said in my town of Philadelphia at a well-attended lodge meeting in January 1950 that the Chinese Communists were not Reds at all but were rather indigenous patriots, rather like our own loyalist American Revolutionary heroes.

Dean Rusk is a gentleman who accompanied the President to Wake Island, along with Ambassador Jessup, our former Ambassador-at-large to China.

Ambassador Jessup, who twice went to New York in two separate criminal trials of Alger Hiss to vouch personally for the loyalty of Alger Hiss.

Ambassador Muccio, who, as I recollect, was called in a recent magazine article "Muccio the Modest." He has a great deal to be modest about, because Ambassador Muccio, if his real views were made fully known, ought to retreat into modesty, seclusion, silence, and resignation.

I had a 4-hour conference with Ambassador Muccio in Pusan, Korea, whence he had ventured after the shelling of Taegu. I was in Taegu during the second shelling, and I heard the opinion of the Embassy staff as to that departure, of which perhaps the less said the better. But later I had a chance to meet this modest gentleman, Ambassador Muccio. With me at the time was another Member of this body, the gentleman from New York [Mr. LATHAM], with whom I share what I regard as a privilege, the opportunity to be the two Members of Congress first to serve in combat under the United Nations flag. So I speak to you not as one who would confine our activities to the insular shores of America but one who favors our commitments in Europe and maintains only that in Asia we should turn the same kind of resolute face.

Let me tell you a few things Ambassador Muccio said at that time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LATHAM] and myself in the presence of a number of witnesses. The American Ambassador to Korea said, and I am now quoting him. "We are not fighting communism." I said to him, "What are we fighting, Mr. Ambassador?" He said, "We are fighting aggression."

I said, "Mr. Ambassador, don't you have a State Department directive saying to you that members of foreign embassy staffs are not authorized even to use in your published statements the words 'Russians,' 'Communists,' and '38th parallel?'" And the American Ambassador refused to reply.

But you have not heard by any means the worst, nor will time permit me to tell you all of that conversation. I would, however, like to say what shocked me most of all was the statement by Ambassador Muccio as follows, and I quote, "the Russians had every right to arm the North Koreans." I asked him, "Why do you say that, Mr. Ambassador?" He replied, "Because we armed Chiang Kai-shek and that bunch of crooks."

I said to him, "Mr. Ambassador, you are mistaken. We promised to arm the legitimate and lawful and existing Government of China, and we broke that promise."

I am afraid that Ambassador Muccio and I do not speak the same language. One of the comments he made to me was, "Oh, Mr. SCOTT, I am an old China hand. I wish you understood the Chinese as well as I do." I said to him, "Oh, Mr. Ambassador, I wish you understood the Americans as well as I do." So we again talked with no meeting of the minds.

Certainly that record of appeasement and the long-time record of Mr. Acheson himself would justify thorough housecleaning of the State Department and of our foreign offices wherever that sort of attitude exists. Some will say, "Why bring it up at this time?" My answer is because I want, as I think every patriotic American wants, us to proceed toward establishment of a truly national nonpartisan position in our relations with the rest of the world unimpeded by those who do not wholeheartedly agree with us that communism is a menace which must be met with and fought by all the forces and means available to us. I would suggest, if we are to find the means to avoid future recriminations and find the means to unite behind the President to achieve a national policy, we have the right to insist in return that certain things be done and that those who blundered and who bungled and who misled us and the American people be fired forthwith.

Second, that they be replaced by men of such stature and men above petty considerations, that the whole Nation will be able to have unreserved confidence and a greater magnificent pride in them.

Third, that we be told the truth. What is our policy? Where are we going? What sacrifies are necessary—because they will be made gladly if they are but made known and the reasons therefor explained to the people.

Fourth, that we do without those things which have nothing to do with strengthening our national security and defense, and that such controls as are wise and workable are now very long overdue and those that are determined to be wise and workable ought to be forthwith invoked.

Fifth, that the administration practice sacrifice itself by foregoing unwise and unnecessary spending programs and by drastic economies on the domestic side of the Government administration.

I again call to the attention of the Members of this body that the President has not yet abandoned a single one of his many expensive, unreasonable, and extremely unwise suggestions, including, to name but a couple, the Brannan plan and the socialized medicine program.

I would like to express this personal view. I am no military expert, but at least the gentleman from New York [Mr. LATHAM], and I were in Korea. We were with the First Marines in the battle of Bloody Hill. We were with the First Cavalry in Taegu. We were aboard the Valley Forge. We saw our forces in action. We talked with some of the people. We talked to the GI's, both privates and officers alike. We know something of the sacrifices. We saw the dead and the dying. I recall the statement of a marine colonel to me along these lines. "When you go home," he said, "tell the people back there what the dead would have said."

I remember that remark of Colonel Haganauer. I think among other things the dead would have said that every honorable means open to statesmanship ought to be employed to avert the dire possibility of a world-wide conflagration. I think they would also say that a proposal simply to withdraw or to evacuate Korea is not an honorable method. I think they would want you to say that a Korean withdrawal would mean that the 40-some thousand American casualties that we have suffered there have been in vain; that our venture in Korea, already the fourth bloodiest conflict in our history, is to end not in victory but in the most abject sort of defeat.

While we are talking about casualties, let us remember the casualties both of ourselves and allies, including the British, Filipinos, Turks, and South Koreans, now are vastly in excess of 100,000. Instead of speaking of our own 40,000 casualties, let us remember the sacrifies of our allies as well. I think the dead would want us to remember, too, that a Korean withdrawal would mean the billion Asiatics, still hovering on the brink of choosing communism or democracy, will never again be able to trust the word of the United States or to believe in the United Nations.

Can we hold? I am no military authority. I do not know, but I leave these suggestions with you: A force of somewhere between 200,000 and 250,000 United Nations forces strong along a line of no more than 150 miles; given supremacy in the air, if that remains to be true; given artillery support and a large number of tanks—and I cannot for one believe that the supplies landed in our ports over there have all been expended; given the will to fight—what they need are the means to make the fight—given those things as facts or as probable facts, it seems to me the opinion of the House of Representatives might well be that the opinion of all lovers of freedom everywhere in this country might well be expressed in the hope that President Truman and Prime Minister Attlee come to an agreement as has been rumored that there will be no withdrawal from Korea unless and until, and save where forced by overwhelming military action on the part of the enemy. I do not think it follows that we need to give in to defeatism, because our best opportunity to find time in an area where admittedly we perhaps are at great disadvantage, that opportunity exists, the harder we fight the more we make a strong line of defense; but if those things are to be done and if we are to find means to protect and to support and to defend the things for which we stand, I think it high time, as I said before, that we clean our own house; that we put it in order, so that unitedly we, as Americans, can support our foreign office, our State Department, our President, who asks us to confide in him. Let him then hear the voices of the American people which are increasing in volume every day as they say, "Fire Acheson; get rid of Acheson; clean up the State Department."

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, with that thought in mind, I am introducing now a resolution which reads as follows:

Whereas the policies and programs of the present Secretary of State have been discredited and marked by a succession of diplomatic defeats, leading presently to war; and

Whereas as a result of the mistakes, appeasements, and continued disregard of the will and temper of the American people by the present Secretary of State, our national security and existence as a free Nation are seriously threatened; and

Whereas the American people have strongly indicated to their elected representatives their lack of confidence in the Secretary of State at a time when confidence in our national leadership is essential: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the House of Representatives that the President of the United States should forthwith demand the resignation of the Secretary of State.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have five additional minutes so that I can ask him a few questions.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has not yet expired.

Mr. HUGH D. SCOTT, JR. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I understood you to say that our casualties in Korea were now somewhere around 40,000. Do you or does anyone, so far as you know who has knowledge of the situation, have an estimate of what the casualties will be if we do not withdraw, as you suggest?

Mr. HUGH D. SCOTT, JR. I think no one can estimate what will happen in the future.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Do you not think that before we take a firm position that our men should stay in Korea, someone who has knowledge should estimate what it is going to cost, at least in lives, if not in matériel or money?

Mr. HUGH D. SCOTT, JR. I think that such an estimate will probably have to be made on an over-all basis of whether it is cheaper for us to surrender now and fight a more bloody conflict somewhere else, or whether by defending now that which we hold or that which we have reason to believe we can hold it will be cheaper in casualties in the long run. Someone should estimate that.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. How can anyone estimate the cost of some future war if they cannot give us any estimate as to the cost of the present war, in casualties?

Mr. HUGH D. SCOTT, JR. I think the Members would be better off and the people would feel better off if the Members of Congress were given more facts and a great deal more information than they are now given by the administration. I do not ask that we be told top-secret data either; merely that we be told at least as much as will enable us to make some sound judgments here. I think the people think that we know what is going on in the State Department, when the fact is that we do not know.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I agree with you as to that statement, but here is another question: Do you know of anyone who has knowledge, who has any opinion as to the prospects of success if we continue in Korea and Asia, and war breaks out in Europe?

Mr. HUGH D. SCOTT, JR. I would assume that that was a matter for the Joint Chiefs of Staff, the Secretary of Defense, and, if he were competent to do it, the Secretary of State.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Our people, at least the ones I hear from, want to know just what our objective is, what the prospect is of winning in the end, and what in lives it may cost.

Mr. HUGH D. SCOTT, JR. Was it not St. John who said: "You shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free"? Our chances of freedom are very much better.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. That is a fine quotation from scripture, but it does not give me any information to pass on to my constituents.

Mr. HUGH D. SCOTT, JR. I am unable to get such information, and that is the whole purport of what I have been saying here.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. HAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to be absent from the legislative sessions of the House on Monday and Tuesday because of my attendance at sessions of a special committee investigating the South Amboy explosion.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

KEEPING SECRETS

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, we have just listened to remarks of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HUGH D. SCOTT, JR.], in which he recited a number of matters that would have been better left unsaid.

The gentleman talks about giving information to the people and taking the people into his confidence. Nobody disputes that; on the other hand, there is certain information that cannot be made available, in the national interest of our own country, at a particular time. We know that so far as Stalin is concerned he does not have to have a spy corps in the United States to get 90 percent of his information; all he has to do is to read the newspapers and follow the radio. Just go through these corridors and listen to the remarks and follow them through and go through the process of elimination, and one could get 90 percent valuable information, and most of it comes from Members of Congress. I am glad to say very few in this branch who were given the type of information that cannot be made public at a particular time have violated their promise and pledge.

I was reading only last night a letter written by John Quincy Adams to William Vans Murray in 1797, in which he said, in substance, "Democracies are like a sieve; a secret cannot be kept."

We face a world in which more than half, the greater part, is totalitarian; where only a few men determine the course and policies of those governments, the Soviet Union and its satellites. There is no such thing as public opinion over there; the people cannot express themselves and public opinion cannot be molded. Fortunately, we can do so here; but in a democracy we have a responsibility, every one of us, particularly those in legislative life, not to divulge information that is given in secret because at that particular time it cannot be made public, but which is given to us to enable an understanding of the world situation in connection with legislative action. They should realize that when they make disclosures—and some of them discolor the information that is given to them—that they are doing something which is directly contrary to the national interest of the United States.

Mr. HUGH D. SCOTT, JR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. In just a moment.

I have an editorial in my hand taken from the Washington Post of this morning dealing with General Bradley's appearance before a committee of one of the branches of Congress. He was then misquoted. It was a violation of secrecy; not only was secrecy violated but it was discolored by saying that General Bradley had given the committee information about a Dunkerque in Korea. As a matter of fact General Bradley was compelled to issue a public denial first because it contained misinformation and a discoloration. Think of a man of his standing forced to deny it publicly. All of that affects the people of the United States, and it has international repercussions, when a man of his stature and his position in the world of today and in our country is compelled to deny that he gave certain testimony.

As the Washington Post says:

> But the breach this time was made worse by the delicate nature of the subject and its intimate relation to present security.

We all have a responsibility to this country of ours and uppermost in the minds of each and every one of us should be this responsibility. I know it is in mine. I am not saying it is not in the minds of any of the other Members, and I am not saying it is not in the mind of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, who is just as good an American as I am and I hope I am as good an American as he is.

Mr. HUGH D. SCOTT, JR. There is no question about that, in my opinion.

Mr. McCORMACK. In the national interest we have to be careful. Many things can be said at some other time that cannot be said at a particular time. With the world aflame, what we need in America are not those who will not kneel or crawl to live but who will stand to fight and die, if necessary, with clear minds and courageous hearts.

I have no doubt as to the outcome. I am an optimist, not a pessimist. I have confidence in this generation of Americans. Of course, we face a trying period. The people of America will always respond. We have these emotional utterances. We are all human, we all act emotionally at times, but that does not represent the spirit of America.

I can remember 10 years ago when there was a discussion around the table as to whether the youth of America then would respond. The statement was made that they were soft. Almost everyone said they were soft. Then Pearl Harbor came and the youth of America 9 years ago showed they were made of steel. They responded. They are now veterans of World War II. The same thing applies to America of today.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUGH D. SCOTT, JR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. HUGH D. SCOTT, JR. The gentleman may recall that on the day on which the gentleman, and he knows I have the highest regard and respect for him, announced the President's decision to enter Korea, I expressed on that day in colloquy with him the hope that because of our present state of preparedness we would not have too little, too late, and indicated my wholehearted support of any decision made by the President of the United States. Insofar as foreign affairs are concerned, if he makes another decision we will all loyally abide by it. But the gentleman argues that because information is not available in totalitarian countries such information as can be properly given ought not to be made available to the full membership of this body.

Mr. McCORMACK. I never made any such statement as that. I said "information which shoud not be made public at that particular time in the national interests of our country" and given to Members of Congress should be kept confidential until the time arrives when it can be made public.

I would like to see every Member get the information. But the gentleman knows there are certain committees involved, I am in the position where I can go to the Foreign Affairs Committee and they are kind enough to invite me when there is an executive session. I attend whenever I can. I would like to see every Member get this information. But what is happening is that the committees, like the Armed Services, I assume, are given information. The Committee on Foreign Affairs is given information, the appropriate committees in both branches of the Congress are given information. I know of no instance on the part of Members of the House where that secrecy has ever been violated. The gentleman's speech has not violated anything. He has simply expressed his own thoughts.

Mr. HUGH D. SCOTT, JR. That is correct, and I appreciate what the gentleman has said.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman has not violated any information he has received as a gentleman not to disclose it.

Mr. HUGH D. SCOTT, JR. May I say that in my statement of the conversation with the Ambassador to South Korea I specifically warned him at the time I would feel free to repeat those comments, and he said, "I suppose you will." I want the gentleman to know that that was the only instance I used where I was not quoting from a newspaper or from my own personal opinion. That was the conversation with Mr. Muccio.

Mr. McCORMACK. On the first premise of my friend, I think we all agree that all information possible that can be given not only to the Congress but the American people should be given, but I think my friend will agree that there are times when information in the national interest of our country at a particular time cannot be made public.

Mr. HUGH D. SCOTT, JR. I know exactly what the gentleman has in mind, fully, but I am expressing here a concern that the people who write us letters are not by any means aware of the fact that we are not in possession of very much information, and that there is some that we ought to be entitled to receive. I admit that there is some that cannot be told us at certain times.

Mr. McCORMACK. If the gentleman says he has not got it, I can understand it. My friend is on what committee?

Mr. HUGH D. SCOTT, JR. Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Mr. McCORMACK. I think the members of the Committee on Armed Services are given information, and the Committee on Foreign Affairs is given information. Of course, there is even information that they cannot give at a particular time, and I would not want them to.

Mr. HUGH D. SCOTT, JR. My committee was given a good deal of misinformation.

Mr. McCORMACK. If they wanted to tell me about the atomic bomb, I would say, "I do not want to hear it." I do not want to know certain things.

Mr. HUGH D. SCOTT, JR. My committee was given a good deal of misinformation about shipments to Russia.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Of course, we all realize that there is much information that cannot be given to us and that if it was given to us we would not know any more about the real situation anyway; technical matters. But, here is the point I want to make. Should not the American people be given some idea by our experts as to the prospect of success in a worldwide war and what the cost of that might be in lives?

Mr. McCORMACK. There are many things that cannot be made public at a particular time in the national interest of our country, and the gentleman knows it, and every American knows it. The fact remains that there is more misinformation going out of Washington than otherwise, and being given by Members of Congress, particularly one branch, that is given to its Members in confidence. Their statements are directly contrary to the national interest of our country: First, in violating a confidence and in some cases in discoloring information that they have received. General Marshall on three occasions has been forced to deny certain statements that have been attributed to him. It is a disgraceful situation when that condition exists.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

SENATE

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 8, 1950

(Legislative day of Monday, November 27, 1950)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

Rev. George M. Docherty, D. D., minister, New York Avenue Presbyterian Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Almighty and Everlasting God, who art the Lord of Hosts, and who in ancient days set up a pillar of cloud by day and a pillar of fire by night to guide Thy chosen people through famine and plague and the pestilence of war unto the land of promise; grant to our Nation in these critical days such a vision and the certitude of Thy blessings and guidance. And especially to those who sit in this Chamber. Do Thou, O Heavenly Father, enable them to hear above the thunder of the world Thy still, small voice. Give them clear insights and calm courage and in all the grave decisions they must make the knowledge that they are servants not only of the people but servants of God. To this end do we dedicate our lives today, O Lord, that this world, which in our time has by man's achievement become a neighborhood, may by the power and the presence of Thy Holy Spirit become a brotherhood of men and nations. Through Jesus Christ, the Prince of Peace. Amen.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Maurer, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 9780) providing the privilege of becoming a naturalized citizen of the United States to all aliens having a legal right to permanent residence, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

On request of Mr. WHERRY, and by unanimous consent, Mr. LODGE was excused from attendance on the session of the Senate today.

COMMITTEE MEETING DURING SENATE SESSION

On request of Mr. ROBERTSON, and by unanimous consent, the Committee on Armed Services was authorized to meet during the session of the Senate today.

DEMAND FOR RECOGNITION OF CITIZENS OF NORTH DAKOTA IN APPOINTMENTS TO PUBLIC OFFICE

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, last evening when the calendar was called in executive session I did not object to the confirmation of the various individuals who had been nominated to office. Time and time again on the floor of the Senate I have called the attention of the Senate and of the administration to the fact that no citizen of North Dakota has been named to head any important office. Year after year has gone by without any citizen of North Dakota being nominated to any such office. At the present time no citizen of North Dakota is serving as ambassador or consul, and you all know that there is no better group of people anywhere than North Dakota people. One New York man after another has been named, and at one time there were six members of the Cabinet who had been appointed from the State of New York, and last night we confirmed another New Yorker.

Mr. President, I am serving notice that the next time the Senate is called on to confirm anyone to head any office I propose to oppose the confirmation. I shall do all in my power to see to it that the people of North Dakota finally get the recognition to which they have been entitled ever since the State was admitted into the Union in 1889. I want the Senators to know exactly how I feel on the subject. I have taken up the matter time and time again, and if in order to get results I must cause delay and take the time of the Senate, even in these critical times, I propose to do it. North Dakota is a part of these United States, the citizens pay a large share of the taxes, and I propose to see that some citizens from there will have something to do with the real operation of this Government.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, in view of what the Senator has said—and I can well understand the thoughts in his mind—I would suggest that he whisper in the ear of the President and start at the source.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CAPEHART. What is the business before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senate bill 3295, the so-called railway-labor bill, is before the Senate, and the pending question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. HOLLAND].

Mr. CAPEHART. That estops any additional amendment being offered until the pending amendment is disposed of?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is correct; unless an amendment is offered to the pending amendment.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. WHERRY. The bill is open to amendment, is it not?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be open to amendment after the pending amendment is disposed of.

Mr. CAPEHART. After the pending amendment is disposed of; but no amendment can be offered now unless it is an amendment to the pending amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is correct.

RESOLUTIONS OF MINNESOTA DIVISION, IZAAK WALTON LEAGUE OF AMERICA, INC., DULUTH, MINN.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, I present for appropriate reference, and ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, resolutions adopted by the twenty-eighth annual convention of the Minnesota division, Izaak Walton League of America, Inc., at Duluth, Minn., on September 29–30, 1950, relating to the conservation of waterfowl and other wildlife.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RESOLUTIONS PASSED BY THE TWENTY-EIGHTH ANNUAL CONVENTION OF THE MINNESOTA DIVISION, IZAAK WALTON LEAGUE OF AMERICA, INC., DULUTH, MINN., SEPTEMBER 29–30, 1950

RESOLUTION 5

Whereas extensive farm drainage, especially of potholes and marshes, stimulated by Federal aid furnished through the Soil Conservation Service and the Production and Marketing Administration under the Department of Agriculture, has done widespread and irreparable damage to the habitat for waterfowl and other wild life: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Minnesota Division of the Izaak Walton League in convention assembled at Duluth, Minn., this 30th day of September 1950 as follows:

1. We recognize the right of farmers to improve their land by drainage, but we remind them that wild life has great value to farmers and to the public, that the protection and development of wild life habitat benefits farms and enhances their value, and we urge them to make full allowance for this in connection with their drainage projects.

2. We believe that under present economic conditions the promotion of farm drainage by Federal aid, especially the payment of cash subsidies, is unnecessary and unsound, although we recognize that certain types of drainage are necessary for good farming and that some drainage is beneficial to wild life. We therefore urge Congress and the Secretary of Agriculture to stop the payment of cash subsidies for drainage immediately.

RESOLUTION 6

Whereas there is urgent need for better coordination and control of Federal agencies dealing with protection or development of natural resources in order to eliminate confusion and conflict among present separate agencies, prevent waste of public funds on ill-advised and ineffective projects, promote efficiency and economy in administration, and to secure adequate consideration for wildlife and other natural resources as well as other public interests; and

Whereas the reorganization of the Government agencies concerned as recommended by the Hoover Commission or its task force on natural resources would involve difficult and controversial problems which would delay action; and

Whereas a large degree of effective coordination and control over Federal projects affecting waters and other natural resources could be accomplished by creation of a Board of Review to pass on such projects, which could furnish along with existing agencies and which would not interfere with ultimate reorganization of those agencies under any plan that may be adopted: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we urge Congress to establish at once a Board of Review for all Federal projects affecting waters and other natural resources as recommended by the minority report of the Hoover Commission and the Task Force on Natural Resources.

RESOLUTION 7

Whereas the existing act under which the Corps of Army Engineers administers the upper Mississippi River and its tributaries, provides for recognition of use for navigation only; and

Whereas wildlife and recreational values have become of tremendous value and importance since the passage of this act: Be it hereby

Resolved, That the Minnesota Division of the Izaak Walton League urges that the basic and covering administration of all Federal water-control projects on the upper Mississippi River and tributaries be amended to require adequate consideration for wildlife, recreation, and other conservation uses as well as navigation, flood-control, and other public interests.

RESOLUTION 24

Whereas the recreational and wildlife values are as important as the timber values of our national forests; and

Whereas United States Forest Service management is out of balance in having all their men work on timber and none on wildlife: Be it hereby

Resolved, That the Minnesota Division, Izaak Walton League of America, request the United States Congress to appropriate funds for the United States Forest Service to employ wildlife managers on both the Chippewa and Superior National Forests, and that this request be made known to all Minnesota Congressmen.

RESOLUTIONS OF TWENTY-FIRST ANNUAL CONVENTION OF PURE MILK PRODUCTS COOPERATIVE

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, on October 31, it was my pleasure to attend the twenty-first annual convention of the Nation's largest milk producers' cooperative—The Pure Milk Products Cooperative of Fond du Lac, Wisconsin. I joined with over 1,534 delegates, members and guests in reviewing the accomplishments of the PMPC during the last year and considering the problems faced by the great membership of this organization in the present and in the future.

So large is the annual production of the Pure Milk Products Cooperative that the members of this single cooperative produce more milk than is produced by 24 entire States of the 48 States in our Union. For the year ending August 31, 1950, PMPC members produced 1,379,000,000 pounds of milk, and production this year is expected to hit 1,500,000,000 pounds.

Because dairying is so crucial to Wisconsin's future and to the health of the entire Nation, I believe that the resolutions adopted by this great organization will be of interest to my colleagues. I ask unanimous consent therefore that there be printed in the RECORD, and appropriately referred, the text of those resolutions adopted by the convention which pertain to national affairs, and that the text be followed by an enumeration of officers and directors of the Pure Milk Products Cooperative.

There being no objection, the resolutions together with the enumeration of officers and directors, were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

GOVERNMENT AND FARM PRICES IN TIMES OF EMERGENCIES

1. The threat of war and actual war in Korea causes our Government to increase our military forces to approximate war strength. This will inevitably alter the price situation for dairy products. It will alter the habits of production for all agricultural products as well as the production habits of industry. These changes, in all probability, will call for controls. It may be necessary to adopt rationing programs. History proves that emergencies affect all prices, but not proportionately. Emergencies also affect supply and demand, but not in direct proportion with respect to all commodities.

2. In view of the facts set forth above, Pure Milk Products Cooperative wishes to bring forcefully to the attention of the Congress and administration the need for serious consideration of (1) rationing problems, (2) comparable prices for dairy products under any price control that may be necessary.

With respect to rationing, we call attention to the many unjust and unfair rationing policies that were adopted in the last war. A program of rationing on butter and other dairy products was of such force that it caused a lasting change in the eating habits of an overwhelming majority of our national population to the eternal detriment of the consumption of dairy products and especially butter. Butter was rationed while other spreads to imitate butter were given a preferential freedom position with respect to rationing. For example: Rationing coupons that could have been used for butter were of necessity used for red meats while substitutes and imitations were left free to depress the use of butter. We condemn such a policy and urge and demand that the Congress and administration give this matter serious consideration if and when a rationing program becomes necessary.

COMPARABLE PRICES

If it becomes necessary to fix prices on agricultural products and especially milk, we demand that the Congress or such other price-fixing body charged with such authority be given mandatory authorization to fix prices for dairy products on a comparable basis without respect to the application of parity formula if full parity or any other price plan should not yield a price to dairy products at least comparable to other agricultural crops or commodities during the same period chosen for basic price-fixing plants.

3. We, the delegate body of Pure Milk Products Cooperative, in annual convention this 31st day of October 1950, further resolve that it shall be the duty of the State board of directors to take such action as will be in keeping with the intent reflected herein to bring about the price and rationing relationship as may be necessary due to changed conditions that may take place in the interim of convention of the delegates of this cooperative.

FARM SURPLUSES

1. As long as there is a surplus of dairy products, we must devise ways and means of handling such surpluses. We, therefore, reaffirm last year's resolutions respecting dairy surplus.

2. In uncertain times like the present, it is impossible to formulate a permanent plan for handling agricultural surpluses. We recommend that present governmental price supports and governmental purchasing shall be maintained until such time as supply and demand are approximately balanced.

3. Both the butter and the dried-milk industry should begin at once to examine their merchandising and advertising techniques. Too great a dependence is placed by these two industries on Government-purchasing policies. We commend our universities for the part they have played in research and consumer education in a effort to further the consumption of dried-milk and butter.

4. Wisconsin milk producers' prices for milk sold for manufactured dairy products, such as evaporated milk, cheese, and butter-powder operations, have historically been higher than the national average price received by producers for like production. For several months during this year a few privately owned plant operators in Wisconsin have failed to pay Wisconsin milk producers the calculated support price provided by the Commodity Credit Corporation plus the historical differential over the national average price.

In most cases these same companies have enjoyed a market with the Commodity Credit Corporation for their finished products.

It is our view that the Government purchase program was designed to support price to dairy farmers. We believe that the program is being defeated by such practice and that flagrant abuse is being made of the program at the expense of the dairy producers.

Therefore, we respectfully request that the Commodity Credit Corporation or any other Government agency charged with the administration of the support program cease to buy dairy products from any privately owned company that fails to pay the calculated support price plus the historical differentials.

Provided, however, that producers shall report such practices to the proper authorities and, provided further, that purchase by Government will be resumed upon proof satisfactory to the Government that such buyers have and will pay producers in keeping with the intent of the Government purchase program.

TRADE BARRIERS

1. (a) During the past year, we have heard a good deal about trade barriers. Trade barriers are especially harmful to Wisconsin dairymen, due to the fact that approximately 85 percent of our milk is sold outside the boundaries of the State. We believe, however, that there is a great deal of misunderstanding on the part of Wisconsin dairymen as to what constitutes a trade barrier. Many so-called trade barriers are simply the result of the operation of natural economic laws. We must remember that production costs, freight rates, geographical position of a market, and local demand are the usual factors governing the sale of milk on any given market.

(b) Trade barriers do exist. We condemn any local health regulation, the effect of which is to impede or prevent the natural flow of milk. We condemn provisions of Federal milk marketing orders which are not based on sound economy or true costs where or when the sole purpose of such provision is to build a wall about a city market for the protection of selfish minority groups.

2. We urge our manager or president to appear before the Gillette commitees, which is investigating trade barriers, to explain in its true light Pure Milk Products Cooperative's attitude toward this important issue.

SUBSTITUTE AND SYNTHETIC FOODS

1. Great changes have taken place since the adjournment of our last annual convention in respect to oleomargarine. The first battle over colored oleo has been lost in Congress. The fight against unfair competition between dairy products and substitutes must go on.

A. Since Congress has seen fit to remove the color ban for margarine, we insist that they appropriate ample funds for the enforcement of the present law. Rigid enforcement of the law is the only protection that the dairymen, on the one hand, and the consuming public on the other, can expect against the fraud of the margarine industry. Congress certainly owes the dairymen and the public this protection.

B. We urge our sister States who still have color bans against margarine on their statute books to hold the line against all pressure to remove the same.

2. On July 21, 1950, the State board adopted a resolution relative to synthetic foods. We commend their action and adopt a like resolution at this time.

A. This Nation, from the time of its founding, has depended for its chief food supply on the natural products of agriculture, such as grain, livestock, dairy products, and poultry. Through the years there has developed an immense food-processing industry which utilizes enormous quantities of these natural agricultural, livestock, dairy, and poultry products in meeting the daily nutritional requirements of the people. An ever-increasing portion of the Nation's food supply is being industrially processed, which processing has a direct bearing on the character of the national diet and standards of public health.

Certain chemicals, inorganic compounds, and synthetic materials are being used on an ever-increasing scale in the processing and preparation of various food products. Under existing laws there is no requirement that the chemicals, compounds, inorganic materials, and synthetics must be demonstrated to be nontoxic before being introduced into the food stream of the Nation. It appears reasonably certain that many of the chemicals, compounds, and inorganic materials and synthetics are being used to reduce or replace in foods organic material of great importance to the Nation's diet. The trends represented by the use of these chemicals, compounds, inorganic materials, and synthetics present a serious problem, not only to the health and welfare of our people but also to the future stability and well-being of our entire agricultural economy. The utilization of chemicals to replace milk solids, animal and vegetable fats and oils, as well as eggs, in the processing of food threatens heavy inroads into the production of these items by the agricultural segment of our economy.

The House of Representatives has recently adopted a resolution providing for the appointment of a special investigating committee to investigate this whole problem and report the same with recommendations for legislation to the next Congress. The Speaker, pursuant to the authority of such resolutions, has appointed a special committee to make such an investigation.

1. We heartily endorse the action of the Congress in providing for the appointment of such special investigating committee and heartily endorse the objectives of said committee.

2. We demand that the pure food and drug laws be suitably amended so as to put the burden upon any individual or corporation seeking to introduce a new chemical into the food stream of the Nation to demonstrate by clinical evidence that such chemical is not injurious over a long period to the health of the people.

3. We recommend that legislation be enacted granting to the Food and Drug Administration powers of subpena to enable it to more effectively and efficiently protect the public interest and the public food supply.

4. That this convention extend to FRANK B. KEEFE, Congressman from Wisconsin, its vote of appreciation and thanks for the scholarly research and untiring effort he has extended in bringing about the appointment of the above congressional committee.

FEDERAL ORDERS

We reaffirm our belief in an order for evaporated milk. We urge the State board and manager to do everything in their power to consumate our long years of endeavor to obtain an evaporated milk order.

2. Federal fluid milk orders have been under fire the last year. We realize that Federal orders are not perfect, but we believe that Federal order, if properly devised and executed, is the best means yet invented to maintain a plentiful supply of healthful fluid milk for the consuming public on the one hand and an orderly market with fair prices to producers on the other.

3. The administration of Federal milk orders has been eminently successful. This successful administration has been due mainly to the fact that control of funds and personnel has been kept under local management. At no time has political or bureaucratic interference entered into the picture. Pure Milk Products Cooperative believes that the efficient administration of an order depends on a maximum freedom of action on the part of the Administrator and a minimum of interference on the part of the Federal Government. We are greatly opposed to and alarmed at the present tendency of the Production and Marketing Administration, whereby control over certain funds and personnel is being taken away from local authority and centralized in Washington. This movement will tend to decrease the authority of the Market Administrator, thereby decreasing administrative efficiency and increasing administrative costs.

Since Federal orders are financed by the milk markets, not by taxpayers, we suggest to the Production and Marketing Administration that their movement to centralize authority over Federal markets be discontinued.

DAIRY DIVISION

1. Your manager or president never go to Washington but what they visit the Dairy Division. Pure Milk Products Cooperative appreciates the important part the Dairy Division plays in the economy of the dairy farmer. We sincerely appreciate the fact that our relationships with the various departments of the Division have been cordial and cooperative. We take this opportunity to welcome Mr. Preston Richards as the new Chief of the Dairy Division. We pledge him our support in his efforts to promote the dairy interests of the Nation.

2. Pure Milk Products Cooperative is a commodity organization. We represent the interests of all dairymen. No single branch of the milk industry can be unduly emphasized to the detriment of other branches. Pure Milk Products Cooperative realizes that milk going into fluid channels and milk going into manufactured channels are of equal importance to the stability of the industry and that a balance of emphasis must be maintained at all times between fluid and manufactured milk.

A. We urge the Chief of the Dairy Division to bear this important fact in mind at all times. Absolute equality of emphasis should be maintained in the division between fluid and manufactured milk. Division heads working in fluid milk should have equal rank with division heads working in manufactured milk.

ST. LAWRENCE WATERWAY

1. Freight rates on dairy products are increasing each succeeding year. Wisconsin dairymen find it exceedingly difficult to sell their product competitively in the populous eastern markets, due to high transportation costs.

2. Water transportation, compared to rail transportation, is cheap. The development of the St. Lawrence waterway would reduce the freight costs to eastern markets materially. The enactment of no single measure before Congress would benefit the dairy farmer as much as the passage of the St. Lawrence waterway.

3. We, therefore, reaffirm all past resolutions relative to the St. Lawrence waterway. Once again we urge Congress to pass the proper enabling legislation and to appropriate sufficient funds for construction of the St. Lawrence waterway.

4. Gratitude is a virtue, the expression of which is too often neglected. This is especially true of farm organizations. We are prone to accept the unselfish service of our leaders and our public servants without expressing our appreciation. Pure Milk Products Cooperative believes it is proper in this convention to publicly thank Wisconsin Representatives and Senators for the unselfish fight they have waged in the United States Senate for the St. Lawrence waterway.

QUART OF MILK A DAY

Every day more and more scientific evidence is supplied to prove that milk does more for the body than any other food. Medical history records prove that the people who have achieved, those who have become large, virgorous, strong people, those people who have reduced their infant mortality, who have the best trades in the world, those who are progressive in science and in every activity of human intellect—are the people who have used abundant amounts of milk and its products. Large industries are in greater numbers each year resorting to the use of milk in their factories to improve employees' health and reduce fatigue. The results show a reduction in accidents with an improvement in safety, and increased production, and better health are reported where milk is being served between meals or added to the diet.

Therefore, we, the members of Pure Milk Products Cooperative, believe that the men and women of our Armed Forces should have an abundance of milk, the essential food beverage, to give them the strength and spirit to carry on, and we earnestly urge the Congress to provide ways and means so that our Armed Forces, wherever they may be, shall have at least a quart of milk or its equivalent each day.

DRAFT

The draft for war affects all Americans and should do so equally. Through selective service, rural America will continue its past contribution to our country's defense.

Presently, it appears that most draft boards feel that farming is not considered essential, and, in Wisconsin, no consideration is being given to our replacement of a man—and which often forces our discontinuance of dairying.

The farmer with one employee can't find a replacement as easily as the factory owner with 100 or 1,000 employees. This is particularly true in Wisconsin, where diversified and specialized farming requires special skills and where industry has already drained the countryside by higher wages.

The farmer doesn't want blanket exemption. Equal treatment under selective service with city folks requires that some consideration be given to our replacement of the drafted men. The present plan of drafting farmers (apparently there are only city draft boards) without opportunity to find a replacement works a hardship on the dairy farmer and will result in a national loss of essential foods produced.

Why the dairy farmer with one hired man can't receive the same consideration as the industrialist with 10,000 employees we can't understand.

Therefore be it resolved that the selective service, in drafting farmers, consider the need for replacement of our skills, the need for dairying and permit sufficient time to find a man. The present policy will force a sale and discontinuance of farming. It unfairly favors the city industrial and service establishments.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

(Mr. ANDERSON introduced Senate bill 4236, to provide for the development and regulation of methods of weather modification and control, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and appears under a separate heading.)

By Mr. MARTIN:

S. 4237. A bill for the relief of Tsung Hsien Hsu; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. O'CONOR:

S. 4238. A bill for the relief of Hara Shpak, A. A. Shpak, and Sympcha Shpak; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BREWSTER:

S. 4239. A bill for the relief of Arthur Koestler; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

WEATHER CONTROL ACT OF 1951

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill to be known as the Weather Control Act of 1951, and I ask unanimous consent that there be printed in the body of the RECORD a brief statement I have prepared, together with statements by Dr. E. J. Workman, of the New Mexico School of Mines, and Vincent J. Schaefer, of the General Electric Research Laboratory, Schenectady, N. Y., on artificial inducement of precipitation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be received and appropriately referred, and, without objection, the statements presented by the Senator from New Mexico will be printed in the RECORD. The Chair hears no objection.

The bill (S. 4236) to provide for the development and regulation of methods of weather modification and control, introduced by Mr. ANDERSON, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

The statements presented by Mr. ANDERSON are as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR ANDERSON ON WEATHER CONTROL BILL

I have today introduced a bill to provide for the development and regulation of methods of weather modification and control. To some persons this may be considered somewhat presumptuous, if not sacreligious, as there are those who say that they are still willing to leave the weather to divine providence. To this I can only reply that in my judgment the sphere of divine providence is no more invaded by weather control than by the splitting of the atom. Occasional dramatic events such as the recent New York water shortage, or the dust storms of a few years ago, or hurricanes, or other great disturbances of nature serve to remind us that the weather is one of the most important factors in our everyday lives. Without sufficient rainfall our agriculture is seriously affected; problems of health and adequate water supply are drastically increased. On the other hand, periods of severe storms or excessive rainfall bring devastating floods, ruin crops, and take their toll in injury and damage to lives and property. The transportation of goods and persons, military problems of national defense, and, indeed, every activity in which we engage is affected directly or indirectly by the weather.

At this point, I suppose I should recognize that some will inquire, quite properly, as to the constitutional basis for this type of legislation. I do not propose to discuss that feature in detail. It will doubtless be adequately considered in committee. I want only to say that there is no doubt in my mind that this is a proper subject of Federal legislation. As to specific constitutional sources of power I need only refer to the commerce clause and the war power. I call to mind in connection with the commerce clause the regulation of air navigation, water navigation (flood control and improvement of navigable waters), and radio communication. These are to me convincing considerations, leaving aside the interstate movement of the clouds themselves, and are sufficient to justify Federal legislation by specific reference to the clause itself or under the necessary and proper clause. With regard to the war power the analogy to atomic energy is plain and to my mind equally as potent. It was General Kenny who said, "The nation which first learns to plot the paths of air masses accurately and learns to control the time and place of precipitation will dominate the globe."

To give an idea of developments in this field I am having my remarks accompanied by two statements prepared for this purpose by Dr. E. J. Workman, president of the New Mexico School of Mines at Socorro, N. M., who has been working in close coordination with General Electric scientists on artificial precipitation, and by Dr. Vincent J. Schaefer of the General Electric research laboratory at Schenectady. As will be observed from Dr. Workman's statement "the era of scientific weather control began some 4 years ago when Dr. Vincent J. Schaefer of General Electric Co. made his now famous announcements concerning dry ice in a refrigerated box and supercooled clouds." On November 22, 1950, I flew up to Schenectady and personally met with a group studying the problem at the General Electric laboratory—Dr. Irving Langmuir, Dr. Vincent Schaefer, Dr. Bernard Vonnegut, and, of course, Dr. Guy Suits, vice president and research director of General Electric at Schenectady. Possibly Senators may have already read various articles in Time or Pathfinder magazines about the activities of Dr. Langmuir, a Nobel prize winner. An interesting article about these scientists may also be found in the Saturday Evening Post, issue of October 25, 1947, on page 24, wherein Dr. Suits is quoted as saying that developments in modification of weather phenomena are "possibly as important in terms of benefits to mankind as atomic energy."

The bill in general follows the outline of the Atomic Energy Act of 1946, that is, it in effect places weather modification and control activities exclusively under the control of the Federal Government. I recognize that there are competent and well-meaning persons both within and without the Government who take the position that regulation in this field is premature, and that we have not yet gained the knowledge upon which to base comprehensive legislative regulation. Equally competent persons take the opposite view, and point out that while it is a field in which unknown factors are involved, the implications are so great that it is better now to seek the application of measures with proper safeguards. With this latter group I agree. I am not so sure that from a scientific standpoint it is not just as important to deal with this subject now as it was to deal with atomic energy at the time of the enactment of the Atomic Energy Act of 1946. It is probable that economic benefits may be realized much sooner than in the case of atomic energy. I am not so sure, either, that weather modification and control is not closely related, at least from the standpoint of national security, to the utilization of atomic energy as a military weapon. In any event I am convinced that an attempt to set up intelligent regulation should be made immediately, even though it will necessarily be subject to revision from time to time as the results of weather control measures become more predictable. To my mind it is a question of intelligent regulation now or continued haphazard interference with the weather with no central authority to channel the course of these measures in the national interest.

When it is considered that the potentialities in this field go all the way from inducing, increasing, or preventing precipitation, to changing the course, or modifying the intensity, of a thunderstorm or a hurricane, the almost terrifying implications seem to me to make it obvious that the Federal Government should occupy this field now. While research and experimentation in the field of weather modification and control have attained the stage at which the application of scientific advances in this field has practical significance, the effect of the use of such measures upon the social, economic, and political structures of our country and upon national security is yet to be determined. This is a field in which uncommon factors and unsolved problems are involved. As stated in the bill which I have introduced, it is reasonable to anticipate, however, that effective modification and control of the weather will cause or produce profound changes in our present way of life and will result in far-reaching benefits to and untold developments in agriculture, industry, commerce, and the general welfare. While the ultimate extent to which measures for weather control may be utilized is still speculative, the application of such measures without proper safeguards, sufficient data, and accurate information may result in inadequate or excessive precipitation; may cause catastrophic droughts, storms, floods, and other phenomena with consequent loss of life and property, injury to navigable streams and other channels of interstate and foreign commerce, injury to water supplies for municipal, irrigation, and industrial purposes, and injury to sources of hydroelectric power. Such measures, improperly applied, may also impede the production and transportation of goods and services for domestic consumption and export, may impair or hinder the national defense, and in many other ways may adversely affect the general welfare of the people of the United States. Moreover, thorough experimentation in, and application of, such measures will of necessity affect areas extending across State and even international boundaries.

Accordingly, it seems clear that further experimentation in and application of measures for weather control are matters of national concern which cannot and should not be left to haphazard and undirected private and individual action, uncontrolled by any responsible body and without any comprehensive planning for uniform and beneficial development. Believing that the time has come for definite action to correct this situation I have introduced S. 4236, the purpose of which is to insure that maximum benefits may result from weather modification and control; to regulate and supervise all those who attempt to engage in such activity; to correlate and evaluate the information derived from such activity; and to achieve cooperation with the several States and the duly authorized officials thereof concerning such activity, all to the end of encouraging the intelligent and beneficial development of weather modification and control, preventing its harmful and indiscriminate exercise and fostering sound economic conditions in the public interest.

To achieve these purposes the bill provides for four major programs relating to weather modification or control:

1. A program of assisting and fostering private research and development to encourage maximum scientific progress.

2. A program of federally conducted research and development to assure the Government of adequate scientific and technical accomplishment.

3. A program for Government control of experiments and operations in order to advance the general welfare, assure the common defense and national security, and to promote the broadest possible exploitation of the field.

4. A program of administration which will be consistent with the foregoing policies and with international arrangements made by the United States, and which will enable the Congress to be currently informed so as to take further legislative action as may hereafter be appropriate.

These programs will be under the supervision of and administered by a Weather Control Commission, an independent agency, assisted by a General Advisory Committee, a Military Liaison Committee, and an Interdepartmental Advisory Board.

The Commission is directed to exercise its powers in such manner as to insure the continued conduct of research and development activities in specified fields of weather modification and control by private or public institutions or persons and to assist in the acquisition of an ever-expanding fund of theoretical and practical knowledge in such field. The Commission may also conduct its own research and experimentation.

I have one additional matter which I wish to discuss briefly, more to bring up the problem than to attempt an adequate solution. The bill I have introduced provides for Government assumption of the liability of its contractors growing out of performance of their contracts. I believe this method to be preferable to that of providing merely for indemnification of Government contractors. Indemnification alone will not give private contractors the protection which I believe is essential if this important work is to go forward in the most effective manner. Any indemnification provision by its very nature will always be unsatisfactory in the following respects:

1. Such a provision always subjects the contractor to the responsibilities inherent in having the initial liability.

2. Such a provision requires the contractor to assume or at least participate in the defense of any action brought against him.

3. Such a provision always subjects the contractor to the possibility of an attachment or execution against his property which even though temporary might very seriously affect his operations.

4. Such a provision does not give the contractor a complete guarantee against liability because of the limitations inherent in congressional appropriations or in Government certification.

5. Such a provision subjects the Government to liability with respect to judgments rendered by courts other than Federal courts.

I suppose it may be charged that in this provision the Government is buying a pig in a poke. It is true that in the field of weather control there is what has been described as an odd legal vacuum. But in due course the fields of alleged responsibility and ownership will be charted by the courts and at least in the initial stages the Government must assume responsibility because of the grave public interest involved. I am frank to say that at this time questions of legal liability arising out of operations in the field of weather control defy solution. Competent authorities have written learned articles seeking analogies from water law, the law of the airspace (that is, air navigation), the migration of wildlife, and the radio's ether. In my judgment one can only speculate as to who is liable for what in this field. I need only point out that the conflicting interests, for example, in inducing or preventing precipitation, may be summed up by saying that what may be a boon to the farmer or ranchman may be a washout to the operator of the baseball club or the county fair, to use only one field in which precipitation may be damaging if not disastrous; or as one writer has put it "who owns the clouds?". I invite a careful reading of the findings and declaration in section 2 of the bill which I believe will serve to emphasize the gravity of the problem.

There follows a brief section-by-section analysis of the bill:

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS

Section 1 provides a short title, the Weather Control Act of 1951.

Section 2 embodies the declaration of policy, consisting of a statement of findings and a declaration, and a brief outline of the purpose of the act.

Section 3 provides for the organization of a Weather Control Commission to administer the act, and provides for a general civilian advisory committee, a military liaison committee, and an interdepartmental advisory board, to advise the Commission in the several phases of its operations.

Section 4 provides for assistance to private or public institutions or persons in the fields of weather modification and control, and also authorizes the Commission to engage in activities in such field.

Section 5 provides for military applications of weather modification and control and includes authority in the Commission to conduct experiments and do research and development work in this field and also authorizes the President to direct the Commission to authorize the Armed Forces to engage in activities for weather modification and control as a military operation.

Section 6 provides for the issuance of licenses to engage in activities for weather modification and control. In general no person may engage in such activities without a license issued by the Commission. In connection with the issuance of licenses the Commission may provide for the regulation of rates, fees, and charges for carrying out weather modification and control projects on a commercial basis. The Commission is also authorized to provide by regulation for exempting from the licensing requirements laboratory research and experiments and activities of an emergent character for protection against frost, ice, or fog. A typical example of the latter would be the well-known smudge pots to protect fruit trees against frost.

Section 7 recognizes the serious international implications of weather modification and control and in general provides for the subordination of domestic measures to international arrangements.

Section 8 outlines the general authority of the Commission, including the authority to establish advisory boards and the regulatory authority, and outlines the administrative powers of the Commission.

Section 9 deals with enforcement, and provides criminal penalties for violations, authorizes the use of the injunctive power, and provides machinery for requiring obedience to subpenas of the Commission.

Section 10 provides for Government assumption of liability that might otherwise be imposed on Government contractors as a result of their activities.

Section 11 requires the Commission to report to Congress twice each year, in January and July.

Section 12 contains definitions.

Section 13 authorizes appropriations to carry out the act.

Section 14 is the usual separability clause.

I have touched only briefly upon the scientific aspects of the developments in this field. To supplement my statement I ask unanimous consent to insert at the end of my remarks statements by experts on the subject, to which I have previously referred, one by E. J. Workman, of the New Mexico School of Mines, and the other by Vincent J. Schaefer, of the General Electric Research Laboratory, Schenectady, N. Y.

Notes on Artificial Inducement of Precipitation

(By Dr. E. J. Workman, New Mexico School of Mines, representing Water Resources Development Commission of the State of New Mexico, in presenting the following report to the President's Water Resources Policy Commission)

The question of water, whether it applies to atmcspheric water or to ground water, is one of extreme importance. A large portion of our population has shifted to the arid States of the West. This and the increase in irrigation in all States has placed a new demand upon our water supply. Industrial processes which, as our economy develops, require more and more water, have added to the problem of supply and to the problem of pollution as well.

If we expect to maintain our present trend in standard of living and recreational facilities, additional water development must be made, and further conservation of existing water must be effected. The domestic consumption of water has increased enormously in the last two or three decades. Our demands are greater, quite independent of population increases or population shifts. Our per capita water requirements are larger—we use electric dishwashers and electric washing machines. Nearly all the domestic facilities of the home have increased the consumption of available water.

It is worth while, then, to examine today's methods of inducing artificially the precipitation of water from clouds.

One gains the impression from the public press that a very great amount of research is being done on methods of influencing rainfall by providing nuclei and ice crystals by various methods. Actually, while many people are engaged in activities dedicated to influencing precipitation, very few are engaged in basic research bearing on this important but not completely understood phenomena.

The era of scientific weather control began some four years ago when Dr. Vincent J. Schaefer of General Electric Co. made his now famous announcements concerning dry ice in a refrigerated box and supercooled clouds. The group studying the probem at General Electric is now large and the very extensive contributions of Dr. Irving Langmuir, Dr. Vincent Schaefer, Dr. Bernard Vonnegut, and others is well known. For a number of years New Mexico School of Mines has employed a group of men for research in artificial precipitation and related subjects and recently we have worked in close coordination with the General Electric scientists.

There is particularly good agreement among the scientists of the world as to the general physical processes of precipitation. While much is yet to be learned, it is agreed that the formation of ice in clouds is necessary to precipitation in temperate latitudes and no doubt is necessary also for heavy precipitation in tropical areas. In New Mexico we have studied thunderstorms and the mechanisms of thunderstorm precipitation for several years and we concur with the view that the formation of ice is essential to precipitation. We know that ice forms in clouds at a temperature somewhat colder than the freezing point and that for optimum precipitation results ice should be produced in a thunderstorm at an altitude having a temperature of −15° to −30° C—preferably on the warmer side.

The process of sublimation which produces small ice crystals in clouds has been described by Schaefer and others. It is known that foreign material must be present in the atmosphere to serve as seeds on which small ice crystals may begin to form. These microscopic airborne particles are known as sublimation nuclei. In order to produce a snowstorm 1 foot in depth over an area of perhaps 1,000 square miles, something like 10^{16} sublimation nuclei must be present. It is not known precisely how many nuclei are needed for the production of the maximum amount of rain from thunderstorm, but it is safe to say that the number is somewhere between 10,000 and 100,000 per cubic meter.

The vital problem here is: How many of such sublimation nuclei occur naturally in the air? Meteorologists, in general, seem to have the impression that the atmosphere always contains an adequate number of these nuclei. Those of us who have made daily measurements of effective natural nuclei hold a different view.

Daily counts of nuclei have been made at Mount Washington in New Hampshire by the General Electric group under the direction of Dr. Schaefer, and in Socorro, New Mexico, by the School of Mines group. These observations of available nuclei are characterized first of all by the fact that the number of nuclei found varies greatly from day to day.

One million nuclei per cubic meter may occur, I believe, as much as 8 percent of the time in the winter on Mount Washington. Ten million nuclei per cubic meter have been found at Mount Washington once or twice in more than 8,000 readings. Usually, however, the number is quite small, varying from less than 10 to around 10,000 per cubic meter at −15° C. These figures represent maximum numbers, since they were obtained in the wintertime when minute ice crystals of surface origin might be involved in the counts at the Mount Washington station.

In the Southwest, at Socorro, the nuclei counts are not so optimistic. We find very few nuclei at any time which are effective at the relatively warm temperature of −15° C. We have noted, as have General Electric investigators, that the number of effective nuclei increases greatly as the temperature decreases. Generally, but not always, an adequate number of nuclei is found at temperatures as low as −21 or −22° C. This temperature corresponds to an elevation in the atmosphere of approximately 28,000 feet. It is interesting to note that this is the temperature at which we find evidence of precipitation in summer storms in New Mexico.

Bearing in mind the fact that precipitation does not result from clouds until ice has formed, information on the relative number of clouds which attain glaciation height is of interest. Careful studies made in New Mexico during the last summer indicate that approximately 90 percent of the clouds which otherwise might develop into thunderstorms do not reach this height. Many of the lower clouds among this 9 percent could be helped in the precipitation process by the artificial addition of ice-forming nuclei. We have photographed clouds which attain heights of 35,000 feet or more before glaciation occurs. These latter are the "pumping cirrus" clouds which Langmuir has described, and they demonstrate the complete lack of effective nuclei. This interesting meteorological phenomenon results when the cloud height is so great that the temperature is below the critical temperature for ice formation; namely, about −40° C. At this temperature all cloud particles turn to ice.

What can be done to provide the additional rainfall so greatly needed in many parts of the United States? By the use of aircraft or suitable ground generators to add sublimation nuclei to the atmosphere, it is possible to increase the amount of rainfall. It is safe to say, in fact, that the application of scientific effort to this problem can enhance the rainfall by 25 to 75 percent. What should be added to the atmosphere, how much, and when, are serious and difficult questions.

Dr. Langmuir has suggested, and others among us are in agreement, that perhaps an increase in rainfall or snow precipitation in a particular locality may be significant in modifying the circulation pattern of the atmosphere. This possibility arises out of the fact that precipitation produces a heating effect in the atmosphere where it occurs. This heating, like the effects of sunshine, may introduce perturbations of sufficient magnitude to cause a great deal of what we call "weather."

These man-made changes in the climate, if demonstrated applicable to the problem, make the question of artificial precipitation one of national and possibly even international importance. This question should have vigorous application of research effort at this time.

With reference to this problem, winter snowfall presents certain favorable aspects in the western mountain areas. I believe that there is a general agreement among researchers in this field that snowfall can be modified quite easily by the addition of precipitation nuclei. From the standpoint of general safety and public interest, research in the artificial precipitation of snow may be very worth while.

In conclusion I would like to point out that the question of whether or not precipitation can be increased artificially is only one aspect of this new field of investigation.

For example, I feel almost certain that it is possible to moderate what otherwise would be a violent storm, whether the violence results from wind, excessive rainfall, hail, lightning, or combinations of these features.

I will be very happy to point out in detail how the question of artificial seeding of clouds relates to these important problems. I think it is unfortunate that so much controversy has grown up around this field of scientific investigation. Probably our greatest loss is in the fact that important subdivisions of our national Government thus far have not attached much importance to these questions.

Artificial precipitation is already very much in the public interest and I am certain that the time is near when it will be necessary to arrange control measures and provide special legislation. For this reason alone I think that the entire question should become the subject of intensive study by proper Federal agencies.

Factors Related to Experimental Meteorology

(By Vincent J. Schaefer, General Electric Research Laboratory, Schenectady, N. Y.)

Within the past 3 years, the following facts have been established by experimental operations.

1. The concentration of ice nuclei in the natural atmosphere upon which most precipitation depends has been found to vary by a factor of at least a millionfold.

2. It has been established experimentally that small amounts of silver iodide or dry ice may be used as nuclei or to generate nuclei to equal or exceed the concentration of natural ice nuclei. In addition to this control of concentration by artificial means, the two substances mentioned are effective at temperatures considerably warmer than those produced by natural causes.

3. As the result of many hundreds of experiments with natural supercooled clouds in the free atmosphere, on mountains, and as ground fogs, it is an established fact that all such supercooled clouds may be artificially modified, the speed of modification depending on concentration of nuclei, air temperature, and the method of distribution of the seeding agent.

4. Under special conditions of supersaturation, snow areas may be produced in air which previously was free of visible clouds.

5. Solid overcasts of supercooled clouds have been (a) made more persistent by overseeding and (b) have been dissipated by the introduction of optimum concentrations of ice nuclei.

6. Intense local rainstorms have been initiated by proper seeding techniques and strong evidence obtained that the precipitation resulting was directly related to the seeding operation.

7. Widespread modification of the weather pattern over much of the United States may have resulted from a systematic silver-iodide seeding operation conducted during the past year in New Mexico.

8. Studies of many types of violent storms such as produce lightning, hail, torrential rain, high winds, and similar destructive phenomena show that practically all of them during their formative periods contain large amounts of supercooled cloud masses. There is considerable evidence that much of the storm's intensity depends on the degree of unstability which develops as supercooling and that the violence of the storm is due to the sudden development of ice crystals in the unstable cloud due to a chain reaction mechanism.

It is not uncommon, particularly in the western part of the United States, for large cumulus cloud masses to be so deficient in ice nuclei that they reach altitudes so high that ice crystals form spontaneously (Ca 34,000' M. S. L., −39° C.). When this occurs the crystals are rarely larger than the original cloud droplets and thus do not fall back into the lower portion of the cloud to cause a seeding effect. As a result large masses of condensed water are carried to such high altitude that it is unlikely to become available as precipitation. It is probable that such loss of effective precipitation can be prevented by proper seeding techniques.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

As in executive session,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the Committee on Armed Services.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

AMENDMENT OF RAILWAY LABOR ACT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3295) to amend the Railway Labor Act and to authorize agreements providing for union membership and agreements for deductions from the wages of carriers' employees for certain purposes and under certain conditions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Florida [Mr. HOLLAND] is entitled to the floor if he desires it.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield before he begins his speech?

Mr. HOLLAND. I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, on page 16261 of the RECORD, at the head of the last column, my remarks read as follows:

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I should first like to read the names which appear on the letter. They are:

"Jonas A. McBride, vice president, national legislative representative, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen; W. D. Johnson, vice president, national legislative representative, Order of Railway Conductors; Harry See, national legislative representative, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen."

That means, Mr. President, that all the railroad organizations are now supporting and urging the passage of the bill and the amendment. The amendment carries out the intent of the committee amendment. The amendment before us simply spells out the purposes in greater detail. The only ones who are not urging the passage of the bill are the members of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers. They are not opposing it. The chief of the brotherhood feels that in view of past action he is not now in a position to endorse the bill. However, he is not opposed to its passage.

I should like to correct that statement. I have before me a letter from Mr. John

T. Corbett, assistant grand chief engineer of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, addressed to me under date of today, and reading as follows:

BROTHERHOOD OF LOCOMOTIVE ENGINEERS,
Washington, D. C., December 8, 1950.

HON. LISTER HILL,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: At page 16261 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of December 7, 1950, you are quoted as stating "that means, Mr. President, that all of the railroad organizations are now supporting and urging the passage of the bill and the amendments."

It appears proper to inform you that the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers has been and continues to be opposed to the original bills, S. 3295 and H. R. 7789, and all of the amendments which have been proposed. Under these conditions it is requested that you correct your statement of December 7, 1950.

Very truly yours,

JOHN T. CORBETT,
A. G. C. E.-N. L. R.

I am very happy to make that correction.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, and Members of the Senate, for the benefit of Senators who have just come into the Chamber, I want to say that the Senator from Alabama has just placed in the RECORD a letter which he received this morning from Mr. John T. Corbett, the assistant grand chief engineer and the national legislative representative of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, asking the Senator from Alabama to correct an impression which might have been given from something he stated yesterday that could have indicated that the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers was not opposing this particular legislation. To the contrary, that letter shows that the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers is unyieldingly opposed to this legislation. To make that point completely clear, with the consent of the Senator from Alabama I should like to read into the record at this time the copy of another letter sent to the Senator from Alabama this morning by Mr. Corbett which goes in more detail into the reasons why the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers feels that the passage of the pending bill would be nothing more nor less than its death knell. The letter is dated December 8, addressed to "Honorable LISTER HILL, United State Senator," is signed by Mr. John T. Corbett, who, as I just stated, is assistant grand chief engineer and national legislative representative of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, and reads as follows:

DEAR SENATOR: At page 16268 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of December 7, 1950, in answer to an inquiry made by Senator WILEY, of Wisconsin, you endeavor to justify the provisions of bill S. 3295 and the amendments which had previously been accepted by explaining that the individual employee in dual service as fireman and engineer would not be required to join but one labor organization.

It appears proper to inform you that there is no similar condition in any industry affecting the employees of the industry which has ever been given consideration that presents a greater injustice to the senior group of workers than your attempts.

You must understand that what you are explaining is that the apprentice is provided a guarantee or assurance that he shall never be required to secure membership in the senior organization which his apprenticeship prompts him to endeavor to secure promotion to.

This is an injustice to the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers which could never be overcome.

Signed by Mr. John T. Corbett.

Mr. President and Members of the Senate, I have just come from a conference with Mr. Corbett, and if I ever met a gentleman who commands respect and who at the same time shows a completely unyielding determination on the part of the organization which he represents to adhere to a policy adopted in their conventions, and supported by their officials and their members, such a man is Mr. Corbett, who restated and adhered to that policy in the course of that conference. He explained to me that the firemen are entitled to membership in their union immediately upon their employment or shortly thereafter, but that they are not entitled to admission into the engineers' union until they acquire that higher status; that the effect of this particular provision would be to make it impossible for the engineers to have any real inducement to hold out to firemen or to gain from the firemen's membership the additions to their own membership which have come normally and in orderly fashion during the years of their respective organizations, but would, instead, mean that in advance the junior organization is notified that membership in its organization takes the place of, substitutes for, and is completely acceptable under the law in place of membership in the engineers' organization. He asked me to say to the Senate that his organization, by official national action, is unyieldingly opposed to this proposed legislation, and that they feel that it will mean that the death knell of their organization is being sounded when this particular legislation is placed in effect.

I also talked with another gentleman, whose name I am not free to give, who feels that the same situation applies with reference to the conductors, and he is completely at a loss to understand why any official of the conductors' brotherhood would have been willing to sign the letter and the statement which was placed in the RECORD yesterday afternoon. I do not make that statement as of my own knowledge, because I am not sufficiently familiar with the overlapping setup between the conductors' brotherhood and the more junior organizations from which they draw their membership. But it was the statement of this other gentleman, whom unfortunately I am not free to name, but who I think understands the situation, that the conductors would be in exactly the same difficulty as the engineers under the proposed legislation.

I call that to the attention of Senators who may be much more familiar with the situation than am I, simply as something that has come to me this morning which I feel should be passed on to the Senate, at least for investigation.

I also call the attention of the Senate at this time to the fact that after the Senate had laid aside this proposed legislation, after we had every right to believe it would not come up, after the crucial situation in our own domestic and the world affairs would appear to have guaranteed that, before controversial measures would be taken up, we would at least have the chance to pass upon some of the weighty national and international problems which confront us, this measure was called up unexpectedly. As the result of that, several Senators who, I understand, are unalterably opposed to this measure, are away, including the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. HOEY], whom I mentioned yesterday. I understand the same statement applies to the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND], though I have not heard directly from him on that score, and to other Senators.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLLAND. I yield.

Mr. HILL. I do not quite understand why the Senator should say this measure was called up unexpectedly. It was on a motion of the Senator from Florida that consideration of this measure was postponed until November 27, which was the first day of the convening of the present short session. Then this measure was made either the pending business or was temporarily set aside from time to time, until finally we took up the rent-control joint resolution, and even at that time the distinguished senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS], the majority leader, asked consent that this bill be temporarily laid aside in order that we might proceed to consideration of the rent-control joint resolution. That would have meant, of course, that, as soon as the rent-control measure was completed, this bill would automatically come before the Senate as the unfinished business.

It happened that that request by the Senator from Illinois was objected to, and under the circumstances the Senator from Illinois felt compelled to make a motion to take up the rent-control measure, because it was a war measure. That motion, of course, prevailed. But there was never any intention or thought other than that the Senate would proceed to consider the railway labor bill just as soon as possible following the passage of the rent-control measure, on the motion of the Senator from Florida himself to make this bill the unfinished business on November 27.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, I shall not, of course, attempt to deny anything that has been said by the Senator from Alabama except to call attention to the fact that the majority leader himself several days ago spoke of the fact that a FEPC amendment had been proposed and that it had been stated such would be offered to this railway bill, and I understand it would still be offered if the Senator who favors offering it were present. He cannot be here until Monday. I heard, and I think I heard clearly, the majority leader state that it was useless to take up either the statehood bill or the Railway Labor Act, because the FEPC question had been injected as to both of them and, therefore, he was going to proceed to other measures.

I simply call the Senate's attention to the fact that that statement was undoubtedly made on the floor of the Senate, and the reason I recall it so well is because the Senator from Illinois, the majority leader, limited his statement to FEPC and its disturbing effect on those two measures, that is, the statehood measure and the Railway Labor Act.

The Senator from Florida, recalling that he had had something to say in the same field of civil-rights legislation at the time he placed in the RECORD the outstanding remarks made by Mr. James A. Farley in addressing the State Chamber of Commerce of Florida at Tampa, and recalling that those remarks included a very strong statement of the convictions of Mr. Farley that it was all wrong to bring up civil-rights legislation; that the problems were being solved peacefully and quickly in the South at present; and he even requested the President and the leadership to adopt a different policy, that is, of calling in the governors of the States which were affected to see if some State or regional plan could not be launched to hurry up the efforts for a peaceful solution which were already under way. So I brought that matter into the RECORD at that time.

I remember perfectly well, and I state it here as a matter of fact, that the majority leader did state at that time that it was perfectly apparent that the injection of the FEPC question had made it impossible to go ahead with the statehood bill and also with the amendments to the Railway Labor Act. That being the case, I think it was completely justifiable for those of us who had their doubts about this particular measure to feel that it had been laid aside for the duration of this particular short session.

However, be that as it may, the reason why I have mentioned that situation is that I wish to call attention to the fact that we have this measure dumped into our laps at a time when critical national and international questions are pending, and when some of the measures incident thereto should be ready—as I believe some of them are—for consideration by the Senate. If I understood correctly the statement made yesterday by the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, it was that his committee had completed action the day before on the measure authorizing aid to Yugoslavia because of the long drought there. Certainly we could be considering that measure at this time. However, on the contrary, we have been asked—unexpectedly, I repeat—to take up this measure proposing amendments to the Railway Labor Act.

Then, to make bad matters worse—and I address this statement particularly to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL], and I appeal to his good, sound judgment—the Members of the Senate had no notice, until this debate started, of the fact that there was to be voted into the bill an amendment of a type which would make membership in one union among the operating brotherhoods sufficient. Incidentally, that point is the one which is behind the strong complaint coming now from the official representatives of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, to the effect that this measure, as amended yesterday—not in its original form, but as it was amended yesterday, and solely because of that amendment—would, in effect, put their organization out of existence.

Mr. President, to my mind it is all wrong to bring forward this measure at this time, and particularly with amendments which completely change its application in important fields, amendments which, as stated here over the signature of Mr. Corbett, the high official of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, who is speaking for his organization, will in effect destroy that organization.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLLAND. I yield.

Mr. HILL. I wish to repeat what I said yesterday, namely, there is no difference between the intent of the amendment reported by the committee and the intent of the amendment which the distinguished senior Senator from Ohio and I offered on yesterday, and which the Senate adopted.

So far as Mr. Corbett is concerned, he appeared at the hearings and opposed the bill at that time. He did so most vigorously. Of course he was entirely within his rights in doing that; but in view of that fact, there is nothing at all surprising about the letter Mr. Corbett has just written. If the Senator from Florida will examine the hearings and the testimony of Mr. Corbett before the subcommittee, the Senator will find that Mr. Corbett opposed the bill at that time, before the amendment adopted on yesterday was ever thought of. Mr. Corbett always has been in opposition to the bill; that is all.

Mr. HOLLAND. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, I repeat my statement that no Member of the Senate who was not familiar with the conferences which were going on and was not a part of those conferences, knew about the amendment which on yesterday was voted into the bill. Furthermore, that amendment is apparently the reason for the strong and unyielding position taken by the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers this morning.

Let me say to the distinguished Senator from Alabama that insofar as Members of the Senate who are not on the committee are concerned, we had no information at all distinguishing the position of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers from the position of the other railroad brotherhoods until yesterday and until the putting into the RECORD of that letter, because Senators will recall that, when this matter was coming up in September, we received official communications of various types from the several brotherhoods, advising us that the brotherhoods as a group at that time were opposed to the bill in the form in which it was then drawn. Of course, as the Senator from Alabama himself said yesterday in offering the amendment, the amendment was responsible for the change in position of the operating brotherhoods the names of whose representatives were signed to the letter the Senator placed in the RECORD yesterday.

So I repeat my statement that yesterday we were confronted with an amendment which none of us had had a chance to see, an amendment of far-reaching import, an amendment which changed the situation with reference to the operating brotherhoods, so that apparently all of them but the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers have been willing to give their last-minute consent—whether wisely or otherwise, I do not know, and we had no possible advance notice upon that subject until the matter exploded in our faces yesterday.

Mr. President, I think it is highly unwise for the Senate to pass a far-reaching measure of this type at this time, in view of the present critical condition of the Nation, and when even now leading Members of the Senate are tied up in such important committees as the Foreign Relations Committee and the Armed Services Committee, which are in session, and the Finance Committee, which I believe to be even now in session, for it was in session just before the session of the Senate began today, and also the Judiciary Committee. This morning I tried to contact certain members of that committee, but I found that they were at the session of the committee, considering the confirmation of a nomination which has to do directly with the defense effort. So I say that under these circumstances it is impossible for us to keep informed about such an important measure as this one, highly controversial and rapidly changing in nature, which was taken up unexpectedly yesterday, at least unexpectedly as to many Senators.

I say to the Senator that the motion made in September, leading up to the discussion on November 27, in respect to this measure, was made in completely different circumstances and before the Nation was in the situation it is in now. If the Senator will examine the RECORD, he will find that I had not a word of objection at the opening of this short session to the consideration of the measure then, because the situation had not even that late become so critical as it now is.

However, I am commenting quite in the open in criticism of the leadership, and of what seems to me most unwise leadership, for bringing up this measure at this time, at a time when the Senate cannot possibly advise itself as to what is going on, and particularly when we find proposed amendments which though brought in at the last minute, would bring about a sweeping change in the nature of the measure, and that change has produced the sterling letter—the one to which I referred a moment ago—which just this morning has come from Mr. Corbett to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL].

As I have said, the same point made by Mr. Corbett may apply to the railroad conductors also; and they, too, may be seriously jeopardized and perhaps wiped out by this measure, with the amendments which have been incorporated in it.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLLAND. I yield.

Mr. McCLELLAN. In view of the matters referred to by the Senator from Florida and in view of the fact that the bill as now constituted does not recognize State constitutions or State statutes relating to the same subject, would it not be the better part of wisdom for the Senate to recommit the bill to the committee for further study at a time when the controversies and confusions as to who supports the bill and who does not support it can be looked into further, thus giving the masses of workers in those organizations some opportunity to know what effect the proposed legislation will have, before we enact it into law?

Mr. HOLLAND. I think the Senator has a good point. The conflicts of thinking arising from the amendments placed in the bill just yesterday, and communicated to the public just yesterday, bear out particularly the wisdom of the course of recommittal suggested by the distinguished Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLLAND. I yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I am not very familiar with the provisions of the pending bill, but I am under the impression that the bill, unless it is very materially amended, would put a great handicap upon any State control whatever.

Has the Senator from Florida studied that phase of the bill, and can he give us some information as to what the bill, unless it is further amended, would do to our State regulatory bodies, especially those regulating public utilities?

In Virginia we have a law to the effect that the State can prevent a strike in a utility if such a strike would result in the destruction or disruption of essential services, and then the State can temporarily take charge of the utility and can work out some plan. I do not know the effect this measure, if enacted, would have upon State control, but I have been told that the bill does not carry the provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act in that respect.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, I appreciate the question the Senator from Virginia has asked. I shall endeavor to give an answer which will be as brief as possible, although it will take a little time to answer the question.

In the first place, the Senator from Virginia is completely correct in his understanding of the fact that, notwithstanding that general statements to the contrary have been made, this bill does not include the full provision of the Taft-Hartley Act referring to the union shop. This bill leaves out, purposely, the provision of the Taft-Hartley Act which protects, preserves, and recognizes the provisions of State laws in some 18 or 20 States—some by constitutional provision, some by statutory provision, some by both—which set up a requirement that there may never be imposed within those States and within their jurisdiction a condition for employment of one of their worthy citizens based upon either membership or nonmembership in a union.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. HOLLAND. If I may complete this part of my statement, I shall then be glad to yield.

The Senator from Virginia will recall that not only was that provision included by the Senate, as a result of a substantial vote in the passage of the Taft-Hartley bill, and made a condition to its passage, but that in all the debates for repeal and for amendment of the Taft-Hartley Act the same position was taken. I am able to say to the Senator authoritatively that the last time this question was debated by the Senate—this same body—last year, the Senate voted 53 to 41 to insist upon retention of that provision; 94 Members of the Senate being present, and the only other Member of the then Senate, because we had only 95 Members at the time—who was unfortunately and unavoidably absent, the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] indicated his stand as being with the 53. In other words, the position of the Senate at that time was really 54 to 41 for continuance of the requirement that there must be recognition given to the State laws, whether constitutional or statutory.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. HOLLAND. I yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. ROBERTSON. The Senator knows that primarily in our thinking and in our hearts there is concern over the war situation. This morning, at the request of the chairman of the Armed Services Committee, I asked and obtained permission for his committee to be in session this afternoon while the Senate is in session. The President has very properly urged us to increase taxation. I made several speeches last fall saying we ought to have $10,000,000,000 of new taxation, because we were going to have to spend far in excess of that amount. We have pending a tax bill which the House said would raise $3,400,000,000, but we have not completed action on it. The Armed Services Committee is in session, and its members are not here. The Appropriations Committee is asked to report about $18,000,000,000 of new items. We have a minimum attendance on the Senate floor, and there will not be many more Senators here for the remainder of this debate.

Does the distinguished Senator from Florida, considering its importance, see some way by which we may postpone the vote upon the pending measure until the membership can become better informed upon the real issues confronting us?

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, the Senator knows, of course, that any Senator may move to recommit the bill or to postpone action until a fixed date. No such motion has been made up to this time.

To complete my answer to the Senator's question, I desire to call his attention to something which was brought out clearly yesterday afternoon, time after time, namely, that the passage of this bill in its present form would be nothing but an open invitation to, and I may say almost an assurance of, the early amendment of the Taft-Hartley Act so as to exclude the present provision recognizing and protecting the States who have voted constitutionally or by statute banning the closed shop or union shop.

Mr. McCLELLAN rose.

Mr. HOLLAND. To make that point completely clear, before yielding to the Senator from Arkansas, I desire to remind Senators that while the measure which is now pending affects two branches of labor, namely, railway transportation and aviation transportation, the Taft-Hartley Act, containing requirements which recognize and respect State laws, affects other branches of transportation which are directly competitive, such as the motortruck-transportation industry, which has become one of the largest factors in interstate transportation, and such as maritime transportation. My understanding is that all the maritime organizations are under the Taft-Hartley Act. If that understanding is incorrect, it at least came from legal counsel for the Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare this morning in response to a direct inquiry. I observe the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] apparently confirming that statement.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, I think that is correct, and, if the Senator will yield, is it not an argument for giving railway labor the same sort of law which the Taft-Hartley Act extends to the other branches of labor? It seems to me that when we analyze the labor of the entire country, and realize that competing organizations have rights to the union shop, that it is, though perhaps not wrong, at least a little bit unfair to decide that the railway labor shall not enjoy the privilege—because it is a privilege from the standpoint of organization—which nearly all other labor enjoys?

Mr. HOLLAND. I appreciate the remarks of the distinguished Senator from Utah, and I would give them much greater force if the pending measure extended to the railway workers and the aviation workers exactly the same kind of provisions as those which are contained in the Taft-Hartley Act. But the Senator well knows that the Taft-Hartley Act includes a provision which protects, respects, and preserves the rights of the States which have acted in this field, whereas the pending legislation definitely declines to do that and deliberately proposes to set up a new sort of union shop under which the State laws will not be respected.

I further call to the attention of the distinguished Senator the fact that in another very vital particular he is not proposing to put workers in the railway industry and the aviation industry on a parity with the workers in other transportation industries covered by the Taft-Hartley Act, in that, under this proposed amendment, he would still retain in the Railway Labor Act freedom from use of the injunction to protect the public in the event of threatened collapse of these two transportation systems, whereas, as to all vital national industries covered by the Taft-Hartley Act—including, of course, the maritime industry, in which the injunction has already been used, as I recall, three times—there is provision that the injunction can be used to protect the public interest throughout the Nation.

If the Senator from Utah wishes to do what he is really suggesting by his question, then he should propose a measure which would attempt to put and which would offer to put the railway industry and aviation industry on a parity, with equal and identical treatment, with workers in other vital industries covered by the Taft-Hartley Act. But the question which the Senator from Utah has now posed is not in my judgment soundly posed, because the measure which we are now debating does not even pretend to place workers in the railroad and aviation industries upon the same basis with workers in other transportation industries which are covered by the Taft-Hartley Act.

Mr. McCLELLAN and Mr. THOMAS of Utah rose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. HOLLAND. Permit me to yield again to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. In this little discussion I think we ought not lose sight of the fact that the pending measure is in the nature of an amendment to another very extensive law which governs and controls the railway industry of the country. I may say that while, of course, no one should ever speculate about a law or about the future decision of a court, I think the very things for which the Senator from Florida is contending are better protected by the amendment as it is now before the Senate than it would be if we were to put the provision of the Taft-Hartley law into this measure. I say that for this reason—and it is not a legal reason; it is a sentimental reason, because, I repeat, no one can predict what the courts are going to do—but the fact remains that in the history of the United States, so far as railway law is concerned and so far as railway ideas are concerned, the one thing above all others as to which there is supremacy of Federal law, as a result of the way in which the courts have acted, is the field of railway labor.

If, for example—and this is merely an example—someone opposed to this bill were also opposed to the railway law, to the Taft-Hartley law, and to the protection which the Taft-Hartley law gives to the various States in the matter of their fundamental laws in regard to labor organizations, and wanted to challenge this provision as being probably unconstitutional, because it interferes with the supremacies already recognized by hundreds and hundreds of decisions, he could readily argue that the court would likely hand down a decision favoring the contention that this provision has no place in the pending measure because it challenges the supremacy of the Federal Government in this great field.

When that was done, the next natural move by any lawyer who is thinking in terms of what is in the best interest of his clients would be to challenge the provisions of the Taft-Hartley law. At the present time those provisions are not challenged. They are not challenged for the simple reason that labor within the United States is exceedingly complex and labor laws in 18 of our States are also exceedingly complex.

Furthermore, we find that where happy industry-labor relations exist in a given State, they like the status quo as it is; but I think, speaking sentimentally, the Senator from Florida could not do a more unwise thing than to inject an invitation for a challenge to what the Congress of the United States is doing in regard to the relations between State law and Federal law. It should be realized that the National Labor Relations Act which brought about a new definition by Congress, and which brought into existence Federal activity in a field which the Federal Government had not heretofore entered, is but a little over 10 years old. There is no doubt plenty of room for further challenge. Any law in the United States which becomes worth while becomes so through practice, through becoming recognized as the customary law, under which we learn how to do things. When we upset such laws, we do violence to the understandings which our people have, which have kept us a very peaceful country compared with certain other countries of the world.

Mr. HOLLAND. I thank the distinguished Senator from Utah, for whom I have always had deep respect. Since he has directed his remarks almost entirely to his statement that railroad labor treatment should be separate and different because Federal jurisdiction over the railroads has been very generally recognized, I should like to recall to him that there are various industries, all covered by the Taft-Hartley Act, which are exclusively within Federal control. For instance, I mention the radio and television industries and the organizations of workingmen in those two great industries. They are entirely covered by the Taft-Hartley law. Control of those industries is almost completely under Federal law.

The point I am making is that in legislation affecting those industries, as well as many other industries which I could mention, the various State laws are respected. It seems to me, as it seems to many other Senators, that there is as much reason, right, and justice in the recognition of the force and effect of State laws as applicable to those engaged in the railroad industry or in the aviation industry, and dwelling within the jurisdiction of the States which have such laws, as there is in the case of the motortruck-transportation industry or the maritime-transportation industry, both of which are covered by the Taft-Hartley law. The same statement can be made as to the radio industry and to the television industry, both of which operate entirely under the Taft-Hartley law. The same can be said of the oil- and gas-pipeline industry, which operates largely under the Taft-Hartley law, or of the telephone and telegraph industries, which of course operate so largely in the field of interstate commerce. All those activities are included within the purview and scope of the Taft-Hartley Act.

The point that I started to make is, I believe, sound—and I have not heard the distinguished Senator from Utah assail it, except upon what he has frankly stated to be sentimental grounds—namely, that the railway and aviation industry covered by this law should not be under such a setup as would compel respect of State laws, whereas two directly competing industries, the maritime industry, which includes internal as well as external shipping by water, and the motortruck transportation industry are included under the Taft-Hartley law, and must respect the State laws. I have not heard either of the industries complaining about that fact or of having been adversely affected because of it.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. HOLLAND. I have promised to yield to my friend from Arkansas.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I merely wish to say that the answer of the distinguished Senator from Florida to the able Senator from Utah further emphasizes the view which I expressed a few moments ago, namely, that no emergency exists which compels action on the pending bill at this time. Certainly there is much confusion about it. Also involved is the issue of whether or not we are to begin tearing down the Taft-Hartley law with relation to respecting State constitutions and State laws in this field, and thereby extending to this particular class of labor a privilege which is denied to other labor engaged in comparable and in some cases the same character of interstate commerce.

Mr. HOLLAND. I think the Senator's observation is completely sound and eminently correct.

Mr. President, there was another matter which came up this morning. It was brought to the attention of my office by people who are directly concerned with the question. I have addressed a question under it to the distinguished Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], my distinguished senior colleague [Mr. PEPPER], and the distinguished senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL]. I believe that, like myself, they are unable to give a categorical answer to the problem which I shall mention. It is a problem which is already causing concern among some railway labor people. The matter is new to me. I had no prior knowledge of it. It seems that there is a CIO union which is called, I believe, the Transport Workers Union, which covers all levels of railway transportation employees, from maintenance-of-way men up to and including the engineers and conductors, or whoever would be termed as being in the most senior groups of employment. The information coming to me is that there is a considerable number—I am sorry I cannot give the exact number—of employees of railroads who happen to be engineers, or conductors, or firemen, or others in the same fields as are covered by the operating brotherhoods, as well as in fields covered by the nonoperating brotherhoods, who hold membership in this particular CIO union. I am sorry I cannot speak more specifically as to the number of employees involved or as to the distribution of the membership of this union. However, it is a question which came to my attention only a few minutes before debate started this afternoon. I am reporting the information to the Senate because it is worthy of very full and careful consideration.

The question is: Does the amendment adopted yesterday protect from the provisions of the pending bill members of that CIO union who are in the same classifications of employment which are covered by the operating brotherhoods, that is, engineers, conductors, firemen, trainmen, and the like? If enacted into law this bill, with the amendment, would, apparently, force such members of this CIO union into craft unions, or at least into one such union. I am certain that no one supporting the amendment had any such intention in mind.

All I can say is that, in asking the question this morning, I have not been able to receive any authoritative answer. Therefore I bring the question to the floor of the Senate for consideration. It is a fact that such a transportation union does exist, and that it is a CIO union, which covers all levels of employment among railroad employees. It is likewise a fact that most of the nonoperating unions in the railway setup are affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, and that the brotherhoods in the operating levels of employment are independent and not affiliated with either. Therefore the question is whether or not the CIO union, which is not a craft union at all, is protected, and whether or not its members in the fields covered by the operating brotherhoods are protected by the amendment which was adopted yesterday, and which, apparently, is confined in its effect to craft union membership.

I would greatly appreciate an answer to the question, and at this time I ask that the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], my distinguished senior colleague [Mr. PEPPER], and the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL], who, I believe, has stepped out of the Chamber at the moment, give specific consideration to that question in the addresses which they will make today. I am putting forth the question as one which was brought to my attention rather forcefully by some people who would be affected by the pending legislation. They have grave doubts as to whether members of this CIO union who are in the operating classifications of employment, are protected under the amendment adopted yesterday. They have the further question in their minds as to whether or not the amendment and the bill, if passed, could afford encouragement and incentive to the organization of several CIO unions in the various fields now covered by the nonoperating unions which have affiliated with the American Federation of Labor. It can be seen that we are faced by a very practical question, the answer to which someone ought to think through, but which, so far as my inquiry has gone, has not been thought through by anyone.

I put forth the question with the hope that members of the committee, who certainly are better informed than other Members of the Senate can be informed, may enlighten the Senate in the remaining hours of debate as to what the effect of the proposed law, as amended, would be upon the members of the present existing CIO union in this field, as well as what its effect would be upon inviting further organization of CIO unions in nonoperating crafts, which are now organized on a craft basis but are affiliated with the American Federation of Labor.

Mr. President, last evening I gave notice that about all I would want to do today would be to give a brief résumé of what I had said yesterday. I hoped that Senators would be present who were not here yesterday. I am gratified to see that some such Senators are present. I am pleased to know that they were able to come. I appreciate their coming and joining in the debate. I had hoped that more Senators would be able to come and join in the debate. I am sure they would be here but for the fact that critical matters of international and national importance are pending, with respect to which Senators must attend meetings of committees.

Mr. President, I think it is decidedly unwise to jump into this particular legislation without knowing what it is all about. I want to say that, in my humble judgment, there is not a Senator on the floor today who knows exactly what the proposed legislation, as now amended, means.

Mr. President, in closing I should like to give a brief résumé of my amendment. It simply provides that the same wording which is used and is now a part of the Taft-Hartley law, by which respect, confirmation, and enforcement is given to constitutional and statutory provisions of some 18 or 20 States, which States have seen fit in their sovereign judgment to impose conditions under which it can never be required of a worker within those States that he must be a member of a union or be a nonmember before he is entitled to employment, shall be incorporated into the pending measure before it is enacted into law. The reason for my amendment is not only consistency, not only because, if the State laws are entitled to respect and protection in other fields, they are in this; but particularly because the Taft-Hartley Act applies to industries which are directly competing with those which are covered by the pending bill. The bill covers railways and aviation, and only those. The Taft-Hartley law covers maritime or water transportation and motortruck transportation. There can be no successful denial of the fact that those industries are in direct competition with the railroads and with aviation. There can be no successful denial of the fact that they are crossing State lines just as often, and with just as large a proportion of their employees, as is true in the case of railroads or aviation.

I repeat what I said yesterday. I think it is true—although I have not the figures to substantiate it—that in the motortruck industry a larger percentage of the employees actually do cross State lines in the performance of their employment than is true in the case of railway employees, or in the case of aviation. Senators know of the enormous force of skilled employees required on the ground at fixed locations to keep the planes flying. Many Senators know of their own knowledge, as I know of my own knowledge, of the very much larger numbers of mechanics, clerical employees, and all sorts of settled employees located at one position in one State, which are found in the aviation industry, as compared with those of lesser number who are employed in the actual operation or servicing in the air of the planes of any particular airline. There is no question that only a small percentage of the employees of aviation are actually crossing State lines from day to day, or as a feature of their employment.

Not only are there competing industries in this field, but I call attention again to the fact that many other industries which are, in the major part of their operations and in their major aspect, interstate, are also covered by the Taft-Hartley Act, under which State laws in this field are respected. I mentioned telephones, telegraph, and others. Many others will occur to Senators. I mentioned also a group of industries which exist and function solely under Federal law, which are covered by the Taft-Hartley Act, which respects the State laws in their application to employees of this latest class of industries, such as radio, television, and interstate oil- and gas-transportation pipelines.

Mr. President, is it wise for us to pass this proposed legislation, freed from the respect given by the Taft-Hartley Act to the State laws, realizing and knowing that to do so will simply be to extend an open invitation, and almost to give assurance that we expect shortly, as quickly as the matter can be considered, to pass upon a similar proposal taking out of the Taft-Hartley Act the respect now given under that act to State law as it affects motor transportation, as it affects maritime transportation, and as it affects television, radio, oil- and gas-transportation lines, telegraph, telephone, and any number of other industries which will occur to Senators?

If Senators want to vote for this bill, that is, of course, their privilege and right. Some eminent Senators will vote for it, because there were some eminent Senators who did not want these provisions respecting the State law in the Taft-Hartley Act. But I do not believe that any Senator, regardless of his attitude on that point, can possibly vote for this measure without realizing that if it passes it almost dooms, by its passage, that part of the Taft-Hartley law respecting State laws which has been so carefully insisted upon at all stages of its enactment, and which respects State constitutions and State laws in 18 or 20 States which have seen fit in their sovereign judgment to impose State laws covering labor and employment conditions in those States and imposing as a condition that a man shall be free to work, to be employed, and continue in employment regardless of whether he is a union member or not. If we vote for this measure, let us do it with eyes wide open, realizing that it is an indirect assault upon those provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act to which I have referred. It cannot be construed in any other way.

It is not remarkable that almost all of the Senators who are fighting so hard for this act, and particularly against the amendment which the Senator from Florida has proposed, to incorporate into the act the same words now in the Taft-Hartley Act, giving respect and recognition to State laws, are the same Senators who so strongly resisted the enactment of the Taft-Hartley law and who never favored the incorporation into the Taft-Hartley law of the provisions which respect and preserve State laws.

They are completely consistent in the reassertion of their point of view in the pending bill, but I am wondering whether it is at all consistent for the considerable majority of the Senate who have taken exactly the opposite position, and who have insisted, every time the question has been raised, upon incorporating in the Taft-Hartley law provisions with respect to sustaining State laws. Is it consistent upon the part of those of us who took such position to support this pending bill, free from the incorporation in it of the provision which I am offering, which would make this bill, in this respect, at least, exactly like the Taft-Hartley law, that is, in the respect that it would give recognition to State laws of the type to which I have just referred?

Mr. President, I am about to conclude my remarks upon this subject. I feel keenly on it, because I think there should be some uniformity in Federal legislation affecting similar fields. I believe that, above all things, the States do have some rights in this matter. They have gone to great lengths to assert those rights. They have set them up in many cases under constitutional enactments. Before those constitutional enactments could go to the people for approval they had to be approved by the legislative bodies of those States, generally by much more than a simple majority of the membership of the two Houses, or, in the case of Nebraska, of the one house of the State legislature. Then the people themselves have adopted the constitutional provisions by their votes, and in our State at least it was by a most substantial vote. In other States, where I have seen the returns, the same result was reached, expressing the verdict of the people in this important, vital matter.

Following the adoption of constitutional provisions, there have been legislative enactments in many States of enabling laws to carry out the provisions of the constitutional amendments. The junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] yesterday, in his colloquy, brought out that in the State of Nebraska enabling acts had to be enacted, and they were enacted by subsequent legislatures succeeding the legislatures which submitted the amendments, and there were three amendments of that kind—amendments known as sections 13, 14, and 15 of the State Constitution of Nebraska.

I am sure that there have been experiences in other States similar to that experienced in our State. Since the enactment of these constitutional provisions, or since the enactment of the rule by statute in those States which have gone into this field by constitutional enactment, there have been repeated efforts to repeal, and those efforts at repeal have failed. In my State, at each session of the legislature since 1944, when the constitutional amendment was approved, proposed constitutional amendments to repeal that constitutional amendment have been offered and rejected.

In the States with which I am most familiar—for instance, in the State of North Carolina—I know of my own knowledge repeal measures have been offered in the legislatures, and I see my distinguished friend, the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SMITH], nodding his head in affirmation of the statement. I do not know how many there have been, or in how many legislatures, but there have been measures offered to repeal the State statutes which provided that, as a condition of employment in any industry in the State, membership or nonmembership in a union might never be used to bar a citizen of the State from gainful employment. I assume that has been the situation in every State where the matter has come up. It has been a dignified question, handled in the most thoroughly democratic fashion. It is not a question for any individual to cavil about, as to whether he approves the enactment in his particular State or not. It is a question for those States where there are constitutional provisions of this kind, which has been decided by the people themselves, and has been placed into the fundamental law of the State which governs all of the citizens in those States.

As to the States where statutory enactments have taken place, almost the same dignity applies, because there have been frequent opportunities since the original enactment to change that declaration of State policy, and such opportunities have brought about battles in the races for the State legislature. Those battles have so terminated that the legislatures subsequent to the enactment of the anti-closed-shop rules and the anti-union-shop rules by statute have not repealed those enactments, but instead have refused to do so.

It comes down solely—as it was last year when we debated it—to the question of what is sound public policy in such a matter. I respectfully invite the attention of the Senate to the fact that on the same question, fully debated last year, in a vote participated in by 94 of the then 95 Members of the United States Senate, the majority was 53 to 41 for the retention in the Taft-Hartley Act of the provisions of that act which respect and recognize and confirm State laws in this field.

I say again that the only other Member of the then Senate who could not be present, the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] made it very clear in the RECORD that he took his stand with the 53. So the entire membership of the Senate then was divided 54 to 41 in favor of the philosophy under which States' rights are recognized in this field. Why should they not be recognized? They should be recognized, because the State laws have to do with the modus vivendi, with the way of living, with the way of seeking and gaining and continuing to hold employment, with the way of enabling citizens in those States to support their families, to sustain themselves and attain their ambitions by hard work. The issue runs to the very essence of democratic existence and opportunity.

These dignified statements of State policy should be recognized, and have been recognized in the past, and I hope with all my heart they will be recognized by the Senate today, in approving my amendment, thus seeing to it that this measure, if it becomes law, shall carry with it that same philosophy in the fields covered by the Railway Labor Act, which exists in all other fields of employment throughout the Nation, and that the States' declarations on this subject shall be respected, confirmed, observed, and enforced.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina in the chair). Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. HOLLAND. I yield.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. I am intensely interested in what the distinguished Senator from Florida has had to say with reference to the position of States who in their wisdom have, through their legislative assemblies, passed certain types of labor legislation. I wish to say to the distinguished Senator from Florida that the State of Kansas, at a time when the present speaker, the junior Senator from Kansas, was Governor of the State, through the wisdom of its legislature, placed upon the statute books a labor law. That law may not have been perfect, but it was tested in the courts to a degree, and the decisions following those testing processes, of course, speak for themselves.

I wish to say to the distinguished Senator from Florida and to the Members of the Senate who are now in the Senate Chamber, that the Senator from Kansas feels that if the proposed legislation were to be enacted without the safeguarding amendment which has been offered by the Senator from Florida respecting the State laws and the State responsibilities as the legislatures of the States saw them at the time they enacted the State laws, I, coming from one of the States which have passed such laws, the State of Kansas, feel that I would be rather remiss in my responsibility and duty if I were not to point out that lack to the people of my State and to the people of some of the other States who are in similar position. If I were not to point out that situation I feel I would not be fully representing the people of my State in their wishes and desires as they are now and as they were when the State laws were passed.

Mr. President, I should like to say further, that, while I am in favor of the measure generally as it is before the Senate, I am bound in due conscience and in all respects as I see it, to support the position of the Senator from Florida respecting the laws of my State, which were placed on the statute books after most careful consideration, and especially in view of the fact that since the time of their enactment there have been in session successive legislatures which have not seen fit to override the laws in question in any material degree.

I feel I must say that the State of Kansas would, I am sure, expect me to protect its right to invoke and to maintain on the statute books the type of legislation it wanted at the time the laws were enacted, especially in view of the fact that it was not inconsistent or incompatible with the exercise of the right possessed by the various labor organizations and individuals in the protection of their privileges.

I thought the Senator from Florida should know that and I want him to know it.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, I appreciate deeply the expression of the Senator from Kansas. He is confronted with exactly the same dilemma which confronts the junior Senator from Florida, and which I am sure confronts many other Senators.

If the Senator will bear with me a moment, I desire to repeat an illustration of the situation which will result if the proposed law is enacted. In Miami, one of the finest communities in our State and in the Nation, there are very large aviation shops and offices, because Miami is one of the great aviation centers of the Nation. I have been told that there are from eight to ten thousand employees in those shops and offices. A large portion of the employees are mechanical employees in the gigantic shops which are located there. If the pending measure should be passed, those employees whose location is just as permanent and just as definite there as that of employees in the building trades and in many other branches of employment would be covered by this Railway Labor Act and would be exempted from the provisions of our State constitution. They would be living under a different law and with different rights and with different privileges in connection with the condition of their employment from thousands of employees in other substantial industries who live with them and around them, living together, as they do there, in the great city of Miami. To me that is a completely confusing and unsatisfactory situation, and I do not believe anyone who really looks at the question and weighs it would want that kind of condition to exist.

I repeat likewise, if I may, another thing which I stated yesterday to the distinguished junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY]. It seems to me that this is equally applicable to the two Senators from Kansas, who I am happy to see here in the Chamber. By the passage of the proposed legislation we would throw away, so far as our States are concerned, which have taken these State positions, three important vital values which now exist, and which I think they have a very great interest in continuing. What are they? The first one is the value so ably stated by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. SCHOEPPEL]. The legislature of his State has, in its wisdom, passed the law he mentioned. The law has been upheld by the State courts of Kansas. Its repeal has been refused by subsequent legislatures. It has become the settled policy and a part of the philosophy, a part of the thinking, a part of the standards of living in his great State. That value is jeopardized and will be destroyed as to many, many people living within his State by the enactment of the proposed legislation, if it be enacted.

Secondly, since the enactment of such legislation—not the particular statute in Kansas, or at least not that to my knowledge, but similar enactments—a similar statute enacted in the State of North Carolina and two similar constitutional measures enacted, one in Nebraska and one in Arizona, have come to the United States Supreme Court, have been argued at great length and fully before that Court, and that Court has in those three cases, by unusually unanimous decisions, 9 to 0 in two of the cases and 8 to 1 in the Arizona case, upheld the validity of those State measures. It has become to the good people of Kansas and to the good people of every State who have trod the same path, now a vested assurance that under Federal law, as interpreted by the highest court of the land, their State laws are valid, they are legal, they are constitutional when judged by Federal constitutional standards. And a court which is not noted for its unanimity or for its sameness of thinking, has in the North Carolina case and in the Nebraska case unanimously said, "Here was a valid enactment which the good people of North Carolina and the good people of Nebraska had the right to invoke upon themselves and the people dwelling within their limits if they choose to do so."

This second value would be destroyed and lost to many residents in each of the States who have taken action in this field, if the proposed legislation should be enacted. Many of the residents of those States would be jeopardized as to their standing in employment, because the Senator knows full well, for he is a practical man, that this is nothing but an entering wedge, it is so designed, and comes from those same sources who do not want any respect given to State law in this field, and have never wanted it given.

Thirdly, by the enactment of this bill the people of Kansas, the people of Florida, and the people of the other States mentioned will lose what they now have, or will be jeopardized in what they now have in all fields except these two—they will lose the assurance that their law will be respected, because we all know that we in the Congress have up to now recognized the validity of these State acts. The Senator from Kansas himself was one of those who so voted. The Senator from Florida was another. We recognized and charted the policy of the Congress of the United States by substantial majorities in 1947 and 1949. We thought that in this important question of public policy the States should be allowed to say for themselves what they wanted in this particular field.

Passage of the proposed legislation would in the first place jeopardize everything that has gone before, because it would carry with it the immediate assurance that we are going to have an urgent request for other amendatory and weakening legislation.

Further, as to two great classes of citizens, employees of railroads and of the aviation industry, those States will lose the assurance that they have had under Federal law that those industries would be open shop. The Federal law has gone further heretofore in this field than have many of the State provisions.

So, Mr. President, not only are we asked to bring those industries out of the open-shop classification, as guaranteed under the Railway Labor Act, both in 1926 and in its reenactment in 1934 and in its text up to this very date, but we are asked to go from the complete open-shop extreme to another extreme which ignores and violates the declaration of Federal policy which has come out of this Congress with substantial majorities in both Houses behind it—they had to be substantial enough to override a Presidential veto in 1947; and we would be rejecting and withdrawing from a position which we have frequently maintained, and which we have stated, and restated and restated again, is a sound philosophy in this particular field. There is no doubt that the sacrifice of great rights by many States and their people is involved in this measure.

If the Senate had the time to leave its consideration of the present international matters and make a detailed study of this matter, and if the Senate had a chance to realize clearly that in this case we are being asked to make an about face in this particular field and to take a completely different position from the one we have taken in respect to all other fields of employment, I do not believe the Senate would even consider doing so.

To the contrary, I believe the Senate would be even more sturdy in taking the action I advocate than the Senate was in its last action in June 1949, when the membership was divided 54 to 41, as I said a moment ago, if it could have an opportunity to realize that the three values I have just recited will be jeopardized and lost to the people of 18 or 20 sovereign States if the Congress should hurriedly, and without the adoption of the necessary protective amendments, pass this measure.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCFARLAND in the chair). Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. HOLLAND. I yield for a question.

Mr. WHERRY. Does the distinguished Senator from Florida recall the colloquy in the Senate which occurred yesterday, relative to the question asked by myself as to whether the measure now proposed, and as amended by the distinguished Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL] and the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], would supersede or override the present provisions of the Nebraska State Constitution, together with the enabling act which was enacted by the Nebraska Legislature in accordance with the statutory requirements?

The distinguished Senator replied that he felt there was no doubt that this measure would override that constitutional provision.

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes; in the case of employees of the railroads and employees in the aviation industry.

Mr. WHERRY. That is correct.

I should like to ask this question of the distinguished Senator: In the amendment which was submitted yesterday by the Senator from Alabama and adopted by the Senate, largely without much explanation, I find the following in subsection (c), as I read it:

(c) The requirement of membership in a labor organization in an agreement made pursuant to subparagraph (a) shall be satisfied, as to both a present or future employee in engine, train, yard, or hostling service, that is, an employee engaged in any of the services or capacities covered in section 3, first (h) of this act—

I take it that is the Railway Labor Act under which we are operating at the present time.

Mr. HOLLAND. That is correct.

Mr. WHERRY. I read further—defining the jurisdictional scope of the first division of the National Railroad Adjustment Board, if said employee shall hold or acquire membership in any one of the labor organizations, national in scope, organized in accordance with this act and admitting to membership employees of a craft or class in any of said services; and no agreement made pursuant to subparagraph (b) shall provide for deductions from his wages for periodic dues, initiation fees, or assessments payable to any labor organization other than that in which he holds membership: Provided, however, That as to an employee in any of said services on a particular carrier at the effective date of any such agreement on a carrier, who is not a member of any one of the labor organizations, national in scope, organized in accordance with this act and admitting to membership employees of a craft or class in any of said services, such employee, as a condition of continuing his employment, may be required to become a member of the organization representing the craft in which he is employed on the effective date of the first agreement applicable to him: Provided further, That nothing herein or in any such agreement or agreements shall prevent an employee from changing membership from one organization to another organization admitting to membership employees of a craft or class in any of said services.

I have read that amendment as a premise to my question, which is as follows: If this measure is enacted, will it give to employers and employees the right, by means of collective bargaining, to set up a union-shop agreement?

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes.

Mr. WHERRY. If that is done, will there be a mandatory provision that a person who today might not be a member of such an organization, will be forced into one union organization?

Mr. HOLLAND. All I can state is my personal understanding, which is that such a person will be forced into the organization which at that time represents that particular class or craft of employees.

However, on this point I should prefer to yield to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL], to permit him to state his view of the matter. Perhaps he may have a different view. However, certainly what I have just stated is my view.

Mr. WHERRY. I am seeking light on this question, and I shall be glad to propound the question to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that, without losing my right to the floor, I may yield to my friend, the Senator from Alabama, to permit him to reply to the question asked by the Senator from Nebraska.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I would say that if the bargaining unit representing a particular employee arrived at an agreement with management, under which in that particular craft there was to be a union shop, the employee would be required to join the union.

Mr. PEPPER. In the first instance.

Mr. HILL. Yes; in the first instance.

Mr. WHERRY. And the agreement thus made between the employees and the employer could provide for a union shop, could it not?

Mr. HILL. There is nothing in the statute which requires any agreement whatever, unless it is voluntarily arrived at, and is of their own free will and accord. If the employer and the employees, when sitting around a conference table and engaged in the collective-bargaining process, agree to have a union shop, such an agreement could become effective. However, nothing in this measure would require a union shop at all. A union shop would be entirely permissive.

Mr. WHERRY. In other words, does the use of the word "may" in the connection mean that the union shop would not be mandatory, but would be permissive?

Mr. HILL. Yes; it would be permissive.

Mr. WHERRY. If the agreement between management and labor provided for a union shop, this measure would be a permissive statute, so far as it goes. Is that correct?

Mr. HILL. Yes.

Mr. WHERRY. However, if management and labor enter into a contract which includes a provision that there shall be a check-off system, and if the contract also provides that the employees shall follow the union requirements for membership, those provisions can be written into the final agreement, can they not?

Mr. HILL. The check-off is in a different position, in that if there is to be a checkoff, the individual employee himself must give written consent or written assignment for it.

Mr. WHERRY. That is the present situation under the Taft-Hartley law, is it not?

Mr. HILL. Yes.

Mr. WHERRY. My further question is this: Today, are members of the railroad unions required to belong to such a union?

Mr. HILL. The very purpose of this measure is to remove from existing law the prohibition against the union shop.

Mr. WHERRY. So the present Railway Labor Act does not make it permissive; is that correct?

Mr. HILL. That is correct. The purpose of this measure is to give the permission.

Mr. WHERRY. If that is the purpose, what does the Senator believe will be done? Frankly, does he believe that immediately there will be collective bargaining agreements which will require membership in such an organization?

Mr. HILL. Yes; to be perfectly frank about it, I would imagine that if this measure should be enacted into law, labor would seek to bargain with management to bring about union shop agreements. That is what I would think.

Mr. WHERRY. Let me ask this question: Suppose a man is a fireman on a railroad and is a member of the firemen's brotherhood, but temporarily is promoted to be engineer. I refer to the illustration the Senator gave last night in the course of his remarks, and to the point the Senator made in connection with membership in only one union. In view of that illustration, what is the situation under the present act?

Mr. HILL. At the present time the question of union membership does not arise, because the union shop is prohibited.

Mr. WHERRY. I should like to know what the unions do at the present time when an employee who is a fireman on one of the railroads and is a member of the Brotherhood of Firemen, temporarily is promoted to be engineer. In such a case, does that employee temporarily join the Brotherhod of Locomotive Engineers, and subsequently return to the Brotherhood of Firemen when he returns to his old job of fireman?

Mr. HILL. No, because at the present time there is no requirement at all that he join a union. So he can do whatever he wishes to do.

Mr. WHERRY. I understand that, but I am asking about one who is already a member of the firemen's union which I think is the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, one of the Big Four brotherhoods.

Mr. HILL. That is correct.

Mr. WHERRY. Let us take the case of a man who is in good standing as a member of that organization and who is promoted to the position of engineer, does he continue in the firemen's union, or does he automatically and voluntarily go into the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers? And then, when he is demoted, does he go back into the firemen's organization, or does he retain membership in both organizations?

Mr. HILL. No; I would say that today it would be a matter of his own choice, as it would be if the pending measure were passed.

Mr. WHERRY. Then, I desire to ask this question: Let us take the case of a man who is a fireman after the pending measure is passed, does he join the firemen's organization, and does it require him to remain in that organization? Would it prevent his changing to membership in the engineers' organization?

Mr. HILL. No; not at all. He moves up to the engineers' organization.

Mr. WHERRY. What if he is demoted to fireman?

Mr. HILL. If he is demoted, he can return to the firemen's organization.

Mr. WHERRY. He would be permitted to change back and forth, would be?

Mr. HILL. That is correct. If he changes back and forth from engineman to fireman, or vice versa, he can change his affiliation.

Mr. WHERRY. Would he be free to join the firemen's organization again, if he had taken his membership from that organization?

Mr. HILL. That would be up to him, as to whether he wanted to do that.

Mr. WHERRY. I understand it is a voluntary proposition, as it is now; is that correct?

Mr. HILL. That is correct.

Mr. WHERRY. I am trying to find how it would work out in practice, and whether this measure would impose additional requirements upon him.

Mr. HILL. Under this measure, if there were a collective-bargaining agreement he would have to belong to one or the other of those two organizations.

Mr. WHERRY. If he belonged to the firemen's organization, he would not be denied the right to belong to another organization, I know.

Mr. HILL. No; of course not.

Mr. WHERRY. In other words is it not a fact that if he went into the firemen's organization, it would more or less militate against the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers?

Mr. HILL. No; not at all. If he became an engineer then I should say the engineers' organization would be happy and delighted to take him in as a member of their organization. The choice would be his.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, I am happy over the colloquy which has taken place, because it points up the statement made by Mr. John T. Corbett, assistant grand chief engineer and the national labor representative of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, in a very strong letter to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL], which I have read into the RECORD. Mr. Corbett advises the Senator from Alabama, among other things, as follows:

> It appears proper to inform you that there is no similar condition in any industry affecting the employees of the industry which has ever been given consideration that presents a greater injustice to the senior group of workers than your attempts.
> You must understand that what you are explaining is that the apprentice is provided a guaranty or assurance he shall never be required to secure membership in the senior organization which his apprenticeship prompts him to endeavor to secure promotion to.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I should like to say that I did not hear the reading of the letter. I have been occupied with certain other matters. I deeply appreciate the information, but that raises the same issue which I have raised here.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. Corbett ends his letter with this additional sentence, which I should like to read, if the Senator will permit:

> This is an injustice to the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers which could never be overcome.

I believe that is a rather categorical answer to the questions propounded.

Mr. WHERRY. Will the Senator tell me who signed that?

Mr. HOLLAND. The letter is signed by Mr. John T. Corbett, assistant grand engineer and national legislative representative of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, who is stationed permanently in Washington, representing his organization, and who speaks officially for them, and who describes himself to me—and I am sure he is completely true in what he has said—as having been for 40 years in that organization, having come from the Milwaukee Railroad, I understand. In an earlier colloquy, and, before the able Senatar from Nebraska came in, I stated that from another source the suggestion was made to me that exactly the same problem confronts the conductors organization, and that the individual propounding this question to me says he cannot understand why or how anyone assuming to speak for the conductors could possibly have signed a consent to this legislation; that he did not believe it was clearly understood.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further to me, before he proceeds to something else?

Mr. HOLLAND. I yield.

Mr. HILL. I may say to my friend from Nebraska that the gravamen of this complaint is simply that Mr. Corbett, assistant grand chief engineer, contends that under the bill as now amended, if an employee is a member of the firemen's organization, he has a right to make his choice as to whether he will remain in that organization or whether he will move up to the engineers' organization. Mr. Corbett's complaint is that he is not forced, when he becomes an engineer, to surrender membership in the firemen's organization, and be forced by law to go into the engineers' union. That is the gravamen of this letter.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, I think the letter speaks very well for itself. The position of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers is apparently unyieldingly in opposition to this measure.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for one more question?

Mr. HOLLAND. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. Is it the bill as now amended which caused this complaint to come in?

Mr. HOLLAND. It is because of the amendment which was placed in it on the motion of the Senator from Alabama and other Senators, and which the writer of the letter says would operate to destroy his union.

I stated in the earlier colloquy that no Member of the Senate, other than those who were negotiating this matter, had the slightest idea or the slightest information about the amendment which was offered yesterday and placed in the bill, and of which the representative of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers complained. I further stated that it is completely impossible, in view of the time limitations imposed upon us here, to discuss the question of how widely and how seriously this bill affects either the engineers or the conductors. In further reply to the questions earlier raised——

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point for a moment?

Mr. HOLLAND. I yield.

Mr. HILL. I may say to the distinguished Senator from Nebraska that his committee reported a committee amendment to the effect that no employee should be required to belong to more than one union. The amendment which the Senate adopted yesterday, which had been agreed to by 21 of the 22 railway organizations, was designed to spell out in a little greater detail and to put a few more safeguards around the intent and purpose and will of the committee that no employee should be required to belong to more than one union; and of course, that is what this letter is all about.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. HILL. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. Evidently, when the question was raised in my mind, I knew nothing about this letter, or its contents. I knew nothing of the contents of the letter until I heard it on the floor, and it seemed to me that there was some question about whether an apprentice would belong to a particular union and whether therefore a senior organization would be deprived of its membership. Yesterday on the floor I understood the distinguished Senator from Alabama to say that 21 of the 22 so-called railroad organizations were in favor of the bill as amended by the amendment proposed by the distinguished Senator from Alabama and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT]. Did they know what were the provisions of the amendment which was offered by the two distinguished Senators?

Mr. HILL. Oh, surely. The representatives of the railway organizations sat around a table together and worked out the details of the amendment, and then brought it to the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from Alabama, and we saw that the amendment was exactly similar to the committee amendment, except that it spelled out in more detail the safeguards which were deemed necessary in order to properly do the job.

Mr. WHERRY. I know that when the Senator said "we" he meant the members. I am talking about the officials. Do the officials know what the enginemen think about this proposed amendment?

Mr. HILL. Oh, certainly; they are the ones.

Mr. WHERRY. Just a moment, please. What I am trying to get into the RECORD is this: The Senator made a statement yesterday, and I take it at its face value, that 21 of the labor organizations completely approved of this legislation.

Mr. HILL. That is correct.

Mr. WHERRY. I get the idea now that the reason that the official of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers is opposed to the legislation is particularly because of this new amendment, which he seems to indicate——

Mr. HILL. No.

Mr. WHERRY. Just a moment, please.

Mr. HILL. Very well.

Mr. WHERRY. Which he seems to indicate that it would force into this one organization the apprenticed employees of the railroad, so far as the firemen and engineers are concerned. What I would like to know now is, do all of these 21 organizations know of this amendment, and is the Senator from Alabama saying now, after I have raised this question, that the 21 organizations are behind this bill as now amended by the amendment presented by the Senator from Alabama and the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. HILL. The 21 organizations not only know of the amendment, but representatives of the 21 organizations sat around the table together, to assist in working out the amendment. They agreed to the amendment, and I read into the RECORD yesterday the letter which I now hold in my hand, signed by spokesmen for three of the four organizations which had previously opposed the bill because the amendment did not suit them.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for one more question?

Mr. HILL. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. Did the representative who has been mentioned sit at the table when this amendment was being considered, and did he or some other representative of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers join in approving this amendment?

Mr. HILL. Let me say to the Senator that I do not know the names of the personnel who sat around the table.

Mr. WHERRY. The Senator knows the names of the organizations who were represented, does he not?

Mr. HILL. I may say that, so far as the author of the letter referred to by the Senator from Florida is concerned, Mr. John T. Corbett, he appeared before the committee at its hearings on this measure. He at that time opposed the bill, and he continues to oppose it.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I understood the Senator from Alabama to say yesterday—and I am asking the question only to clarify the subject——

Mr. HILL. Mr. Corbett is the exception I mentioned yesterday.

Mr. WHERRY. I cannot recall exactly the words which the Senator from Alabama used, but I understood him to say that the gentleman who represented the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers personally was in favor of the pending legislation, but had not been able to refer the subject to his organization. Consequently he could not say what the position of the organization would be. Am I correct in my understanding?

Mr. HILL. No; I have been informed to the effect that the only ones who are not urging the passage of the bill are the members of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers. The are not opposing it. That is exactly what I said yesterday.

That was my understanding yesterday. I said also that the chief of the brotherhood feels that in view of past action he is not now in a position to endorse the bill. This morning Mr. Corbett, the gentleman referred to, came to see me. He informed me that that statement is not correct. He stated that he had opposed the bill before the subcommittee, and that he was still opposed to the bill. He wrote the letter to which the Senator from Florida has adverted.

Mr. WHERRY. I did not read the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of yesterday. The Senator from Alabama will understand that I am not trying to impeach his statement.

Mr. HILL. Of course not.

Mr. WHERRY. However, I remember the Senator's statement.

Mr. HILL. I stated there was one exception.

Mr. WHERRY. Yes.

Mr. HILL. This was the exception I had in mind.

Mr. WHERRY. But the Senator from Alabama went further than that. I understood him to say that they were not opposing the proposed legislation. I am not talking about Mr. Corbett, to whom reference has been made. I believe the Senator referred to a gentleman who was personally favorable to the legislation but had not had the time to take it up with his organization.

Mr. HILL. I had been so advised yesterday. I had been advised yesterday that the head man of the organization was not opposed to the bill. This morning, Mr. Corbett, one of the assistant head men, not the grand head, came to see me, and gave me the letter which was read into the RECORD this morning. He wanted to make sure that the RECORD would be corrected so as to state the true situation. He brought another letter with this letter. I read the letter into the RECORD when the Senate convened this morning.

Mr. WHERRY. What is now the opinion of the distinguished Senator from Alabama as to whether the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers is opposed to the bill? Are they opposed to it as amended, or are they in favor of it?

Mr. HILL. In the absence of any other information I would say that we must accept the word of Mr. J. T. Corbett that they are opposed to the bill.

Mr. WHERRY. I have one more question to ask. Does the Senator now feel that if all the other 21 organizations were advised of all the implications of the proposed legislation—and I understand they have not been informed—that they still would be favorable to the bill as amended?

Mr. HILL. I certainly think so.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, I had two conferences this morning with Mr. Corbett, and the clear impression which I got directly from him—and I ask the attention of the Senator from Nebraska, and I hope the Senator from Alabama will follow this statement—was that his organization by convention action has been opposed to the proposed legislation and has been strongly opposed to it from its inception, but that the offering and inclusion in the bill of the amendment of yesterday makes him personally much more vigorously opposed than he was before, because he believes its enactment in its present form would be destructive of his brotherhood.

Mr. WHERRY. That is exactly the question I asked of the Senator from Alabama. I have asked him over and over again, and in three different ways, whether, if what the Senator from Florida says is true with respect to the locomotive engineers, and it could not possibly also be true with respect to the Brotherhood of Conductors, because they have the same problems with respect to apprenticeship—brakemen becoming conductors, and so forth. The answer the Senator from Alabama gave——

Mr. HILL. The best answer is to refer to the letter which I have in my hand, which was written to the distinguished Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], the chairman of the committee.

Mr. WHERRY. What is the date of the letter?

Mr. HILL. December 6. It was written after the amendment was offered. They say:

> If the attached proposed amendment is incorporated in the bill, the undersigned organizations are in favor of the enactment of S. 3295 and urge its adoption.

I hold in my hand the attached amendment. It is the amendment which was offered yesterday by the senior Senator from Ohio and myself, and the Senate adopted the amendment. They state:

> If the attached proposed amendment is incorporated in the bill, the undersigned organizations are in favor of the enactment of S. 3295 and urge its adoption.

Mr. WHERRY. May I ask what the name of the organization is?

Mr. HILL. It is signed by Jonas A. McBride, vice president, national legislative representative, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen; W. D. Johnson——

Mr. WHERRY. Is that the same organization to which reference was made earlier?

Mr. HILL. No. The reason I emphasized "enginemen" was to show that it is different from "engineers."

Mr. WHERRY. I understand.

Mr. HILL. The letter is also signed by W. D. Johnson, vice president, national legislative representative, Order of Railway Conductors, and by Harry See, national legislative representative, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen.

Mr. HOLLAND. I think I should also say to the Senator from Nebraska that earlier in the debate, before he came on the floor of the Senate, I had stated in the RECORD that the question had been posed to me this morning that the same result which was feared by the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers was in the judgment of the individual posing it this morning, just as harmful and just as dangerous in its impact upon the conductors' organization as it was upon the engineers. I communicated that information to the Senate this morning.

In concluding, Mr. President, I may say that I want it to be crystal-clear in the RECORD that the questions propounded by the able Senator from Nebraska—and they were good questions—must be answered without any equivocation, without any animadversion, and without dressing the answer up in words which do not tell the plain facts. The particular question of the Senator from Nebraska to which I refer at this time was whether or not men who are not now members of the union and who are within the classes of operating employees, would, in the event of the negotiation and entering into contracts by the operating brotherhood in that particular classification of employees, be required to join the union. The answer to that question is "yes"; they would be so required.

Mr. President, the Senator from Florida understands that there would be no exception to that other than the refusal of the union to admit them, and the refusal of the union to admit them might be known in advance, but, notwithstanding that fact, every man not now a member of the union would be forced to apply for membership and subject himself to that situation, whatever it might be.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, I have tried to follow the debate on the pending measure, but I am still somewhat in the dark with respect to it, particularly as to where all the railroad unions stand on the proposed legislation. I am also still somewhat in the dark as to the question of States' rights which is involved. I wish to ask the distinguished Senator from Florida if he knows of any urgent and compelling reason why we must act today. I understand that the majority leader plans to have a session tomorrow if we do not conclude with certain business of the Senate today. I should like to ask the distinguished Senator from Florida why the pending bill could not with great propriety go back to the committee, so that definite discussion could be had with respect to the stand of the unions on what they want, and also to give full opportunity to the committee to consider the amendment which the distinguished Senator from Florida has proposed, and which he feels is necessary to protect States' rights, in which many of us, of course, are vitally interested.

Mr. HOLLAND. In reply to the distinguished Senator from Virginia, I know of no compelling reason. I have already stated in debate that I thought it was unfortunate that debate on the pending measure should be scheduled at a time of international and national crisis, when most Members of the Senate, particularly the senior Members of the Senate, are tied up in meetings of committees which are working on important defense measures. I know of no compelling reason requiring our passing on the measure today. As a matter of fact, it is well known, as it has been stated in debate, that the House has not acted upon the measure. It has been furthermore stated in debate frequently that there is a question as to whether a rule can be secured in the House to bring the measure up for consideration in the House. I have no knowledge on that question.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, since so much has been said with respect to a rule in the House, I should like to say that it would not be necessary, if the bill passes the Senate, to get a special rule in the House for its consideration there. There is a general rule in the House of Representatives which provides that if the Senate passes a bill which imposes no burden upon the Federal Treasury—in other words, does not take any money out of the Federal Treasury—it can be brought to the Speaker's desk. Thereupon the Speaker can do one of two things. He can either refer the bill to the legislative committee which has jurisdiction over the subject matter, or, in the discretion of the Speaker, if he so desires to do so, he can recognize the chairman of a particular legislative committee, whereupon the chairman of such committee can move to proceed to the consideration of the bill. If a majority of the House of Representatives sustains the motion of the chairman of such committee, the bill is before the House, and the House can proceed to pass or not pass the bill.

Mr. HOLLAND. In further reference to the question of the distinguished Senator from Virginia, I know of no reason which compels action on the bill today, or which would make such action highly advisable.

The second point which I wish to make is that the question propounded by the Senator from Nebraska, as to whether or not a nonmember of a union now working in an operating classification would be required at least to apply for membership must be answered "Yes."

It is further complicated by another question, which arose earlier in the debate today, and that is as to what is the status of a member of the only CIO union which is found in this field, which is not a class or craft union, but which covers all classes of employees in the railway industry, for example, from maintenance-of-way men up to engineers and conductors. In this connection it was stated to the Senator from Florida this morning by one of the representatives of the railroad employees whose name I am not free to state that there are numerous members of the classifications which would be affected by this bill who are members of the CIO union and not members of any brotherhood. As the Senator from Florida reads this measure, such a person, though now a member of a union which does not serve merely a class or craft, would, equally with a nonmember of any union, be required to apply for a membership in one of the craft or class unions.

The Senator from Florida is not certain that his decision in that connection is correct. He has invited the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL], and the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], any or all of them, who might have sounder information on that subject, to comment upon the question which has been posed to the junior Senator from Florida, namely, as to what are the rights and what would be the requirements imposed upon a union member whose membership was not in any of the craft brotherhoods, but in the CIO union, the transport workers union, in the event of the passage of this bill, and in the event of the negotiation of a union-shop contract by a particular brotherhood with a particular railroad, governing employment on that railroad.

It would seem to the Senator from Florida, from the mere wording of the provision, that such a union member, whose membership was in the CIO transport workers' union, would be required to apply for a membership in the appropriate brotherhood.

I read the language which appears, at least to me, to so indicate, and which raised that question in the mind of the person inquiring of me. I quote from the amendment adopted yesterday. The wording is this:

> Provided, however, That as to an employee in any of said services on a particular carrier at the effective date of any such agreement on a carrier, who is not a member of any one of the labor organizations, national in scope, organized in accordance with this act and admitting to membership employees of a craft or class in any of said services, such employee, as a condition of continuing his employment, may be required to become a member of the organization representing the craft in which he is employed on the effective date of the first agreement applicable to him.

I do not attempt to state what that means with any finality of authority, because I was not present at the drafting. I do not know what the draftsmen meant. I am not clear even as to the interpretation of this language. I have simply conveyed to the Senate the complaint which came to me, and the question which came to me this morning as to whether that provision would require a member of the transport workers union in one of these classifications who would be affected by a union-shop agreement, notwithstanding his membership in that union, to apply for a membership in one of the brotherhoods. I do not pretend to give a final answer to that question. At least it has been seriously raised.

Mr. President, I relinquish the floor.

Mr. PEPPER obtained the floor.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield in order that I may propound a question to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I am not sure what the procedure is going to be. In the light of the statement made by the distinguished Senator from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON] relative to the advisability of possibly making a motion to recommit the bill to committee, with instructions to report back on a day certain, and also because of the lengthy debate which has ensued, I am wondering if there will be an opportunity to suggest to the acting majority leader that he tell us what he has in mind relative to a vote on the so-called Holland amendment, or his reaction to the observations made by the distinguished Senator from Virginia.

I should like to say to the distinguished Senator from Alabama that we on this side of the aisle will be very happy to cooperate in any procedure which is decided upon. If there is to be considerable debate, I feel that if we can agree upon a time when we may have a vote, such an agreement should be entered into. It would be in order. But if a motion is to be made to recommit the bill, the sooner the motion is before us the better. The majority leader has indicated that he would like to take up the bill relating to aid to Yugoslavia this afternoon.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I will say to my distinguished friend that the distinguished majority leader has been tied up all day in the Finance Committee, and I have not had an opportunity to confer with him today. The distinguished senior Senator from Florida is about to speak. If it is agreeable to the distinguished Senator from Nebraska, at the very first opportunity I shall confer with the majority leader.

Mr. WHERRY. I shall appreciate it very much. Senators are very much interested in knowing what the procedure is to be. I think it would be a very fortunate thing if a unanimous-consent agreement could be entered into. I believe that such a proposal would meet with the approval of all Senators.

In the meantime, if such a motion as that suggested by the Senator from Virginia is to be forthcoming, I think it would be well to get it before the Senate as soon as possible. After all, if we are to expedite the work of the Senate, we should look ahead and plan it.

Mr. HILL. I appreciate what the Senator has said.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HILL. The Senator from Florida has the floor.

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I have very recently conferred with the distinguished majority leader about the bill, and he told me that he was very anxious to have action on it concluded today. There are on the floor of the Senate now 11 Senators, and that is about as many as there have been present since the first quorum call was had. How valuable the pro-and-con debate may be I don't know. I admit it has been good so far, but it does not influence those who do not hear it. For that reason, knowing that some of us are still in great doubt, I thought that if there were no particular reason why we should rush the bill through today, in these troubled times, we might recommit it. Otherwise, I would very much favor having an early vote on the merits of the bill.

Mr. HILL. I will cooperate with the Senator 100 percent to get an early vote. The distinguished senior Senator from Florida advised me a little while ago that he would not occupy a great deal of time, and when he concludes his remarks, I do not know why we should not go ahead and vote on the Holland amendment and dispose of it, and proceed with any other amendments and dispose of them, and then vote on the bill and dispose of it. I have no disposition to delay the bill. On the other hand, I have every desire to get action on it.

Mr. ROBERTSON. The majority leader asked me if there was any filibuster on the bill. I told him that, on the contrary, I was very certain Senators were anxious to dispose of the bill at as early a moment as possible, that there was no filibuster on the part of any Senator.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, if the Senator having the floor will yield, I think that in all fairness to the Senator having the bill in charge I should inform him that my colleague, the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. JENNER], informed me about an hour ago that he would offer an amendment to the bill, the anti-segregation amendment. I thought I owed it to the Senator having the bill in charge so to inform him.

Mr. HILL. Is the distinguished junior Senator from Indiana in the city at this time?

Mr. CAPEHART. I understand he will be here.

Mr. HILL. It does not necessarily follow that if he offers the amendment there will be any lengthy debate on it, does it?

Mr. CAPEHART. I cannot answer that question. If he is not able to arrive in time, then he has asked that I offer the amendment for him, and as a courtesy to him, I shall do that. If I offer the amendment, I assure the Senator that there will be no time consumed by me in making a speech. However, if my colleague himself arrives, I cannot tell how long he will talk. He is insisting that his amendment be offered, and in courtesy to him, which I am sure the able Senator from Alabama understands, I shall offer it in his behalf if he is not here; but if I offer it, there will be no speech on my part.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Indiana just one question about the amendment?

Mr. CAPEHART. Yes; but I know very little about it.

Mr. ROBERTSON. The Senator says it is an antisegreation amendment. Is it really the FEPC amendment?

Mr. CAPEHART. I cannot answer the question. The amendment has been lying on the table since the first of September. I am merely acting as my colleague's agent, at his request, showing the courtesy that any other Senator would show to a colleague.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the senior Senator from Florida yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. NEELY. In view of the present situation, and the clear indication that it will be impossible to vote on the bill either today or tomorrow, I inquire of the Senator from Alabama, if he would have any objection to a unanimous-consent request that a vote be taken on the bill and all amendments thereto on next Monday, with the usual provision regarding debate on each side of not more than 10 minutes on any amendment which might be offered.

Mr. HILL. In view of the amendment which the Senator from Indiana has stated, his colleague, the junior Senator from Indiana, desires to offer to the bill, and will offer if he is present, I do not think we can agree at this time on any time for a vote, or any limitation such as that suggested by the Senator from West Virginia. I do not know what the junior Senator from Florida has in mind, but I do not know why, after the senior Senator from Florida concludes his remarks, we might not vote on the amendment of the junior Senator from Florida. Would that be agreeable to the Senator?

Mr. HOLLAND. It would not be agreeable, Mr. President, in the sense that I feel we have had a fair chance, because so many Senators have left the city before they knew the bill was coming up, who take the same position the Senator from Florida takes. But he certainly will not interpose any debate simply for the purpose of delay. He has no intention of so doing. He said that to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. HILL. He certainly did.

Mr. HOLLAND. I have simply asserted the right to speak today in order to round out the statements I made yesterday, which I had not had time to round out then. I have consumed time today largely by reason of colloquies which ensued during my discussion yesterday, as the Senator knows.

Mr. President, we would have no objection to voting at any time when we can come to it. I would rather have the vote go over until Monday, because the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. HOEY] and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND] are necessarily out of the city. They were called out before they knew the measure was to be taken up for consideration. They have very strong feelings with respect to the measure. They would want to see adopted the amendment offered by the junior Senator from Florida.

Mr. President, I do not feel good about the whole situation, and I do not feel that those who hold the same views I hold have been treated with much consideration in this matter. I see nothing we can do about it, however, other than to put on a long talkathon, which I have no intention of doing.

Mr. HILL. I thank the Senator very much.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the senior Senator from Florida yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. May I propound a question to the distinguished acting majority leader in respect to the query made by my able friend and colleague, the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY]? Now that the Senator has stated it would be impossible to secure unanimous consent to vote on the bill on Monday, because of the announcement made by the distinguished Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART], would there be any objection to entering into a unanimous-consent agreement to vote on Monday on the so-called Holland amendments? There are two of them.

Mr. HILL. The two amendments embody the same matters. I imagine it would be agreeable to the junior Senator from Florida to vote on them en bloc.

Mr. WHERRY. I mean to vote only on the Holland amendments.

Mr. HOLLAND. It would not only be argeeable to vote on those amendments, which as I stated heretofore in the debate should be considered as one amendment—and I made that request—but I should also be glad to include in the request that we vote on a motion to table the amendment offered by the junior Senator from Indiana. I agree with the Senator from Alabama. I would not want to set an arbitrary time for a vote on that particular amendment at this time. But I would be willing to include in the unanimous-consent request a vote on a motion to table.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, we are now coming to the point where we shall be able to secure a unanimous-consent agreement, if the Senator from Alabama will agree with the Senator from Florida. I should like to ask, however, that the Senator from Indiana be permitted 30 minutes to present his amendment, and at that time we will agree that a motion to table be entered, so there will be no long debate about the amendment. I think that would be fair.

Mr. HILL. If the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] may now be permitted to proceed, I shall confer with the majority leader, and when I have conferred with him, I shall be glad to advise with other Senators further.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, will my colleague yield to me for an observation?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. HOLLAND. The junior Senator from Florida has just had the privilege of a brief conversation with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY]. He is thoroughly in accord with the feeling that the suggestion by the junior Senator from West Virginia is sound and workable. He will gladly accommodate himself to it. That suggestion is that we enter into a unanimous-consent agreement to vote on Monday on the amendments offered by the junior Senator from Florida, and on a motion to table the amendment to be offered by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. JENNER], with the understanding that the Senator from Florida is perfectly willing to waive any additional argument on his amendments, and to yield to the junior Senator from Indiana, or whomsoever he may designate to speak for at least half of the time allotted, prior to the vote.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Florida yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I appreciate the suggestion made by the junior Senator from Florida. I believe the regular procedure ought to be followed. I believe the Senator from Alabama will agree with me relative to the terms of the unanimous-consent agreement. There is one thing I should like to suggest, beyond the usual terms of such an agreement. I think we can agree on an hour to vote, and on how the time shall be divided prior to the hour to vote, and that we then give a certain amount of time to any additional amendments which may be offered and which are germane. However, I wish to have included in the agreement that the Senator from Indiana [Mr. JENNER] be permitted to speak on the amendment he proposes to offer. All I ask is that before the agreement is entered into, there be included in it the provision that the Senator from Indiana may have 30 minutes in which to explain his amendment. On that basis I am satisfied we can agree upon the time when a vote may be had.

Mr. HILL. I suggest that the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] be allowed to proceed, and we can in the meantime endeavor to secure an agreement.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. NEELY. Does the Senator from Alamaba know of any additional speeches which are proposed to be made after the senior Senator from Florida has concluded?

Mr. HILL. I know of no other speakers who intend to address themselves to the pending amendments. The Senator from Nebraska said he wanted provision to be made for half an hour for the distinguished Senator from Indiana on his amendment.

CANCER CONTROL AND RESEARCH ACTIVITIES

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. President, will the senior Senator from Florida yield to me for about 3 minutes, so I may make a short statement and present a matter for insertion in the RECORD, relating to cancer research?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. President, I desire to say a few words on the subject of cancer control and research activities which are no less essential and no less worthy of our support today than in more peaceful times. We are all concerned, of course, with the news from the Far East and from the fighting front where American soldiers are defending freedom with their lives. But in spite of these far-off events we still have a responsibility to consider some of those forces that are threatening the lives of so many of our people here at home. I trust that in the stress of events we will always have time to honor those who, in our own communities, are showing devotion to the relief of human suffering.

We are always fighting mortal enemies of disease that cause death, regardless of age, color, or creed. In this classification there is no more ruthless enemy than the terrible scourge of cancer. I want to pay a special tribute to the devoted volunteers throughout the country, and particularly in my own State of New Jersey, who are fighting day and night to control the upward trend of this disease which yearly claims more than 200,000 lives of our own countrymen.

Our Federal Government, through the National Cancer Institute, is aiding in this battle and contributes millions of dollars for research into the causes of the disease. This fund is increased by contributions made to the American Cancer Society by the people in every State, who in this past year alone raised nearly $14,000,000 to carry out the program of education and service, as well as research.

While scientific research is being carried on the present sufferers of the disease are not being neglected. A campaign emphasizing the necessity of periodic visits to family physicians as one of the preventatives is being carried on throughout the country. Clinics have been opened where patients have access to X-ray equipment, radium, medications and dressings, and many other services.

In my own State of New Jersey the New Jersey Division of the American Cancer Society was organized 4 years ago by Mr. George E. Stringfellow and is now under the presidency of Mr. J. Wesley Goldthorp. This division has done an outstanding piece of work and I wish to pay tribute to these two men and their associates for the able leadership which they have freely given to this cause.

One of the outstanding features of the New Jersey division's program is the annual editorial contest during national cancer-control month each April. Daily and weekly newspapers in the State contribute editorials in addition to news space during the annual fund-raising campaign. Three judges select the best of these editorials and the winners are awarded the George E. Stringfellow plaques.

The winners in 1950 were the Paterson Evening News in the daily field for an editorial written by Abe J. Greene, and the Delaware Valley News of Frenchtown in the weekly field for an editorial written by Sydney A. DeCosta.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that these two winning editorials on this important subject of cancer control be inserted in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the editorials were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Paterson Evening News of May 11, 1950]

BEMOANING THE DEVASTATION OF CANCER WON'T CURE IT—IF YOU REALLY WANT TO HELP, HERE'S HOW TO DO IT

Let's pull up a chair, neighbor. Just for a friendly chat between ourselves.

Don't let's talk about world affairs. Let's leave the Iron Curtain, the Commies, China, the Big Three, Pakistan and other problems like that to our statesmen. They can take care of themselves—we hope.

Let's leave Congress, for the moment at least, to the Congressmen; State laws to our legislators.

Let's talk about something closer to home. Mrs. Jones, next door, for instance. The poor woman, they do say, is in the last stages of life. She has suffered for months, endlessly, pitifully, hopelessly. The doctors say she may pass on within a week, perhaps linger on for a month. And she with everything to live for, three darling children, a devoted husband, a nice home.

Cancer!

It's rather terrifying, isn't it, the way cancer is striking so many people we know. One out of eight, they say. Seems like more than that, from the news we get nearly every day of this friend and that one stricken.

What's to be done? Do we sit by, enjoying ourselves, life's pleasures and fruits, while all this goes on and we do nothing about it? My God, man, it may be our turn next.

What's to be done?

Listen, neighbor:

We're sitting here at peace with the world, everything rosy, nice comfortable homes, the season of the year when nature is blooming, and our spirits with it.

Suppose a man came up to us now and asked us for a dollar—just one dollar—to save his life. Would we give the dollar? Give a dollar! Why, that's preposterous. We'd give five, ten, fifty, a hundred if we knew we could save the man's life.

We would, eh?

Well, the Paterson committee sent out 35,000 letters asking for a dollar from each of the people to whom the letter was sent. One dollar.

And you think, don't you, that every one of those letters brought a quick response? Well, you're wrong. Less than one-tenth of them answered the letters, and of a goal of $30,000 for the city, only $17,250 has been raised in Paterson, and less than half of the $70,000 goal in the county. And that amount includes collections at public affairs and the more substantial contributions from people who were willing to give more than $1.

Some folks resort to the excuse: If someone would only ask me.

Neighbor, cancer doesn't ask, doesn't knock on the door. It strikes with terrible suddenness and terrifying effect.

The only chance those of us who have been spared the dreaded visitation is to bolster the doctors, the scientists, the researchers, who are working ceaselessly, courageously, self-sacrificingly, to fight the disease, find its cause and its cure.

Every dollar we give goes to the great fight. Read the statement on page 1 of tonight's News by Dr. James S. Gallo, an expert on cancer.

Read how the money is spent, how hopes will rise in the proportion that we give. And how many will die because so many of us are laggards, either refusing to give or being lazy about the giving.

And after reading Dr. Gallo's fine statement, fill out the coupon on page 69 of tonight's News send it to Chairman Jack Stern, Paterson Cancer Committee, 169 Van Houten Street, along with your dollar, 5, 10, or whatever you're able to give.

And then thank God for His benefactions which have made it possible for you to give rather than have to receive.

[From the Delaware Valley News of April 28, 1950]

NO ONE KNOWS

I remember the first time I saw her. She was a lovely dark-haired girl. Her jet-black eyes, all warm and friendly, basked in the glow of vibrant health.

Four years of war went by before I saw this girl again. She was a mother now. Two black-eyed children filled the joyful household with infant laughter. And she was only 22.

Six months later she was dead. Two women behind me in the church whispered grave accompaniment to the organ's requiem sobs—"She was so young." * * * "Yes; isn't it a pity. And those two lovely children." * * * "It was so quick." * * * "Yes; cancer, you know."

But who knew? No one knew. Not the girl herself. Not the doctors who tried to save. Not her wounded relatives and friends. No one knew. Cancer had simply claimed another victim, and no one knew.

Today men of science work endlessly to find this deadly killer's secret. But the search is hard and costly. Great quantities of time and money will be consumed before the cause and cure of cancer become known. That is why we are asked to contribute to the cancer fund.

While most of us cannot actually do cancer research, we can give money to the cause. Our contributions help rush the day when doctors may fight cancer in the open. Sometimes the secret seems maddeningly close. We owe it to ourselves and to those yet unborn to do all we can to find the cure as quickly as possible. And the best way we can help is to give money to those who are hot on the trail of this scourge.

S. A. D.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. If the Senator from Oregon will excuse me, I wish to say that I had previously agreed to yield to the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HENDRICKSON].

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Before the Senator from Florida yields to my colleague, I wish to thank him for having yielded to me. I know he is interested in the subject of cancer research, as I am. I appreciate very much the opportunity he has just given me to present this matter.

Mr. PEPPER. And, Mr. President, I wish to say that I appreciate the contribution the Senator from New Jersey has made.

STATEHOOD FOR ALASKA AND HAWAII

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Mr. President, will the senior Senator from Florida yield to me?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Mr. President, although H. R. 331, a bill to provide for the admission of Alaska into the Union, has been returned to the calendar, I shall continue to entertain high hope that the Members of the Senate will be given a fair chance to vote their conviction on this highly important legislation before the end of the current session.

There are countless thousands of people throughout the country who feel precisely as I do in respect to the merits of this legislation and they feel very strongly, Mr. President, that the least we can do in this waning session is to treat with this issue courageously and squarely, and this can only mean one thing, namely, to give every Member of the Senate the opportunity to record his conviction on the subject of statehood, in the case of both Alaska and Hawaii.

Some of the people who are looking to us for action on these measures are great leaders in very important segments of our Nation. One of these is New Jersey's Gov. Alfred E. Driscoll. Governor Driscoll has written me on several occasions in respect to the statehood bills, but his most recent letter which reached my desk this morning sums the issue up so eloquently that it deserves the most careful consideration by every Member of the Senate on both sides of the aisle. To the end that the brief but no less impressive arguments which Governor Driscoll's letter presents may be carefully studied by all Senators who have a proper regard for party-platform commitments and openly declared obligations, I ask unanimous consent that it be incorporated in the RECORD at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF NEW JERSEY,
OFFICE OF THE GOVERNOR,
Trenton, December 7, 1950.

HON. ROBERT C. HENDRICKSON,
United States Senate,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR BOB: I am surprised that there appears to be an unwillingness on the part of the United States Senate to approve statehood for Alaska and Hawaii. The Democrat national platform in 1948 stated: "We urge immediate statehood for Hawaii and Alaska, immediate determination by the people of Puerto Rico as to their form of government and their ultimate status with respect to the United States, and the maximum degree of local self-government for the Virgin Islands, Guam, and Samoa."

The Republican 1948 platform stated: "We favor eventual statehood for Hawaii, Alaska, and Puerto Rico." While it is true that the Republican platform used the word "eventual," it was nonetheless designed to give the impression that we favored statehood. How can we preach the theory of home rule if we are unwilling to give it to those who are asking for it?

I know that you are doing everything you can to support statehood for these two deserving Territories. I do hope that you will use your influence to prevent any tie between some Republicans and the southern Democrats. There is nothing to be gained by either side from such an unfortunate alliance.

While I do not have a personal acquaintance with Hawaii, I know Alaska and its people. Based on my personal knowledge, I am confident that both Territories, when they become States, may be counted upon to send good representatives to Congress. These Territories have served long and honorable apprenticeships. Their citizens have indicated a capacity for responsible representative government. They are now entitled to all the privileges and rights accorded to American citizens by our Constitution, including the right of voting representation in the Congress of the United States.

It seems to me to be significant that the governors of the 48 States have on numerous occasions considered this problem, and with impressive unanimity of opinion favored statehood. We are fortunately given an opportunity to support the proposal for statehood on the merits, as well as on the basis of international political expediency. To grant statehood at this time would be tangible evidence that we practice what we preach. The admission of Alaska and Hawaii to statehood would be a dramatic demonstration that our Republic has reached full maturity. It is growing in strength and authority as the chief proponent of representative government.

I would count it a personal favor if you would give me some indication of exactly how our Republicans stand on this proposal. Who is for the proposal and who is against it?

With kindest personal regards and sincere goods wishes, I am,

Your friend,

ALFRED E. DRISCOLL.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I may say that only a few days ago I had the privilege of spending 2 days in Honolulu, and to hear from our Navy personnel and other Government representatives there of the loyalty and patriotism of the Hawaiian people and their interest in the national security and strength. I heartily subscribe to the sentiments just uttered by the distinguished junior Senator from New Jersey that the Members of the Senate should be given the privilege of voting on the question of admission of Alaska and Hawaii to the Union.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. I thank the distinguished Senator from Florida for the privilege he has so kindly given me to present this matter.

LABOR-MANAGEMENT RELATIONS IN EAST COAST TANKER INDUSTRY

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Florida yield to me for a moment or two?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, the Senate Subcommittee on Labor-Management Relations, of which I have the honor to be a member, will in the near future submit to the Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare a report of an investigation of labor-management relations in the east coast tanker industry. I hope that every Member of the Senate will take the time to read that report. It will summarize uncontradicted testimony showing that deplorable conditions exist in that industry, conditions which we thought had been made impossible by laws guaranteeing to workers the rights to self-organization and collective bargaining.

I shall not take the time now to describe these conditions, but I do desire to direct the attention of the Senate to an excellent article which commences on page 48 of the December issue of Fortune. The article is entitled "Cities Service's Big Mistake," and is an excellent account of the facts revealed by our investigation. It is particularly gratifying that this great journal, Fortune, which represents so ably the point of view and policies of American employers, should print this account and thus emphasize the fact that the typical American employer is opposed to the vicious antilabor practices of the few who create and tolerate bad labor relations.

Our subcommittee has been functioning for more than a year under the outstanding chairmanship of the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY]. Under his leadership, the investigations have proceeded carefully, judiciously, and efficiently. I believe that the Senator from Montana is entitled to the congratulations of the Senate for the fair and fearless manner in which he has conducted these proceedings.

I now ask unanimous consent that the article appearing in Fortune magazine be printed in the body of the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CITIES SERVICE'S BIG MISTAKE—IT USED EVERY TRICK IN THE BOOK, BUT COULDN'T KEEP OUT THE UNION

For four hard years the Seafarers International Union (A. F. of L.) grappled with the Cities Service Oil Co. Finally, on September 22 of this year, the seamen won out: they signed a contract with Cities Service and became bargaining agent of the unlicensed men on the company's 16 east coast tankers. Three days later, on September 25, a Senate labor subcommittee began taking a look at what had been going on.

The hearings were conducted quietly, without theatrics, floodlights, or standing-room audiences, in a drab caucus room in the Senate Office Building. But what they produced was as lurid as anything since the days of the La Follette committee. They began with 5 hours of testimony by Paul Hall, the director of the SIU's Atlantic & Gulf District, stating the case for the prosecution: Hall charged that Cities Service had spent 4 years in stalling, firing prounion seamen, employing labor spies, organizing a company union, recruiting seamen in water-front saloons, and generally conducting itself according to a pattern that was elsewhere obsolescent in American labor relations. He was followed, later in the day, by the former Cities Service shipping master in New York, who told a long, complicated story involving his relations with company espionage agents, his belief that his phone was tapped by a company lawyer, and his instructions not to hire A. F. of L. seamen.

The second day's hearings completed the rout of Cities Service. Several attorneys and private detectives testified in detail to their roles in the espionage ring. A Cities Service vice president, who was one of the last to testify, made no serious effort to refute the charges; his prepared statement involved mostly a recountal of the patriotic activities of the company during World War II. All things considered, the 2 days of testimony comprised just about the worst public relations an American corporation could have.

When the SIU first went to work on Cities Service in 1946, it knew it was picking a tartar. The CIO maritime workers had won an NLRB election on Cities Service tankers back in 1938, but 9 years of intermittent negotiations had not produced a contract. On two occasions during those years, the NLRB forced Cities Service to shut down company unions. The east coast oil tankers were, in fact, almost completely closed to the A. F. of L. and CIO. Although Cities Service subsidiaries have 125 contracts with unions, the marine division has been bitterly opposed to the SIU.

The 4-year fight actually involved only 470-odd seamen. The first of the 4 years was consumed mainly in resolving an argument between the SIU and the CIO maritime workers as to which was the appropriate challenger. In October 1947 the NLRB threw out the latter, and ordered an election between the SIU and no union. At that time the SIU claimed 55 percent of the unlicensed seamen on the Cities Service fleet.

Cities Service made it plain from the beginning that it was in no hurry to get the issue settled. It asked and received a 60-day extension of the voting time; later, another 10 days was granted. After the voting had begun, the company asked for still another extension period, this time 75 days, to allow one of its ships in the Pacific to participate. Since the ship might be gone for months, the NLRB denied the request, and also denied a variety of company requests for alterations in the eligibility requirements. Finally, on Feberuary 9, 1948, the votes were counted. They showed that the SIU had won 83 percent of the ballots.

From February to May of 1948, Cities Service belabored the NLRB with protests against the balloting, all of which were overruled. On May 24, 1948, the SIU was certified as the appropriate bargaining agent for 7 ships that had been voted. There were still 9 tankers to be accounted for—the one that had been in the Pacific during the original balloting, and 8 new ships acquired just previously. The NLRB announced that on January 5, 1949, it would hold a meeting to arrange for votes on these 9 ships. Cities Service declined to participate, however, asserting that it had not been formally notified. The meeting was then postponed until February 16, at which time the company threatened not to cooperate unless the board rescinded a 10-year-old order permitting CIO oragnizers on its ships.

When the voting finally began, on February 20, several tankers refused to allow the NLRB representatives on board to conduct the election. It was then necessary, in some cases, to use launches, which could approach the tankers as they docked and advertise the time and place of the election with loudspeakers. On February 22, after 6 ships had managed to vote, Cities Service went into court and got a temporary injunction that stopped the balloting and impounded the votes already cast. Shortly afterward, however, the injunction was dismissed and the voting was resumed.

On April 15 a court appearance was made by representatives of the Citco Tanker Men's Association, which had been quickly organized a few months before and which the SIU repeatedly denounced as company-dominated. The CTMA asked for an injunction to prevent the counting of ballots; it claimed the election was unfair since it did not have a place on the ballot. The injunction was denied, the votes were counted, and the SIU was found to have won 89 percent of the votes. Cities Service immediately filed 19 objections to the conduct of the election, all of which, 4 months later, were denied by the NLRB in Washington. Not unexpectedly, the company came right back with a list of "exceptions to the objection." These were taken under consideration, then finally denied on December 2, 1949.

It was now 38 months since the union had first asked for a contract. As yet, no collective bargaining had taken place and, as it turned out, Cities Service was not quite ready to begin. On December 15, CTMA put in another appearance, demanding this time that the NLRB certify it as the representative of the seamen who had voted in the first (seven-ship) election. The board denied the request and CTMA inevitably, asked for a review of the decision. This was forthcoming on January 19, 1950, when the NLRB again ruled that the SIU was bargaining agent on the tankers. On February 8, bargaining began.

An interim contract was signed on March 10, stipulating that the company pay the SIU tanker scale on its ships. But just when it began to look as if the long, excruciating battle might be ending, the question of labor espionage came into the open.

The trouble was, the union complained at the Senate hearings, that while Cities Service was sitting down to the bargaining table with the SIU, it was firing SIU men. The union claimed that SIU men had been kept off the company's tankers, so far as was possible, ever since 1946. The SIU said that one of the chief reasons for the organization of CTMA in 1948 was to enable Cities Service to smoke out SIU men on the ships—by noting those who refused to go along with the new union. Whatever the truth about this, there was no dispute over the fact that Cities Service and the CTMA were hiring private detectives on a large scale. Caesar L. Scotti, a New York operative, told the Senate committee that he had been hired by a company attorney to get to know SIU men so that he could "finger" them when they entered the Cities Service hiring office. Two seamen, Anthony Hennessey and John Basciano, were hired to ship out on Cities Service tankers and inform on SIU activity at closer range. A licensed investigator in New York, Daniel J. Griffin, was hired to dig up what he could on the SIU leaders. The SIU complained at the hearings that several other men were more or less constantly engaged in shadowing their officials.

To round out the portrait of Cities Service labor relations during 1949 and early 1950 it might be added that these operatives were also up to their ears in shadowing one another. Scotti was instructed to keep an eye on James Hanaway, the company shipping master, whose office, in addition, was said to be wire-tapped. (The tap was denied by Cities Service.) The company's suspicion of Hanaway appears to have been justified; he admitted at the hearings that he had been paid at least $700 by the SIU and was busily working for both sides. Scotti was also shadowing Hennessey, whom the company apparently never trusted, but the suspicions proved unfounded. Hennessey, meanwhile, was shadowing a CTMA lawyer named Albert Strasburger, Strasburger was the man who had hired Griffin to get some dirt on the SIU.

On June 5 of this year the NLRB took up the unfair-labor practice cases arising from the espionage. After 3 days of hearings the company interrupted the proceedings with an announcement that it was willing to settle all the disputed points. It agreed to comply with all the NLRB demands, to rehire 151 men allegedly discharged for SIU activity, to pay $150,000 in back wages, and to bargain in good faith from that point on. The settlement stipulation, which was enforced by the second circuit court, also dissolved the CTMA.

The contract was finally signed on September 22. It was negotiated, incidentally, not by the marine-division officials of Cities Service, but by lawyers on the corporation level. Since the signing, relations have been excellent.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, as a member of that committee, I wish to join in the tribute which has just been paid to the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY] for the splended manner in which he, as chairman of the subcommittee, has conducted the investigation. He has shown fairness, objectivity and intense, keen interest in the subject; and I think he has served well the Senate and the entire country as chairman of the subcommittee in connection with the inquiry.

AMENDMENT OF RAILWAY LABOR ACT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3295) to amend the Railway Labor Act and to authorize agreements providing for union membership and agreements for deductions from the wages of carriers' employees for certain purposes and under certain conditions.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Florida yield to me, to permit me to propound a unanimous-consent agreement, if it is understood that by doing so the Senator will not prejudice his rights to the floor?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, perhaps we should have a quorum call at this time.

Mr. WHERRY. This proposal does not relate to the final vote on the bill, of course.

Mr. HILL. It does not relate to the final vote on the bill.

Mr. LUCAS. That is correct.

Mr. President, a number of Senators who are interested in Senate bill 3295, the pending measure, and also are interested in the amendment which now is being debated, known as the Holland amendment, have practically agreed upon the time for the vote, through a unanimous-consent agreement.

I am going to place the proposed unanimous-consent agreement before the Senate to see whether we can make some progress on it. I ask unanimous consent that the so-called Holland amendment to Senate bill 3295, Calendar 2263——

Mr. HILL. The amendment as presented.

Mr. LUCAS. Yes, the Holland amendment, as presented—be voted upon at the hour of 1 o'clock on Monday next; that the time on the amendment be divided equally between the opponents and the proponents, to be controlled by the Senator from Florida [Mr. HOLLAND] and the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL], after the quorum call is had upon the convening of the Senate on that day; following that, the amendment of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. JENNER], which is the amendment dealing with the FEPC bill, will be offered to Senate bill 3295; and on that amendment the Senator from Indiana [Mr. JENNER] shall have 15 minutes and the opponents of the amendment shall have 15 minutes.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, let us make it clear that after the Senator from Indiana has had his opportunity to speak for 15 minutes and after the opponents have had an opportunity to speak, if they see fit to do so, or if they think they should do so, in answer to the Senator from Indiana, then a motion to lay on the table will come.

Mr. LUCAS. Yes. I have not yet reached that point of the unanimous-consent proposal.

Mr. HILL. But I wish to make it clear that the 30 minutes of debate on the amendment must not preclude further debate on the amendment in the event the motion to table fails.

Mr. LUCAS. I think that is understood, and I was going to include that in the proposed agreement.

Mr. President, my thoughts have been considerably disturbed by the interruptions on the part of the Senator from Alabama, but I shall not repeat what I have already stated in regard to the proposal.

I think I was about to say that it is proposed that the Senator from Indiana [Mr. JENNER] shall have 15 minutes on his amendment and the opponents shall have 15 minutes; following that a motion to table shall be in order; and if the motion to table fails, the so-called Jenner amendment will still be before the Senate for debate.

Mr. HILL. For debate that is correct.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object—and I shall not object—I should like to propound a parliamentary inquiry first: Has the so-called Jenner amendment been submitted?

Mr. LUCAS. I do not think it has. It has been lying around for several weeks, I believe.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SMITH of North Carolina in the chair). The Chair is advised by the Parliamentarian that the amendment has not yet been submitted.

Mr. WHERRY. I think it should be submitted, so there will be no question as to what it is; or at least in the proposed unanimous-consent agreement the Jenner amendment should be identified. I think that should be done.

Mr. LUCAS. I have already said that it is the so-called Jenner amendment, known as the FEPC amendment.

Mr. WHERRY. I beg the Senator's pardon; that is fine. I have no objection, then.

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART] wished to speak at this time, I believe.

Mr. CAPEHART. No, thank you; the Senator from Nebraska has covered what I had in mind.

Mr. WHERRY. Very well.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, reserving the right to object—and I do not wish to have to object——

Mr. LUCAS. Please do not.

Mr. MORSE. I will object unless the unanimous-consent request is presented after a quorum call.

Mr. LUCAS. I shall suggest the absence of a quorum at this time, if the Senator from Florida will yield for that purpose.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, probably there is more unanimity at the present time than there might be later on, so I shall not stand in the way of increasing the unanimity. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator from Florida is always in favor of unanimity, and I thank him for yielding.

Mr. President, I now suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Holland	Myers
Anderson	Hunt	Neely
Brewster	Ives	Nixon
Bricker	Johnson, Tex.	O'Conor
Bridges	Johnston, S. C.	O'Mahoney

Hill	Murray

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A quorum is present.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, the senior Senator from Florida had the floor. I think he felt that a unanimous-consent agreement might be entered into, and that therefore he would not continue his speech this afternoon. The majority leader was going to propound a unanimous-consent request at this time, I understood.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, the majority leader has conferred with the minority leader, and I feel that all the terms of the unanimous-consent agreement have been reduced to the point where they meet the objections of all those who had anything to say about them.

Mr. LUCAS entered the Chamber.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, I may say for the RECORD that my colleague, who had the floor, had a long-standing engagement at the Senate Restaurant. He went to the restaurant to keep the engagement, and requested that he be notified in the event of a failure to enter into the unanimous-consent agreement. I, of course, shall protect him in that matter by holding the floor, in the event it becomes necessary to do so. But I hope, with him, that the agreement will be entered into.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request propounded by the Senator from Illinois previous to the quorum call? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The unanimous-consent agreement, as reduced to writing, is as follows:

Ordered, That on the calendar day of Monday, December 11, 1950, at the hour of 1 p. m., the Senate proceed to vote, without further debate, upon the amendment of Mr. HOLLAND, as proposed on December 7, 1950, to the bill (S. 3295) to amend the Railway Labor Act and to authorize agreements providing for union membership and agreements for deductions from the wages of carriers' employees for certain purposes and under certain conditions; and that the time intervening between a quorum call, to be had upon the convening of the Senate on said day, and said hour of 1 o'clock shall be equally divided between those favoring and those opposing said amendment and controlled, respectively, by Mr. HOLLAND and Mr. HILL.

Ordered further, That following the vote on the so-called Holland amendment, the Senate immediately proceed to consider the amendment, lettered A, submitted by Mr. JENNER on September 1, 1950, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed; that debate thereon be limited to 30 minutes and equally divided and controlled by Mr. JENNER and Mr. HILL; that following the expiration of the time for debate it shall be in order to move to lay said amendment on the table, and if such motion to lay on the table is rejected, the further consideration of said amendment shall proceed under the rules of the Senate.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I want the RECORD to show that the interest of many Senators in seeking the unanimous-consent agreement was in order to permit the majority leader to take up the announced legislation to grant aid to Yugoslavia. I think the RECORD ought to show that the agreement has come about through cooperation on the part of Members of the Senate from both sides of the aisle.

Mr. LUCAS. I am very glad the Senator from Nebraska has made that statement. It is only 3 o'clock, and in view of the Senator's statement, it seems to me that we can probably pass this bill yet this afternoon.

Mr. WHERRY. Perhaps so.

EMERGENCY RELIEF ASSISTANCE TO YUGOSLAVIA

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business, the bill (S. 3295) to amend the Railway Labor Act and to authorize agreements providing for union membership and agreements for deduction from the wages of carriers' employees for certain purposes, and under certain conditions, be temporarily laid aside, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 4234) to promote the foreign policy and provide for the defense and general welfare of the United States by furnishing emergency relief assistance to Yugoslavia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the bill by title.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (S. 4234) to promote the foreign policy and provide for the defense and general welfare of the United States by furnishing emergency relief assistance to Yugoslavia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Illinois?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4234) to promote the foreign policy and provide for the defense and general welfare of the United States by furnishing emergency relief assistance to Yugoslavia.

Mr. WHERRY. As I understand, the request of the majority leader was to lay aside temporarily the unfinished business?

Mr. LUCAS. The request was to lay aside temporarily the unfinished business and to proceed to the consideration of the Yugoslavia relief bill.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the bill under consideration would authorize relief to Yugoslavia because of the terrible drought which that country has suffered during the past year. Under the emergency powers which the President possesses $31,000,000 has already been provided for that purpose. Senate bill 4234 would authorize $38,000,000 more. Those who are familiar with the facts involved are strongly in favor of the passage of the measure. I shall read a brief statement dealing with the bill, after which I shall make some additional comments.

If any Senator 2 years ago had suggested that I would today be standing on the floor of the United States Senate advocating $38,000,000 for aid to Communist Yugoslavia, I should have called him to order. Yet today I support and urge the earliest possible enactment of S. 4234 because I believe, as do other members of the Foreign Relations Committee, that the security of the United States requires this action.

Woodrow Wilson in an address to the United States Senate in 1937 said:

> I am seeking only to face realities and to face them without soft concealment.

That is what I shall try to do in telling my colleagues as briefly as possible, why we must at this moment in history, give assistance to Yugoslavia—a country whose people we admire but whose government leaves much to be desired.

We must help Yugoslavia because it is the only state that once, under the domination of the Kremlin, has successfully defied the Kremlin. Since before the war, the Soviet Union has expanded its territories by every means conceivable. The roster of once free states, now captive, is long and depressing: Latvia, Lithuania, Estonia, Rumania, Hungary, Albania, Czechoslovakia, Poland, East Germany, and now China. Not one of these states is independent. Not one official of these states would dare make a decision different than that dictated by Moscow. Not a single one of these states that is a member of the United Nations would dare vote differently from the Soviet Union.

Yugoslavia was once a member of this extinguished list of independent states. While I have never had a good thing to say for a Communist or for communism, Marshal Tito is one Communist who knows when he has had enough. He had enough from the Kremlin when he found Yugoslavia invaded from the Soviet Union by military advisers, economic experts, and political henchmen, all of them ready to act for the good of the Soviet Union no matter what the consequences to Yugoslavia. He had enough when he realized that the Soviet brand of communism was but a shield for the Machiavellian imperialism of a Politburo seeking world domination no matter what the cost.

Now that the break between Tito and Stalin has come, it is in the interests of the United States to see that Marshal Tito is able to maintain his independence. If the economic blockade that Stalin imposed upon Yugoslavia, if satellite military moves on the borders of Yugoslavia, if the drought of last summer, if any of these things should endanger Yugoslav independence from the Soviet Union, it would hurt the cause of the free world.

We should never lose sight of the fact that Yugoslavia has the largest standing army in Europe, outside the Soviet Union. More than 30 divisions stand ready to defend that country from attack. The threat to Yugoslav independence comes not from the west, but from the east. The Yugoslavs know that. That is why they must maintain a large army ever ready to defend them from the Soviet bloc. We need to maintain that strength on the side of freedom.

The Foreign Relations Committee heard witnesses who told of the severity of the drought last summer in Yugoslavia. Other nations of the west, including Great Britain, are helping Yugoslavia meet the effects of that drought. I believe we must continue the help which the President began this fall while the Congress was in recess.

I want to make it crystal clear that my support of this legislation is because it will help to preserve an independent country from Soviet imperialism. I condemn what Tito has done to religion and to human freedoms in Yugoslavia, but in times like these we cannot demand perfection as a price for our assistance.

In that connection we wish to offer an amendment. I shall read the amendment before I conclude my remarks.

The legislation before the Senate sets forth certain conditions that must be met before we will give aid under this bill. Many of these conditions have already been met. Yugoslavia has agreed to give publicity to our aid. She is already performing on that promise. She must agree to make local funds available to us for use in administering the program, and, to the extent that Yugoslavia sells the goods we supply, she must make equivalent local currency available for such uses as we agree to, such as medical aid, relief for children, and similar projects.

Under the terms of this bill money will not be given to Yugoslavia. The dollars will be spent here in the United States for commodities most of which are surplus to our needs. Some 71 percent of the money will be used for buying commodities already in the hands of the Commodity Credit Corporation. There will be only a few items, such as seeds and rice, that will be purchased on the open market.

In conclusion, let me say that sometimes the best way to fight fire is with fire. We now have a Communist backfire burning in Yugoslavia. I want to keep that fire burning. I do not want to let it be quenched. I want Yugoslavia's insistence on independence from Moscow to stiffen the backbone of people throughout the world who see the terrible dangers of Soviet imperialism cloaked in the robes of international communism.

I hope very much that the Senate will give its overwhelming approval to this bill, and demonstrate once again our profound determination to meet the threat of communism in the world.

The amendment to which I have referred has not been acted upon by the committee, but it will be offered before the bill is voted on. It is proposed to add at the end of the bill a section which would provide:

Nothing in this act shall be interpreted as endorsing measures undertaken by the present Government of Yugoslavia which suppress or destroy religious, political, or economic liberty, and the Yugoslav Government shall be so notified when aid is furnished under this act.

That language has been approved by the Department of State, and I feel sure there can be no objection to it.

I very much hope that the Senate will pass the bill promptly, because it is extremely urgent that we act quickly. The President is deeply concerned, and those who are in responsible positions dealing with the subject urge its passage.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is it not true that should Russia decide to invade the western nations of Europe her natural, probable course would be through Yugoslavia?

Mr. CONNALLY. I cannot say that it would necessarily be the best course. It is one of the probable courses.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is one of the likely courses, at any rate?

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes; because she would supposedly have the aid of her satellites in the areas which border Yugoslavia. She already has masses of troops stationed in Hungary and in other satellite countries on the borders of Yugoslavia, as a threat against Yugoslavia to make it comply with the wishes of the Cominform.

Mr. McKELLAR. I wish to say to the Senator from Texas that, as he has announced, if anyone had told me a few months ago that I would be in favor of giving aid to Yugoslavia——

Mr. CONNALLY. Or to any Communist country.

Mr. McKELLAR. If anyone had told me that I would do it with respect to Yugoslavia or any other Communist country I am sure I would have objected very strenuously. I am utterly opposed to communism. I shall continue to oppose it. But under the conditions which now surround us, with threats of war all over the world, it seems to me that we must look to whatever other steps may be taken, and use every means to prevent the spread of war. I agree with the Senator's statement almost totally, if not quite totally.

I hope the Senate will pass this bill. So far as I am concerned, when the request comes before the Committee on Appropriations for an appropriation to carry out the purposes of the bill, I shall do everything I can to see that the appropriation is approved by that committee, and afterward by the Senate.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. STENNIS. Did the Senator say that some other fund had already been provided for this purpose?

Mr. CONNALLY. There is what is called an ad interim fund of only $31,000,000. It is explained in the report of the committee.

Mr. STENNIS. Has that all been spent?

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not know that it has all been spent, but it has been provided.

Mr. STENNIS. It is in process of being spent?

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes. It is estimated that this additional sum will be required to carry out the full program. The report of the committee gives the details as to the $31,000,000.

Mr. STENNIS. Does the Senator think that the additional sum of $38,000,000 will be sufficient to meet the present emergency?

Mr. CONNALLY. We think it will be sufficient until the next harvest. When the next harvest comes it will not be necessary to appropriate nearly so much, if anything. One of the most terrible droughts ever to visit Yugoslavia in all its history has devastated the food supplies of the country. There is great suffering in Yugoslavia even now.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. STENNIS. What is the attitude of Tito, or what is the attitude of the people of Yugoslavia, toward this aid?

Mr. CONNALLY. They want it because they are hungry. The want it because they want to eat. Tito and his people have shown an increasing leaning toward the west. There has been an increasing expression of their interest in the west rather than in the east. But if we let some of them starve, they will fall into the lap of Russia and break away from the west.

Mr. STENNIS. Were there any expressions before the committee from the people?

Mr. CONNALLY. We had nothing direct. In the Washington Post of this morning there is something which is pretty close to the people. Reference is made to a message from one of our diplomatic attachés who has been in Belgrade. It is on the front page of the Washington Post of this morning. Let me read from the front page of the Post:

THIRTY-TWO YUGOSLAV ARMY DIVISIONS HELD READY

NEW YORK, December 7.—R. Borden Reams, counselor at the United States Embassy in Belgrade, said today that anti-Cominform Yugoslavia had 32 army divisions available for immediate service.

Commenting on American aid to Marshal Tito's regime, Reams said:

"There isn't a better investment for us in the world today—dollar for dollar."

That answers the Senator's question. That is the view of Mr. Reams. He has been among the people. He states that there is not a better investment for us in the world today.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. STENNIS. I notice that it is provided in the bill that there shall be continuous publicity through the press, radio, and other available media in Yugoslavia, for the assistance given by the United States. That raises in my mind the question of just what the people there are being told now.

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not know what they are being told now, but it is being made clear to them what we are doing. I mentioned earlier in my remarks that they had already agreed to give full publicity to what we were doing. On November 10 Tito told Yugoslavia that no one would starve this winter because the United States was sending food to Yugoslavia. They have agreed to carry on a program of information to their people as to where the relief is coming from.

Mr. STENNIS. I thank the Senator. I think that is the important point in the whole program.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. MURRAY. After listening to the very persuasive statement of the Senator from Texas, it seems to me that we cannot fail to vote for this measure. However, I have been reading in the press of the very serious persecution and oppression of religion in Yugoslavia. I am wondering what the future attitude of that government is likely to be in reference to the religions which were or are being persecuted.

Mr. CONNALLY. I will say to the Senator that the testimony before the committee revealed that there is a swinging around on that question. This is the amendment which we propose to add to the bill:

Nothing in this act shall be interpreted as endorsing measures undertaken by the present Government of Yugoslavia which suppress or destroy religious, political, and economic liberty, and the Yugoslav Government shall be so notified when aid is furnished under this act.

That is an approach to the subject.

Mr. MURRAY. I thank the Senator.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I invite the Senator's attention to the fact that in subsection (b) of section 6 it is also provided that the aid will be terminated "whenever the Congress, by concurrent resolution of both Houses, finds termination is desirable."

Mr. CONNALLY. I invite the attention of the Senator from Montana to the fact that the Senator from Tennessee has just pointed out that the aid is terminable by means of a concurrent resolution of both Houses. So if there should be any abuse by Yugoslavia in regard to religious or civil liberties, we could immediately terminate the entire program.

Mr. MURRAY. That is a very wise provision.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. ELLENDER. I notice that this appropriation is for the continuation of emergency relief assistance to Yugoslavia.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator is correct.

Mr. ELLENDER. Will the Senator tell us how much aid has already been given to Yugoslavia, and in what form?

Mr. CONNALLY. I cannot tell the Senator how much of it has been spent, but a certain sum was made available. The Senator can obtain the information from the report.

Mr. ELLENDER. I should like to have the information in the RECORD. If the report is not going into the RECORD, I should like to have the information stated for the RECORD.

Mr. CONNALLY. On page 6 of the report are set forth the items already made available. I ask unanimous consent to have that statement printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. CONNALLY. Does that meet the wishes of the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. ELLENDER. I notice that according to the table, it seems to relate to the $31,400,000 already appropriated.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, the $31,400,000 is being provided as stopgap aid. It is largely transferred from the Export-Import Bank loan, and from ERP. The additional $38,000,000 makes a total of $69,400,000.

Mr. ELLENDER. I notice that. Will the Senator tell us about the $31,400,000? How much of that is borrowed from the Export-Import Bank?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I believe that $6,000,000 of a $15,000,000 credit has been transferred for this purpose.

Mr. CONNALLY. The details are set forth on page 5 of the report.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. There is a transfer from the authority under the Mutual Defense Assistance Act. Part of the money is transferred from that authority.

Mr. ELLENDER. I was not present to listen to the entire discussion by the distinguished Senator from Texas. I am wondering if there would be any objection to placing the entire report in the RECORD.

Mr. CONNALLY. None at all.

Mr. ELLENDER. I ask unanimous consent that the entire report accompanying the bill be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. CONNALLY. Does the Senator wish the entire report printed?

Mr. ELLENDER. I think it would be advisable.

Mr. CONNALLY. I have no objection.

There being no objection, the report, No. 2588, was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, having had under consideration a proposal to promote the foreign policy and provide for the defense and general welfare of the United States by furnishing emergency relief assistance to Yugoslavia, reports S. 4234, and recommends that it do pass.

1. MAIN PURPOSE OF THE BILL

This bill authorizes the appropriation of not to exceed $38,000,000, to the President to enable the United States to provide emergency relief assistance to Yugoslavia. This assistance, most of which will be in the form of food, is being provided in order to assist the Yugoslav people to avoid economic havoc arising out of unusual drought conditions during 1950 and thereby to maintain their independence from the Soviet Union which can be expected to do its utmost to encourage the disintegration of an independent Yugoslavia.

Although this bill calls for aid to a Communist Yugoslavia which engages in many practices that the free peoples of the world do not approve, the interests of the United States, the free world, and Yugoslavia coincide at this moment in history. Those interests coincide because of a common desire to prevent aggression, to stem the tide of Soviet imperialism wherever it may occur, and in this instance, in Yugoslavia in particular.

2. COMMITTEE ACTION

On December 4, 1950, the Committee on Foreign Relations heard witnesses in support of the recommendation of the President that the Congress enact legislation authorizing further United States assistance to meet the emergency created by the food shortage in Yugoslavia. The committee heard Mr. George W. Perkins, Assistant Secretary of State; Mr. John J. Haggerty, United States agricultural attaché in Belgrade; and Mr. Stanley Andrews, Director, Office of Foreign Agricultural Relations, Department of Agriculture. These witnesses discussed drought conditions in Yugoslavia and the political implications of the proposed aid.

On December 5, the committee heard Gen. Omar N. Bradley, chairman, Joint Chiefs of Staff, testify in executive session in support of this legislation.

On December 6, 1950, the committee voted to report S. 4234 favorably to the Senate.

3. THE NEED FOR AID

The Soviet Yugoslav dispute: In order to assess the need for aid to Yugoslavia at this time and to see how giving that aid will be in the interest of the United States, one must examine the nature and extent of the break between Yugoslavia and the Soviet Union in 1948.

Prior to early 1948 the Yugoslav regime was, as one reporter wrote: "The toast of Moscow as the Soviet Union's lustiest offspring. * * *" It was the biggest and in many respects the most vocal of the Soviet satellites. Its representatives echoed the Soviet line from the Danube to the United Nations. The headquarters of the Cominform (the Communist Information Bureau consisting of the Communist's parties of various states), was in Belgrade.

Then came the break. During March, April, and May of 1948, Tito and Stalin in several exchanges of notes revealed fundamental differences between the Communist leaders of the Soviet Union and those of Yugoslavia.

In a note to Tito the Communist Party of the U. S. S. R. reminded him of Trotsky and his fate. "When he decided to declare war on the CPSU (Communist Party of the Soviet Union)," said the note, "Trotsky also started with accusations of the CPSU as degenerate, as suffering from the limitations inherent in the narrow nationalism of great powers." The note added significantly, and perhaps as a warning, "We think that the political career of Trotsky is quite instructive." It will be recalled that Trotsky was assassinated in Mexico City where he was living in enforced exile.

A Cominform communiqué of June 28, 1948, read Tito's Communist Party out of the iron curtain in these words:

"The information bureau unanimously concludes that by their antiparty and anti-Soviet views, incompatible with Marxism-Leninism, by their whole attitude and their refusal to attend the meeting of the information bureau, the leaders of the Communist Party of Yugoslavia have placed themselves in opposition to the Communist Parties affiliated to the information bureau, have taken the path of seceding from the united Socialist front against imperialism, have taken the path of betraying the cause of international solidarity of the working people, and have taken up a position of nationalism."

Permanence of split between Soviet Union and Yugoslavia.—Assistant Secretary of State George Perkins in commenting to the committee on this break between the Soviet Union and Yugoslavia said:

"I know of no convincing evidence that the split between the government of Marshal Tito and the Kremlin is not genuine and is not permanent. Both the Marshal and the Kremlin have publicly proclaimed the irrevocability of the split and certainly there is nothing in Communist doctrine nor practice that I know of which would permit the Kremlin to take Marshal Tito back into the fold on any terms short of the grave."

The voting record of the Yugoslav delegation in the United Nations indicates the seriousness of the break. Prior to 1948 Yugoslavia always voted with the Soviet Union. Since then, Yugoslavia has shown increasing independence of the Soviet Union and on many occasions has taken positions in vigorous opposition. The Soviet imperialist attack on Korea seemed to be the occasion for an unqualified and vigorous stand by Yugoslavia against Soviet imperialism.

In a statement on September 8, 1950, the Yugoslav Minister for Foreign Affairs, Mr. Kardelj, said:

"When considering the situation in Korea, the people of Yugoslavia cannot but do so in the light of the fact that for 3 years the Government of the Cominform, led by the Government of the Soviet Union, have been carrying on a violently aggressive campaign against Socialist Yugoslavia, precisely because the working people of Yugoslavia maintains its right to make its own decisions on its own soil. This aggressive policy, against which Socialist Yugoslavia has reacted very firmly, throws light on the policy pursued by its organizers in other parts of the world. It leaves no doubt that those who are still pursuing an aggressive and anti-Socialist policy toward Yugoslavia—a policy aimed at gaining supremacy for themselves—cannot be pursuing a different policy, a democratic and Socialist policy, a policy of peace and of the equality and brotherhood of all peoples, in other parts of the world. For a long time, the policy of the leaders of the Cominform has not coincided with the interests of the progress of mankind, and it is therefore harmful to all progressive and liberating movements which become its instruments.

"All their cries of loyalty to the cause of peace, and their accusations that others are aggressors will not suffice to cloak their share of responsibility for the Korean War and for the way in which they are endangering the peace of the world as a whole."

The attitude of the Yugoslav Government toward the west has changed for the better. Yugoslavia is now returning Greek children abducted during hostilities with Greece. Greece and Yugoslavia are renewing diplomatic relations. Yugoslavia is permitting people with Yugoslav nationality as well as American nationality to return to the United States if they wish. Relations between Italy and Yugoslavia have improved and Trieste is not the tinder box that it was 2 years ago. Relations between Austria and Yugoslavia have likewise been improving.

While the repressive measures of Tito toward the Yugoslav people and religious freedom find no defense in the United States, there have been indications recently that the requirements of support from the west may mean greater freedom for the people of Yugoslavia.

Economic warfare: Since 1948, the Soviet's war of nerves on Yugoslavia has been unremitting. It has been implemented by an economic boycott that has effectively interdicted trade between Yugoslavia and the iron curtain countries. In 1947, 49.1 percent of Yugoslavia's exports went to the Soviet bloc; in 1949, only 14.4 percent. The picture is much the same for imports. In 1947, 51.9 percent of Yugoslav imports came from the Soviet Union and the satellites; by 1949 imports from the Soviet states accounted for only 13.4 percent of Yugoslavia's total imports. These figures show the terrific impact of the Soviet break upon the economy of Yugoslavia. Within 2 years it was necessary for Yugoslavia to reorientate her foreign trade from the east to the west. New markets had to be found for Yugoslav products; new sources of raw materials sought and means developed to pay for them.

The economic impact on Yugoslavia of this boycott as well as military moves by her satellite neighbors, and finally the show of Communist imperialist force in far-off Korea, all combined to put the Tito regime in a most precarious position—a position where Soviet Communists by subversion, coercion, or even military force might have brought Yugoslavia back into the Soviet fold.

The drought: Then came the drought. After heavy rains in February 1950, March showed rainfall of 63 percent of a 15-year average; April 84 percent of average; May 46 percent; June 21 percent; July 55 percent; August 12 percent; and September 37 percent. By then, what crops there were, were being harvested. The American agricultural attaché, Mr. John J. Haggerty, who during the past 2 years has traveled some 25,000 miles in Yugoslavia, reported that the drought effects were devastating. Corn failed to mature; wheat harvests were off.

The percentages in 1950 of 1947–49 average of certain commodities produced in Yugoslavia are as follows:

	Percent
Corn	59
Wheat	88
Rye	83
Barley	87
Oats	79
Rice	100
Vegetables and melons	57
Potatoes	67
Edible fats	88
Sugar	108
Beans	72
Peas	57

These figures do not tell the whole story, Yugoslavia normally has food enough to export and thereby acquire foreign exchange with which to buy needed imports. One of the most telling effects of the drought was to reduce the ability of the Yugoslav people to import needed materials.

4. THE STOPGAP PROGRAM

During the summer months of 1950 it became apparent to American observers in Yugoslavia that that country was going to have great difficulty in avoiding economic collapse because of the drought. Economic collapse could only mean eventual resubjugation to Soviet imperialism. Nothing would have suited the Soviet better. Yugoslavia would then have become the first-class example of what happens to satellite states with nerve enough to break out of the Soviet orbit.

On October 20, 1950, the Yugoslav Government formally requested American assistance to meet the effects of the drought. That Government said it "has established by a careful examination of the damage incurred, that in spite of all efforts and an extreme limitation of the consumption, there still remains a loss amounting to $105,000,000 that can be covered solely by extraordinary assistance from abroad."

After a careful examination of reports on conditions in Yugoslavia supplemented by eye-witness information from our agricultural attaché in Belgrade, and confirmed by American newspapermen, businessmen, and congressional visitors, the United States Government told the Yugoslav Government that it was prepared to take immediate steps to provide emergency foodstuffs to the people of that country. Immediate action was necessary so that maximum distribution could be undertaken before winter interfered with an inadequate transportation system. Accordingly, after informing certain congressional leaders of the conditions in Yugoslavia that made it necessary in our national interest to assist Yugoslavia, the President took steps to send foodstuffs to that country under existing authority. The following table indicates the source and nature of the commodities being shipped under the stopgap program:

Yugoslav emergency food program—stopgap program

Commodity	ECA (millions of dollars)	MDAP (millions of dollars)	Export-Import Bank (millions of dollars)	Total (millions of dollars)
Flour	[1] 12.2 [2] (3.3)	3.6		15.8

Barley		1.7		1.7

Ocean transport		2.0	[5] .4	2.4
Total	12.2 (3.3)	13.6	5.6 (15.3)	[4] 31.4 (18.6)

[1] Includes ocean transport costs of replacement wheat to Italy and Germany. In the event that ECA is unable to supply the full 110,000 tons of flour, the deficiency will be made up by a drawing on MDA funds up to the extent of $16 million.

[2] Estimated subsidy under wheat agreement on wheat replacement by ECA to Italy and Germany at current prices using 80% extraction rate.

[3] Difference between USDA, CCC, investment cost and actual sales price at special, low, FAO price.

[4] Difference between USDA, CCC, investment or acquisition cost and charge to program.

[5] Assuming canned meat, dried eggs, some lard, and one-half of the dried beans shipped in Yugoslav vessels.

Authority for stopgap aid: According to information presented by the Department of State:

"The measures taken under this program (the stopgap program) were of a special nature and utilized existing legislative authority on an emergency basis for purposes not specifically contemplated when the laws in question were being considered by Congress."

The Department further described the authority for the stopgap program as follows:

"(a) The Export-Import Bank had already approved a $15,000,000 credit to Yugoslavia for export development programs. It was decided, however, to divert approximately $6,000,000 of this credit in order to start food shipments immediately. In view of the fact that no appropriations for raw materials are being requested in the present program, it is considered necessary to utilize the remainder of the $15,000,000 credit for raw materials, as well as spare parts and equipment, essential for the maintenance of the Yugoslav export industries.

"(b) The Economic Cooperation Act authorizes shipments of food to the European countries. It also recognizes that permission may be given for transfers of material purchased with ERP funds, or similar materials, from participating countries to third countries. This authority was drawn upon to have flour shipped from Germany and Italy on the understanding that it would be replaced with wheat shipped from the United States to those countries. This unusual measure, which assists in the maintenance of stability of Yugoslavia, contributes to the over-all purposes of the European recovery program and is consistent with the established policy of encouraging exports by participating countries. Its prime purpose, however, is not one of the purposes of the programs contemplated when the ERP was last before Congress, and requires the participation of third countries in a way that makes its continuation undesirable.

"(c) Section 408 (c) of the Mutual Defense Assistance Act permits the transfer of materials to European countries, other than those in the North Atlantic Treaty, under certain specified emergency conditions. These conditions were clearly present in the case of Yugoslavia, and therefore it was decided to provide foodstuffs to Yugoslavia only, however, in those quantities needed by the Yugoslav military forces.

"Yugoslavia is not a member of the Organization for European Economic Cooperation, and therefore is not eligible for direct ERP aid. Up to now Yugoslavia has not indicated a willingness to become a member of the OEEC and assume the responsibilities under which it could qualify as a participating country and it is not considered advisable at this time to attempt to persuade it to do so. Similarly, Yugoslavia is not a party to the North Atlantic Treaty, and it is not expected to become a party.

"Consequently, it is appropriate and necessary, in view of the above considerations, to furnish such assistance to Yugoslavia, as will contribute to our purposes in the maintenance of peace, by means of special legislation for that end rather than by means of further emergency use of legislative authority not specifically intended to cover the contingencies which have arisen in connection with Yugoslavia."

5. THE PROPOSED PROGRAM

On November 29, 1950, the President recommended that Congress appropriate $38,000,000 for the purchase of commodities to give Yugoslavia for emergency relief. The President's message explained that this amount would be in addition to the $31,400,000 supplied on existing authority during the stopgap program. The total expenditures for commodities which would be supplied from the United States would be $69,400,000.

The distribution of the proposed $38,000,000, as well as the stopgap program of $31,400,000, among commodities, is as follows:

Emergency aid to Yugoslavia

Commodity	Yugoslav request, market value (million dollars)	Total proposed program, estimated program expenditures (million dollars)	Stopgap program, estimated program expenditures (million dollars)	Authorization request, market value and estimated program expenditures (million dollars)
Wheat	14.1	-------	-------	-------

Ocean transportation	-------	6.0	2.4	3.6
Total	-------	69.4	31.4	38.0

Use of surplus supplies: Witnesses before the committeee testified that although the funds actually to be spent on this program would total $69,400,000, the market value of the foodstuffs supplied would be about $75,000,000. About 71 percent of the foodstuffs in the stopgap and the proposed program are in the stocks of the Commodity Credit Corporation. The only items that would be purchased in the open market are expected to be flour, lard, and rice and seeds.

6. ADMINISTRATION OF PROGRAM

Since this is an emergency-relief program that will come to an end with the crop harvest in the spring and summer of 1951, it was not deemed advisable to create a complicated administrative mechanism for operation of the program. The draft bill provides (sec. 4) that the President may transfer aid funds to any department or agency of the executive branch of the Government for expenditure under the terms of the law. It is the intention of the executive branch to continue to operate the program authorized by this legislation in much the same way as the stopgap program has been administered. That means the principal operating responsibility in the United States will be in the Department of State. The actual procurement and shipment of aid will be carried on by existing procurement agencies, principally the CCC and the Department of Agriculture.

Responsibility at the Belgrade end of the operation will be in the hands of the American Ambassador to Yugoslavia. He will have, with the assistance of a small staff recruited for this purpose, responsibility for seeing that the conditions of aid set forth in section 3 of the bill, and such other conditions as the President finds desirable and appropriate, are met by the Yugoslav Government.

Since the stopgap program has been quickly and efficiently administered by existing agencies with existing personnel, the committee saw no reason to change that setup.

7. CONDITIONS OF AID

As indicated earlier, the motivation for aid to Yugoslavia, while partly humanitarian, is dictated largely by the coincidence in the national interests of the United States and Yugoslavia in maintaining the independence of Yugoslavia. Nevertheless, the legislation sets forth certain minimum conditions which are to be satisfied before any aid authorized is made available to Yugoslavia. Those conditions are set forth in section 3 of the bill. They follow in a general way the pattern of other aid legislation passed by the Congress during recent years.

Publicity: Provision is made that "full and continuous publicity" is to be given by Yugoslavia to the aid furnished by the United States and that the Yugoslav Government must permit observers to see and report on the distribution of aid made available under the act. The arrival of the first shipment in the stopgap program received extensive press and radio coverage in Yugoslavia.

Equitable distribution: Yugoslavia is required to agree to make equitable distribution of the commodities supplied without discrimination as to race, color, or political or religious belief."

Local currency: The legislation also requires Yugoslavia to make local currency available in amounts sufficient to meet the local expenses incurred by the United States in connection with the aid furnished. At the suggestion of the committee, provision was also made that, to the extent the Government of Yugoslavia sells commodities furnished by the United States, it is to provide an equivalent amount of local currency to be available for such purposes as the United States and Yugoslavia may agree upon. Mention is made of the possibility of using such sums for relief to needy persons and children and for charitable or medical purposes.

Finally, the President is authorized to require from Yugoslavia such other undertakings as he finds desirable and appropriate as conditions of aid.

8. OTHER AID FOR YUGOSLAVIA

The Yugoslav Government has tightened its belt. It is not relying solely on what other governments can do to help it. Orders have been issued limiting domestic use of scarce foodstuffs and imported items. Severe criminal penalties are provided for persons who disobey those orders. On September 27, 1950, an order was issued with a preamble as follows:

"On account of the reduction in the yield of agricultural products, caused by drought, and in order to insure food for the population, preserve the livestock, find and successfully carry out the economic and other plans in the coming year, all competent government agencies are obligated to undertake special measures for the realization of these tasks, etc."

The Italian and German Governments assisted the stopgap program by sending food grains and sugar to Yugoslavia. The United Kingdom has offered a credit of £3,000,000 for Yugoslavia to purchase food and consumer goods. Other countries in the North Atlantic area which are vitally concerned with the continued independence of Yugoslavia are considering what steps they can take to give assistance.

9. THE POLITICAL IMPLICATIONS OF THE PROBLEM

The President in his message to Congress set forth the policy of this Government with respect to Yugoslavia in these words:

"Since the break between the Kremlin and Yugoslavia, it has been the policy of this Government to assist Yugoslavia to maintain its independence. The continued independence of Yugoslavia is of great importance to the security of the United States and its partners in the North Atlantic Organization, and to all nations associated with them in their common defense against the threat of Soviet aggression."

The United States Government is unalterably opposed to international communism wherever it exists and therefore would like to see the people of Yugoslavia free to choose their own political institutions. While it may seem then that the United States should not give assistance to the Communist Government of Yugoslavia, the fact is that help is being given Yugoslavia because Yugoslavia puts independence from Communist imperialism ahead of subservience to international communism. Tito espouses nationalist communism rather than imperialist communism, which seeks to bind all Communists to the Kremlin. Soviet imperialist communism seeks to rob all states of their independence. Titoism seeks the independence of Communist states from Soviet dictatorship.

The Yugoslav break with the Soviet bloc was a decided setback to Soviet expansionism. The western powers must exploit this break, not because they want to help communism in Yugoslavia, but because they want to encourage other Communist states to throw off the yoke of the Kremlin and to choose a free government. Yugoslavia may not be a recruit for democracy, but it is a recruit for the principle of independence.

10. THE MILITARY IMPLICATIONS OF THE PROGRAM

On November 20, 1950, a United States note to the Yugoslav Deputy Minister of Foreign Affairs set forth the agreed basis whereby certain funds from the Mutual Defense Assistance Act were to be made available as a part of the stopgap program for assistance to the military forces of Yugoslavia. That note reads in part as follows:

"Our two Governments are both desirous of fostering international peace and security within the framework of the Charter of the United Nations through measures which will further the ability of nations dedicated to the purposes and principles of the Charter to participate effectively in arrangements for individual and collective self-defense in support of those purposes and principles.

"Accordingly, I am pleased to inform you that my Government is prepared, pursuant to the provisions of Public Law 329, Eighty-first Congress, as amended, to supply assistance in aid of food requirements of the armed forces of your Government on the following mutually agreed basis that:

"(1) Your Government will use the assistance exclusively for the purpose for which it is furnished, namely, in furtherance of the purposes of the Charter of the United Nations, to prevent the weakening of the defenses of the Federal People's Republic of Yugoslavia.

"(2) That your Government agrees not to transfer to any other nation the assistance furnished pursuant to this agreement without the prior consent of this Government.

"(3) That your Government will provide the United States with reciprocal assistance by continuing to facilitate the production and transfer to the United States, in such quantities and upon such terms and conditions as may be agreed on, of raw and semiprocessed materials required by the United States as a result of deficiencies or potential deficiencies in its own resources and which may be available in Yugoslavia. Arrangements for such transfers shall give due regard to requirements for domestic use and commercial export of Yugoslavia.

"(4) That your Government is prepared to make available to the Government of the United States of America dinars for the use of the United States of America for any administrative expenditures within Yugoslavia in connection with assistance furnished by the United States of America to Yugoslavia arising out of this agreement. Our two Governments will at the appropriate time initiate discussion with a view to determining the amount of such dinars and to agree upon arrangements for the furnishing of such dinars."

Yugoslav military strength

The Yugoslav Army of more than 30 divisions at this time is the largest army in western Europe outside of the Soviet Union. Its troops established their fighting ability during the war with Germany. Their forces plus those of other independent states of southeast Europe would, if the Soviet Union should use force to wreak its will on western Europe, constitute a bastion of strength. To fail at this time to help any one of these states to retain its independence would be to overlook a source of strength for the defense of the free world which western Europe and the United States could ill afford to lose.

11. SUMMARY OF REASONS FOR AIDING YUGOSLAVIA

1. The Government of Yugoslavia has successfully broken away from the domination of the Kremlin. The rift between the Communist regimes of Moscow and Belgrade seems to be deep and unbridgeable.

2. Drought conditions in Yugoslavia during the past year in combination with economic difficulties arising from the break with the Soviet bloc, have threatened the economic collapse of Yugoslavia.

3. The economic collapse of Yugoslavia would presage overthrow of the Tito government and the enforced return of that country to the Soviet fold.

4. It is in the interests of the United States and the free nations of the world to assist any state in maintaining its independence, particularly from the domination of Moscow.

5. The strength of the Yugoslav Army is such that it might well be a crucial factor in the defense of western Europe in the event of Soviet aggression.

6. The United States has always maintained that nations should be free to determine their own form of government even though the United States may not like that form of government. Soviet imperialism has always sought to impose its form of government and its direction on independent states whenever possible. Assistance to Yugoslavia will assist her in maintaining that independence.

It is the opinion of the Committee on Foreign Relations that the United States Government should provide emergency aid to Yugoslavia to enable that country to meet food shortages arising out of the 1950 drought and thereby stave off the threat of Soviet imperialism.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to amendment.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Texas yield for a question?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. BREWSTER. There seems to be rather a strain in the authority, in taking this form of action in connection with the Export-Import Bank. Did the committee go into that question?

Mr. CONNALLY. A strain in the authority?

Mr. BREWSTER. Yes; that it was somewhat beyond the contemplated scope of the Export-Import Bank's authority. Has there been any precedent for giving aid of this character by the Export-Import Bank?

Mr. CONNALLY. It is a loan, is it not?

Mr. BREWSTER. I do not understand it is.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Export-Import Bank makes loans.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. The committee took testimony as to that. It was a transaction between the Export-Import Bank and Yugoslavia. The bank had already approved a $15,000,000 credit to Yugoslavia, and agreed that $6,000,000 could be diverted to the purchase of food rather than some kind of raw material.

Mr. BREWSTER. Is there any precedent for that precise type of loan by the Export-Import Bank?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. We had nothing to do with that. We had no testimony as to that point, to my knowledge.

Mr. BREWSTER. In cases of mumutual-defense aid to other countries funds have been diverted, but it is true, is it not, that Yugoslavia is not a member of any of the groups contemplated?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. That is true. But there was a reservation in the act for a certain percentage of the aid granted to be used in emergency conditions, which was not allocated for Yugoslavia. It was my understanding that when we passed the act we certainly anticipated it could be used, for example, in Austria, which was not a party to the treaty.

Mr. BREWSTER. Has Yugoslavia undertaken any of the obligations associated with any of the countries that are parties to either the mutual-defense agreement or the North Atlantic Pact?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. No.

Mr. BREWSTER. If we are relying upon this military aid, why do we not have some kind of obligation on their part that they will come to our aid if we need aid? I think it is about time we should find whether we can secure any help from these people.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Personally I would say it was premature to make that a matter of any public negotiation.

Mr. BREWSTER. We have with respect to all the other countries, have we not?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. There is a great difference.

Mr. BREWSTER. And even they are slow in coming to our aid when we need it now. But in this case we have not even an obligation on the part of Yugoslavia.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I will have to reclaim the floor. We could not afford, in granting aid to feed hungry people, to provide that the price of our aid is that the recipients must fight with us. That will follow. If we were to make such a provision we would be branded throughout the world as having bribed Yugoslavia.

Mr. BREWSTER. Is it not about time that we obtain a little something in return for our "bribes?" I think the American people are coming to wonder when some of these countries are going to begin to pay off when we need them.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is very difficult.

Mr. BREWSTER. Is it not true that the first installment of this aid of food was to go to feed the army, not the hungry people? Is that not true?

Mr. CONNALLY. The army is hungry just like everybody else.

Mr. BREWSTER. Does the Senator think the army is as hungry as the poor peasants?

Mr. CONNALLY. I have not been in Yugoslavia recently. I was there some years ago. If the Senator will read the committee report I believe he will be satisfied. And he can read the debate as it will be printed in the RECORD in the morning.

Mr. BREWSTER. I have read the report. I have not seen the printed testimony before the committee. I understand it is not available.

Mr. CONNALLY. I shall read from the report what the State Department says. The report says:

Authority for stopgap aid: According to information presented by the Department of State:

"The measures taken under this program (the stopgap program) were of a special nature and utilized existing legislative authority on an emergency basis for purposes not specifically contemplated when the laws in question were being considered by Congress."

Mr. BREWSTER. Does that mean that it was outside the contemplation of the act?

Mr. CONNALLY. Well, it was not in view. It may have been outside. I read further from the report:

The Department further described the authority for the stopgap program as follows:

"(a) The Export-Import Bank had already approved"—

Now if the Senator from Maine will pay heed—

"The Export-Import Bank had already approved a $15,000,000 credit to Yugoslavia for export development programs."

That is what the Senator from Arkansas was referring to. He referred to the fact that the Export-Import Bank had already approved the credit of $15,000,000.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Yes.

Mr. BREWSTER. For development purposes, which is the contemplation of the Export-Import Bank. What I asked was if there was any precedent for aid of this character being extended by the Export-Import Bank.

Mr. CONNALLY. There is often no precedents for anything that happens.

Mr. BREWSTER. We are establishing a precedent now for the Export-Import Bank to start a program of this character which is certainly utterly outside of anything that was contemplated.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator talks about precedent. Everything has got to happen once. It has got to happen once before it is a precedent.

Mr. BREWSTER. That does not prove it is good.

Mr. CONNALLY. We may be making a precedent. I do not have to have a precedent for everything I do. I should like to make some more precedents.

Mr. BREWSTER. Let us have a precedent which gets us a little help from somewhere. Would not such a precedent be a good one?

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes, of course, it would. We will get it in due time.

Mr. BREWSTER. The time is pretty late.

Mr. CONNALLY. The question is, Are they able to do it? Does the Senator want a crippled man to lift him over the fence?

Let me read further:

"It was decided, however, to divert approximately $6,000,000 of this credit in order to start food shipments immediately."

The bank has already approved a credit of $15,000,000.

Mr. BREWSTER. They are going to divert a part of it.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me read this sentence.

"It was decided, however, to divert approximately $6,000,000 of this credit in order to start food shipments immediately."

The concern was with starvation. Food was needed. The bank saw an opportunity temporarily to divert a part of the credit which had already been approved, to be used for food to save starving people. A brief moment ago the Senator from Maine was appealing for the poor peasants who were hungry and starving, yet he does not want to give them anything except to set aside $6,000.000.

Mr. BREWSTER. If the Senator from Texas will permit me, there is nothing to indicate that anybody in Yugoslavia will do any starving in the next few months. If the Senator will read his own records and his own reports showing the production of Yugoslavia he will find that it is perfectly evident that there is no occasion whatsoever for starvation now or for the next 3 or 4 months.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SMITH of North Carolina in the chair). Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I should like to say that the last statement by the Senator from Maine is entirely without any foundation whatever. The evidence before the committee was that Yugoslavia has suffered the most serious drought in her history. We had our own agricultural attaché there, who impressed the committee as being an extremely able gentleman. Everyone had that impression. He had gone out and personally talked to the people. He happens to be one who can talk to the people. He went all over Yugoslavia. He said the present food shortage situation is the most serious they have ever faced. The Senator is entirely mistaken if he believes Yugoslavia is not faced with a serious food shortage immediately.

I should like to draw the Senator's attention to two facts. The Senator said that nothing is agreed to by the Yugoslavs. I draw his attention to page 9 of the report, at the bottom thereof. There he will find several agreements.

Mr. BREWSTER. Yes. Everything except——

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, may we have the regular order?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. If the Senator thinks that in all agreements of this kind every factor we expect to come about must be set down in black and white, I think he is simply unrealistic about the ways of international relations, because here is a country which is struggling for its existence, separate from Russia, and the fact that they have already made the break, that they have already broken away from Russia, that they have 30 military divisions, and that they exist separate from Russian domination, is sufficient to warrant the statement that was made here a moment ago that this would be the best investment of our money that we could make. They do not have to fight to be worth every bit of this.

General Bradley and others advised us that the mere existence of 30 divisions on the flank of Russia is worth a great deal to us, whether they ever fight anybody or not. But they are there, ready and able to fight if they are disturbed. It is not a part of this agreement that they agree to attack anybody. But what is important to us is that they be maintained in an independent posture and be able to fight. That is sufficient justification. I certainly do not think we ought to even request that they agree to attack anybody. We do not know whom we are going to attack. Nobody knows what the future will bring. But it is extremely important that they be maintained as an independent country—independent I mean of Russia.

Before I conclude, I should like to say that the authority under the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949 is set forth on page 15 of the hearings. If the Senator from Maine is interested in it, he will find that there is specific authority for the use of 10 percent of the fund appropriated for aid there for just such an emergency.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, allow me in conclusion to make a statement in reply to the interrogatory of the Senator from Maine, "What are we going to get out of this? How much shall be placed on the barrel head? What are we going to get?" and so on. General Bradley was before our committee and he testified strongly in favor of the bill on the very grounds pointed out by the Senator from Arkansas. There is not involved any direct promise by Yugoslavia to fight when we fight. But the mere existence of 32 divisions, armed and equipped, in that area which would no doubt be a vulnerable area otherwise, is a great guaranty, it is a great assurance, it is a great security against invasions by Communist forces from Russia or elsewhere.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. BREWSTER. To what extent did the committee take evidence from General Bradley and others as to the equipment of these divisions?

Mr. CONNALLY. We had evidence on the subject, and it ought to be available to the Senator from Maine, because somebody in the committee gave out something about it, and it is published in the newspapers in extenso. General Bradley had to complain that he could not testify freely before a committee, because what he said would be placarded on the highways and byways on the following day.

Mr. BREWSTER. Is the information available to the Senate, on which this was predicated?

Mr. CONNALLY. On which what was predicated?

Mr. BREWSTER. The equipment of these divisions.

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes; we had testimony on that.

Mr. BREWSTER. Is the printed evidence available to the Senate?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. No; it was in executive session.

Mr. BREWSTER. It is not available, then.

Mr. CONNALLY. We have it in the committee. If the Senator is interested he can read it.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. It is not for publication.

Mr. CONNALLY. No; it is not for publication.

Mr. BREWSTER. Am I to understand that the committee was satisfied that these divisions were something more than skeletons?

Mr. CONNALLY. Absolutely.

Mr. BREWSTER. Something more than inadequately equipped?

Mr. CONNALLY. Absolutely they are not inadequately equipped.

The committee was satisfied and reported the bill to the Senate. It is up to the Senate to decide whether it wishes to pass the bill or to reject it. I have done all I could along these lines.

I submit that the bill is a wise and courageous measure not only for humanitarian purposes but for our own defense and security and to encourage those in that area who disagree with communism to stand up and take a position alongside the western nations who stand for liberty and freedom.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. What is the total amount of appropriations that will be forthcoming if this measure is passed?

Mr. CONNALLY. Does the Senator mean the $31,000,000 which has already been authorized?

Mr. WHERRY. The measure now before us is an authorization, I take it, for a further sum.

Mr. CONNALLY. This measure carries an authorization of $38,000,000; in addition to $31,000,000 which has been authorized or directed or diverted from other funds. However, the authorization provided in the pending measure is $38,000,000.

Mr. WHERRY. In order that I may understand the amount of the authorization proposed, let me say that I understand that the amount which already has been spent is authorized under the 10-percent clause of the Mutual Defense Assistance Act. I refer to the provision of that act with respect to emergencies.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. No; a part of it is diverted from an Export-Import Bank loan which already has been granted. Ten percent of the amount is authorized under section 408 (c) of the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949. Does the Senator wish me to read that section?

Mr. WHERRY. No; I simply wish to have the authority clearly in the minds of those of us who will have to vote on this matter, in order to justify the making of the remainder of the appropriation. I know that approximately $6,000,000 which has been used has been taken from the Export-Import Bank loan for which authority already has been provided.

A short time ago, in the course of the colloquy between the Senator from Texas and the Senator from Maine, the Senator from Texas referred to the authorization under the Mutual Defense Assistance Act. How much money was used in that connection?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Thirteen million six hundred thousand dollars and twelve million two hundred thousand dollars under the ECA Act. Wheat is one commodity which has been provided. For example, I believe that Germany and Italy have agreed that the wheat they already have can be used for this purpose.

Mr. CONNALLY. I understand that the Administrator of ECA has authority to allocate those funds.

Mr. WHERRY. The purpose was to get food to Yugoslavia expeditiously, as I understand. Under the ECA Act, Germany and Italy were entitled to certain funds, and I understand that the necessary funds for aid to Yugoslavia have been borrowed from the funds available for Germany and Italy, and have been used for the purchase of flour which has been sent to Yugoslavia.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. That is correct.

Mr. WHERRY. Does the authority had by the ECA permit the use of that flour for shipment to Yugoslavia?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I understand that it does.

Mr. WHERRY. In what way?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. The ECA aid was made available under sections 111 and 115 of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1948, as amended.

Mr. WHERRY. What is that provision? When we have that information, we shall have a statement of the entire authority for this matter.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Administrator of ECA has the widest authority in respect to allocations and reallocations.

Mr. WHERRY. Yes. I am simply asking about the authority to extend that aid to Yugoslavia. Is that set forth in the report?

Mr. CONNALLY. Yugoslavia is not mentioned in the ECA Act, but that act gives the Administrator wide authority.

Mr. WHERRY. I know that. However, I should like very much to have the RECORD show, if possible, upon what the ECA relied for that authority. When that authority is set forth in the RECORD, that point will be cleared up.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I did not happen to place that section verbatim in the report, but I do happen to have before me the verbatim section of the Mutual Defense Assistance Act.

Mr. WHERRY. I hope the Senator will put in the RECORD, first, an explanation of the approximately $6,000,000 coming from the Export-Import Bank, and will explain, in that connection, that they have operated under authority to use it; second, that under the Mutual Defense Assistance Act they have had so much money, which has been authorized, and under that authorization they have extended aid.

I know that under the ECA Act there have been broad powers to make transfers. However, speaking for myself, let me say that I did not know that they could extend the aid to any country outside of the 16 countries mentioned. Perhaps that could be done; I simply do not recall it. However, if there is authority for that, I wish the Senator would point it out.

Then we come down to the authorization which it is proposed to make now. I understand that the authorization is proposed to be made in the amount of $38,000,000; and that authorization, if made by the Senate, will be placed before the Appropriations Committee as a justification for a subsequent appropriation.

Are not those the approximate mechanics of this matter?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. That is right.

Mr. McKELLAR. I hope the members of the Foreign Relations Committee will give the Appropriations Committee that information, because it will make it very much easier to get the money appropriated if those facts are before us.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the distinguished Senator from Texas yield further? I do not wish to detain him.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is quite all right; I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I wish to ask the Senator from Arkansas some questions. I do not wish to detain the Senator from Texas, if he wishes to be seated.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am glad to yield.

Mr. WHERRY. Among the ECA releases which come to our offices, the last one I have is under date of November 28.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me, let me say that I think the Senator from Nebraska asked a very pointed question, but I did not hear the answer. The question was, By what authority was the $12,000,000 transferred from ECA funds?

Mr. WHERRY. That is the point the distinguished Senator from Arkansas assured me he would cover. He said that had been authorized under the provisions of the ECA Act, and he is going to supply that authorization for the RECORD, as I understand.

Mr. McCARRAN. I have looked in vain for that authorization, and I should like to have it pointed out.

Mr. WHERRY. I understand that it will be provided for the RECORD.

I understood the Senator to say that the agreements which have been entered into have been published in the report. That may be. However, in the ECA release under date of November 28 of this year the following is stated:

Under the agreement entered into with the Government of Yugoslavia officials of the United States Goverment and representatives of the United States press will be permitted to observe freely the receipt and the distribution of all assistance made available, with a view to noting that it is equitably distributed among the population of Yugoslavia—

And so forth. I should like to ask either the distinguished Senator from Texas or the distinguished Senator from Arkansas whether the agreements which are mentioned in the report are available to Members of the Senate.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. That particular agreement is referred to in the bill itself. What I was referring to a moment ago appears on page 9 of the report.

Mr. WHERRY. I find this statement:

Under the agreement entered into with the Government of Yugoslavia—

Of course, that was prior to this time—

officials of the United States—

And so forth and so on. Have agreements been entered into between our Government and the Government of Yugoslavia relative to this aid or something upon which the granting of this aid hinges?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I believe this answers the Senator's question:

On November 20, 1950, a United States note to the Yugoslav Deputy Minister of Foreign Affairs set forth the agreed basis whereby certain funds from the Mutual Defense Assistance Act were to be made available as a part of the stopgap program of military assistance to Yugoslavia. That note is the basis of the conditions and agreements for supplying all the aid which heretofore has been given.

It is contemplated that if we pass this measure an executive agreement will be made with the Yugoslav Government incorporating the provisions of this act—in other words, providing for freedom of movement, for observation, for the use of any counterpart funds which may arise, and so forth.

Mr. WHERRY. That is my second point. I should like to see the agreement, if that is possible. I am interested only in the mechanics of this matter.

Under the agreement are counterpart funds being used?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Let me start over again: As to the money which has been transferred from the funds available under the Mutual Defense Assistance Act, there was a note—which constitutes, I think, an executive agreement with Yugoslavia—relating to that aid.

If we pass this measure, authorizing $38,000,000 more, a new and additional executive agreement will have to be made to cover this aid.

Mr. WHERRY. I understand that. That is the basis of the question I am asking.

In the case of the agreement or the note the Senator mentioned first, is that the agreement which is mentioned in the ECA release to which I have referred?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I do not know about the release. That is the agreement on page 9 of the report.

Mr. WHERRY. That has to do with the relief.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I do not know what release the Senator from Nebraska has.

Mr. WHERRY. It is printed on a page carrying the letterhead of the ECA. This release was issued on November 28. It calls attention to an agreement made between the United States and Yugoslavia. I am asking whether that agreement is available and what it contains, if it is permissible for that information to be published.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. All I know is the part which appears on page 9 of the report. On page 9, toward the bottom of the page, we find these words:

That note reads in part as follows—

And at that point there appears in the report most of the note, I assume, at least.

Mr. WHERRY. That is in the report, is it?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Yes, on page 9.

Mr. WHERRY. That is the only agreement in this connection which the Senator from Arkansas knows anything about; is that correct?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. That is correct.

Mr. WHERRY. Very well; I thank the Senator.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at this point?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Nebraska, if I may do so, to a portion of the report appearing near the bottom on page 5, where a part of the statement made by the State Department is set forth. I read from that portion of the report:

(c) Section 408 (c) of the Mutual Defense Assistance Act permits the transfer of materials to European countries, other than those in the North Atlantic Treaty, under certain specified emergency conditions. These conditions were clearly present in the case of Yugoslavia, and therefore it was decided to provide foodstuffs to Yugoslavia only, however, in those quantities needed by the Yugoslav military forces.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the majority leader for his statement, but that really does not answer my question. I realize now that there have been exchanges between Yugoslavia and the United States, or some intermediary, relative to the need, and our supplying the need. All I am asking is, Was there any agreement entered into between the United States and Yugoslavia, of which this might be a condition? Let us forget the aid now. If there was such an agreement, I was merely wondering whether it had been introduced in evidence, and whether it was presented to the Foreign Relations Committee.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. This part was presented.

Mr. WHERRY. That is the only part the Senator knows about, is it?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. That is correct.

Mr. WHERRY. In other words, the Senator feels that possibly that is the agreement which was just mentioned here in this discussion, does he?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I do.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me call attention to the fact that on page 5 of the report, in subparagraph (b), it is stated:

The Economic Cooperation Act authorizes shipments of food to the European countries. It also recognizes that permission may be given for transfers of material purchased with ERP funds, or similar materials, from participating countries to third countries.

That is, they may be transferred to countries which are not participating at all. That is made very clear. I read further from the same paragraph:

This authority was drawn upon to have flour shipped from Germany and Italy on the understanding that it would be replaced with wheat shipped from the United States to those countries.

In other words, we were going to allocate to those countries certain amounts of wheat, but, in consideration of their releasing the flour, it would be replaced by wheat later on. Reading further from the same paragraph:

This unusual measure, which assists in the maintenance of stability of Yugoslavia, contributes to the over-all purposes of the European recovery program and is consistent with the estabished poicy of encouraging exports by participating countries. Its prime purpose, however, is not one of the purposes of the programs contemplated when the ERP was last before Congress, and requires the participation of third countries in a way that makes its continuation undesirable.

Mr. WHERRY. The Administrator has that authority now, has he not?

Mr. CONNALLY. He has.

Mr. WHERRY. He could transfer funds or materials from any country that he might choose?

Mr. CONNALLY. I think so.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. In the same release, which is available to Members of the Senate, on page 2, in next to the last paragraph, this statement is made to which I should like the Senator from Arkansas particularly to listen, as I know he has been very busy in connection with the bill. I read:

President Truman last week—

And this was issued on November 28—

President Truman last week announced that the United States Government, under the Mutual Defense Assistance Act, would also provide $16,000,000 worth of food to Yugoslavia for use of that country's armed forces.

Is that a part of this appropriation, or is it an additional amount that is to be granted? If so, under what authority will that be granted? It refers here to the Mutual Defense Assistance Act.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. What was the amount?

Mr. WHERRY. It says here $16,000,000. I shall be glad to hand the release to the Senator.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I think it is the same amount.

Mr. WHERRY. Is that the one we are talking about?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I think that is the amount.

Mr. WHERRY. We do not find in the report the same amounts that are in this release.

Mr. CONNALLY. That refers to the military, does it not?

Mr. WHERRY. Yes; that is for the Armed Forces. That would be a part of the $31,400,000, would it not?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I think so. Let me read from page 15 of the report of the Committee on Foreign Affairs on House bill 9853, as follows:

On November 22, 1950, the President notified the Committee on Foreign Affairs of his decision to utilize the provisions of section 408 (c) to give aid to Yugoslavia. The committee was informed that the amount to be used would not exceed $16,000,000.

I think that is the same amount.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Senator. Before the Senator from Texas yields the floor, I desire to say this. If there is any other agreement with Yugoslavia—and I do not limit it to an agreement to render aid—provided it is not secret, for if it is information which should not be made public I would not want it; but if it is available and can be made public, I should like to have it, because I feel that it might help establish the authority and justification for the remaining $38,000,000 when it comes before the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. CONNALLY. I may say to the Senator that I cannot give him information which would enable him to dot every "i" and cross every "t." I may say, however, that Yugoslavia was most willing to make these general agreements, and I have no doubt that she will keep them.

Mr. WHERRY. There is no question about that, and I am in no way impugning the motives of the distinguished chairman or of any other member of the Foreign Relations Committee.

Mr. CONNALLY. I understand that.

Mr. WHERRY. I am interested only in this agreement. If the agreement is merely the one mentioned by the Senator from Arkansas, which has to do with the transfer of flour, I think we have a pretty good conception of what was in the committee's mind. There was first the $6,000,000 which was granted by the Export-Import Bank. Second, there was the authority contained in the Mutual Defense Assistance Act, to the extent of 10 percent. Then, the distinguished Senator from Arkansas and the distinguished Senator from Texas have pointed out in the report that the ECA may permit the transfer of material purchased with ERP funds, or similar materials, from participating countries to third countries; and, under that program, $11,500,000,000 has been transferred; is that correct?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Eleven million dollars.

Mr. CONNALLY. Eleven million dollars. The Senator from Nebraska said $11,000,000,000.

Mr. WHERRY. In these times, I may say to the Senator, billions of dollars do not mean much more than millions; but I shall make the RECORD correct by saying $11,000,000. I have just received these figures, but I believe I have them straight in my thinking now. The Appropriations Committee, I understand, will have before it a request for an appropriation in the amount of $38,000,000, which will complete the entire transaction, totaling about how many million dollars?

Mr. CONNALLY. Seventy million dollars.

Mr. WHERRY. Is it about $70,000,000?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. It is $69,400,000.

Mr. WHERRY. I want to thank the Senator from Arkansas for the computation.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator. I yield the floor.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. McMAHON. I desire to obtain the floor in my own right.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am yielding to the Senator.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, I certainly rise only to speak in support of the bill which is in charge of the distinguished chairman of the committee. I should like to ask the chairman whether he has formally offered the amendment which he read to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. CONNALLY. I did not formally present it, but I read it and stated that we would offer it as an amendment to appear at the end of the bill.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, will the distinguished Senator from Texas permit me to be associated with him in the offering of the amendment?

Mr. CONNALLY. I am very glad to do so.

Mr. McMAHON. Then, Mr. President, on behalf of myself and the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] I now submit the amendment.

The amendment submitted by Mr. McMAHON (for himself and Mr. CONNALLY) is as follows:

At the proper place in the bill insert the following:

"Nothing in this act shall be interpreted as endorsing measures undertaken by the present Government of Yugoslavia which suppress or destroy religious, political, or economic liberty, and the Yugoslav Government shall be so notified when aid is furnished under this act."

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, I withheld my vote of approval in the Foreign Relations Committee when the committee voted approval on this authorization day before yesterday. I did so, not because I was opposed to the authorization, but because, before I registered my formal consent, I wanted an opportunity to review the correspondence which has passed between the State Department and our Ambassador in Yugoslavia concerning the application for aid, and also I wished to review for myself the representations which had been made by our Department of State to our Ambassador regarding the internal conditions of Yugoslavia.

I, of course, find it impossible to forget that it was Tito who shot down American flyers only a few years ago. I do not overlook the fact that he, in the Communist tradition, has persecuted religious persons, has been anti-Christ and anti-God, has suppressed freedom of speech, has suppressed freedom of assembly, and freedom of worship.

However, Mr. President, we are faced with a condition. A million people are faced with the threat of starvation. I think it is important that the people of Yugoslavia know that we are proffering aid which God in his wisdom has granted to us in abundance, and that we are granting our aid primarily because these people are in distress.

I am particularly impressed by the fact that those who drafted the proposed legislation saw fit to include in it the provision which makes it mandatory for the administrators of our aid to make the people of Yugoslavia realize the spirit in which we offer it.

I am, of course, not unconscious either, of the effect that giving this aid will have on the future security of the United States. I believe that our security would be enhanced and improved if Tito were to take to heart the provisions of this bill, particularly the provisions of the amendment which the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations has offered to the bill. It is my belief that Tito will secure that kind of unity in Yugoslavia which will enable him more readily to resist foreign domination and aggression, if he grants to his own people the basic freedoms and basic liberties from which must flow a greater unity within that country.

So, Mr. President, I support the authorization and I hope that the Committee on Appropriations, as soon as the bill becomes law, will follow with an appropriation, so that we may proceed to the completion of this business. Then I believe that the administrators of the program on behalf of the United States should make certain that the people of Yugoslavia are under no misapprehension as to our attitude, and that the fact that we come to the aid of people in distress is not to be taken, in the words of this amendment, as any approval of the kind of suppression, the kind of ruthlessness, and the kind of brutality which Tito has evidenced in the past.

I may say in closing that there is some indication, I am happy to see, of a great consciousness in the Yugoslavian Government's mind of the impossibility of the persecution of her own people, and a realization that such persecution is not consonant with the continuation of sovereignty and the exercise thereof in their hands. I am hopeful that the authorization which would give aid to Yugoslavia will be the prelude to a further widening and further liberalization of Yugoslavia's attitude with regard to the rights of individuals, which come not from men but come from God.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, I had not anticipated that this bill would be called up for consideration by the Senate this afternoon. I see that the report of the committee is dated December 7. I understand that the record of the hearings held by the committee has not been printed, and therefore is not available to the Members of this body.

If for the moment we indulge in the assumption that the bill should be passed, that support of it is fully justified, and that it is the wise course for our country to pursue, it does not follow that Members of the Senate—and I speak for myself—have yet had an opportunity to become familiar with all the facts and reasons which are being advanced in support of the measure and why funds should be made available to the Government of Yugoslavia.

Mr. President, I can very well preface my remarks by adopting the sentiments expressed by the very able Senator from Texas the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations [Mr. CONNALLY] and by the able chairman of the Committee on Appropriations the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR]—and I am a member of the Committee on Appropriations—that if someone had said to me some months ago that I, or any other Member of this body, would be standing on the floor of the Senate this afternoon pleading for aid and assistance to Yugoslavia, I, too, would have called him to order and repudiated any such implications.

Mr. President, the only difference between the able Senator from Texas and the distinguished Senator from Tennessee, on the one hand, and myself, on the other, is that I have not changed my mind. I am of that opinion still. I do not say that I could not be convinced of the wisdom of the suggested course. Perhaps I could be. However, until I am convinced, I shall not vote to authorize an appropriation that I am not prepared to vote for. I cannot, at this moment, according to my best judgment, agree to recommend appropriations to carry out the provisions of this act.

For that reason, Mr. President, if a vote is taken on the measure today, before there has been adequate opportunity to study the testimony which the committee heard, and to weigh all the factors involved, I shall be compelled to cast my vote against the bill.

Mr. President, I have this difficulty. It makes a tremendous humanitarian appeal when it is reported that thousands of people are facing or suffering hunger, and possibly starvation. Regardless of what part of the world such people are in, or of what nationality they may be, the generous spirit of America has prompted us in the past to come to their assistance and we have relieved the distress of humanity in almost every area of the globe during the course of the history of our Nation.

Mr. President, since the end of World War II we have undertaken to rehabilitate the war-devastated countries, and particularly the free nations and the free peoples. We have done so not only for those who were our allies during the war, but even for those who were our enemies in the conflict. To date, Mr. President, we have spent, as I recall, more than $30,000,000,000 in that great effort of human endeavor and sympathy, because we felt that we were more blessed or more fortunate than other nations, and that since we were all now striving—or we all thought that we were all striving—in this postwar era for the achievement of a lasting and durable peace, we could well afford, not only from an economic standpoint but from a standpoint of human fellowship, to make such expenditures; and to make them even at the cost of burdening our own economy, our own National Treasury, and our taxpayers, in deficit spending. We have done that in order to try to meet a condition which needed our assistance, in the hope and in the belief that those who were the recipients of our assistance would be grateful for our efforts.

Mr. President, the situation has changed. The argument that if we will give assistance to Yugoslavia we may have her help later in speculation and conjecture of the highest order.

Mr. President, a Communist is a Communist. Communist ideology is diametrically opposed to everything that America has stood for from its beginning, and it is opposed to everything that every real red-blooded American stands for today. Not one thing has happened which could possibly recommend to Congress any possible excuse for the proposed authorization other than to try to disburse relief to some people who are in distress. Why we should take this course and expect any benefit to flow to us from it can only be predicated on the hypothesis that at the moment Tito and Stalin are in a quarrel. Yes; someone suggests, "maybe." How do we know? Who can vouch for it? We are asked to guess. We are asked to tax the American people more and go further into deficit spending on the doubtful hypothesis that possibly some day we would find Tito's government and his army fighting on our side.

Mr. President, I have no confidence that that will ever happen. It is within the range of possibility, of course, that if Yugoslavia were attacked by the forces of the Kremlin, and if that attack, together with other wars which are now in progress, were to spread into a world-wide war, we might be fighting alongside Yugoslavia. But I can see no reason on earth why Stalin should provoke a war with Yugoslavia, with world conditions as they are today.

But that is not associated with the danger to us. That is a quarrel between Communists. If the war which we are now fighting, and in which our boys are dying in foreign lands, being entrapped by the Red Chinese troops at this hour, is a war inspired from Moscow, if this is the beginning of world war III, if this is the occasion when the blue chips are down again, Mr. President, the Kremlin would be more stupid than it has demonstrated at any time in the past if it were now to start a war with Tito. The natural and likely thing would be simply to bypass Tito and march on through Europe. Then what would we have? We would have Yugoslavia sitting there as a neutral. But I dare say that if the situation ever developed to the point where Tito thought the Kremlin was going to win, he would be found hastening to join the Soviet Union for the kill.

What Senator has any confidence that Tito would risk his life with us? I do not believe it. I should like to help the people over there who are in distress. But I do not want to spend one dollar of American money to aid or bolster any Communist government.

A few minutes ago I came from my office in response to the quorum call. While there I picked up a newspaper from my own State. I believe it is the second largest in circulation in Arkansas. I found therein an editorial of Tuesday, December 5. The editorial is entitled "Tell our 'Friends' To Get in There, Too." This editorial, together with many letters which I am receiving from my constituents, convinces me that the American people know we are now in the position of holding the bag. We are not being treated properly in this conflict by those whom we have so generously befriended. I invite my colleagues to listen to this editorial. It is not very long. I shall read it:

TELL OUR "FRIENDS" TO GET IN THERE, TOO

The blue chips are down. This fighting in Korea is war, not a "police action." And American boys are doing most of the fighting and dying against an overwhelming horde of Red Chinese.

How much longer is this to go on, while our "friends" in the UN talk, and talk, and talk?

Washington can talk bluntly enough to the American people. It doesn't hesitate to tell them that they must sacrifice for their freedom, must accept hardships, bitter casualty lists, any cost our Red foes may exact.

That is proper and right. But why the tenderness toward the other UN nations, who have just as much at stake as we have? It's their war as much as it is ours. Are we to help support them and fight their battles, too?

Negotiating is all well enough. No chance for a peace settlement by diplomatic means should be passed up.

But words avail nothing with Red China and Russia. They respect only the iron speech of military strength. There will be no basis for negotiation if the Communist horde decimates our little Army in Korea and drives its fragments out.

Why haven't our "friends" got something more than a few token forces in that broken, hard-pressed front? They voted in the UN to stop the aggression in Korea. They've had 5 months of precious time.

If they all, including India, had responded, the story might be very different now. The Red Chinese might not have stormed into Korea. But our "friends" talked, and talked, and still talk.

Washington should talk now, in blunt words. It should tell our allies that either they come across with fighting men or we will look to our own interests. Then if we must fight China, with Russia back of her, call on Chiang Kai-shek's half-million troops. Arm the Japanese. Hunt out Nationalist guerrillas in China and equip them to harass the Reds.

We have resources if we will use them. It is folly for us to fight Russia's stooge-millions alone, while forty-odd other nations prattle and blather on the sidelines.

The Communists will respect no peace that might be patched up if they see that the UN nations have no stomach to resist them. Now, when the blue chips are down, is the time to find out which nations will stand with us to save themselves.

Mr. President, as I stated, letters from my constituents clearly indicate their distress, their alarm, their concern, and their inability to understand why some things have occurred and why others are now happening. They do not understand why more governments of the United Nations are not fighting in this conflict, just as America is. I cannot answer that question, Mr. President.

I have received letters from wives, and from fathers and mothers, inquiring about their husbands and sons. They ask why they must fight under such conditions, and why we are not fighting the Chinese in China, with bombs to destroy their military installations and their arms and ammunition depots. They ask why we are doing nothing but holding our boys in the mountains in freezing weather, while hordes of the Reds pile in from across the border, bringing with them the arms and equipment which they had gathered and stored across the border in preparation for this invasion.

Mr. President, I cannot answer all those questions. I do not have all the answers. However, I say that the American people want to know more than they are being told today about why conditions are as they are.

The question arises about the use of the A-bomb. I do not know if and when and where the A-bomb should be used in this conflict. I am not a military expert. There are many factors which should be considered in that connection. I do not know how many A-bombs we have. I do not know whether we are prepared to start an A-bomb war and carry it through successfully. If I thought we were, before daylight tomorrow morning I would drop an A-bomb anywhere where it would do the most devastation to the enemies of our country and those who are killing our boys, if I knew that that was the wise thing to do under present conditions. I have no hesitancy or qualms about doing whatever is necessary in this conflict and whatever becomes imperative to save our country and prevent more American boys from dying.

Mr. President, there is only $38,000,000 involved in this particular bill. I have heard it said that it is one of the best investments that we could possibly make with that amount of money.

Mr. President, that is simply a matter of opinion. Those who contend it is, may be correct. Subsequent events may prove them to be correct in their opinion. But, Mr. President, based on our past experiences, I do not see how the proposed investment is the best investment we can make at this time.

We are being asked to appropriate billions of dollars to rearm America. I do not know what one A-bomb costs, but I would rather invest some of it in one A-bomb, from the standpoint of strengthening the security of America, than to spend it to aid a Communist government, a government which subscribes to and practices a philosophy that the people who believe in freedom and religious liberty and the fundamentals of Americanism are their mortal enemy and must be destroyed. Until I have some assurance, until I can obtain some information upon which I might place some measure of reliance, I cannot, under those conditions, believe that this breach between Tito and his Communist government and the Kremlin and the Communist government of Moscow is more than a mere scratch on the surface that may quickly heal. I do not think Tito and Stalin disagree upon a single fundamental. It is only a question of leadership—their philosophies are the same.

Mr. President, I may be wrong, but I shall take the chance of refusing, until I have further information, until I know something which convinces me to the contrary, to vote to spend American dollars, money which we have got to borrow, in bolstering a Communist government anywhere in the world.

Mr. McCARRAN obtained the floor.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I wish to ask Senators who have the bill in charge if it is the intention that the Senate vote on the bill tonight, or that it go over until Monday?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. It is our hope that the bill may be acted upon this afternoon.

Mr. WHERRY. I did not know whether it was the intention of the majority leader that the Senate vote on it tonight, or that it be carried over until Monday.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, there is only one amendment to the bill, I may say, to which no one seems to object. That relates to certain religious conditions existing in Yugoslavia at the present time. After the Senator from Nevada has concluded his speech, and another Senator has spoken, we probably can have a vote on the bill. I should like to have the Senate vote on it today, so it may go to the other House as soon as possible, because the Appropriations Committee must act upon it. It is an emergency measure. I may say the Senator from Texas desires that it be passed, if possible, today.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the bill which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. O'CONOR in the chair). The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 1 from line 5, through line 8, it is proposed to strike out all of section 2, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

> The President is hereby authorized to expend not in excess of $50,000,000 of the funds heretofore appropriated for expenses necessary to carry out the provisions of the Economic Cooperation Administration Act of 1948, as amended (Public Law 759, 81st Cong.), for the purpose of providing emergency relief assistance to Yugoslavia under the authority of this act.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, the amendment I have offered is designed primarily to conserve the appropriations this Government is called up to make in this time of emergency. It will not restrict the authority of the President to aid Yugoslavia in accordance with the terms of the bill as it is now before the Senate. It merely provides that the funds for this emergency relief shall be utilized from funds already appropriated for the Economic Cooperation Administration.

In view of our many obligations it is time we began to husband our resources before we find ourselves on the brink of ruin economically.

My subcommittee of the Senate Appropriations Committee has followed closely the funds expended by the Economic Cooperation Administration. Through October 31 the ECA procurement authorizations were running at an annual rate of approximately $1,300,000,000. To this must be added an authorization of $350,000,000 for the European payments union, making a total of approximately $1,650,000,000 out of the ECA appropriations. However, there is available for obligation approximately $2,650,000,000 during the current year. At the present rate of expenditure there is possible a carry-over by ECA of from $500,000,000 to $1,000,000,000. To authorize $50,000,000 of this sum for the purposes of providing emergency relief to Yugoslavia will not retard or interfere with the ECA program. The gold and dollar reserves of the participating countries have increased almost $2,000,000,000 since September 1949. This increase has been greatest during the past 4 months when ECA aid to these countries has been at an all-time low. In fact, the greatest improvement in the gold and dollar situation of the participating countries has occurred while ECA procurement authorizations were by far the lowest in the history of the Marshall plan. The ECA's recovery guide for October 1950 points out especially the improved position of the participating countries during the July–September quarter of this year. I quote the following from this guide:

> Economic developments affecting the participating countries of Western Europe in the summer of 1950 following the outbreak of the Korean crisis, represented a continuation and intensification of trends already apparent during the earlier months of the year. Western Europe's exports continued to increase, its balance of trade to improve, its dollar gap to narrow, and its hard currency reserves to increase. * * * (Devaluation and continued prosperity in the Western World have combined) to bring about a striking improvement in Western Europe's economic position, especially in its balance of payments position. In the year that has elapsed since September 1949, Western Europe's exports to nonparticipating countries have expanded sharply, its imports have held constant. Intra-ERP trade has shown an extraordinary expansion. Production has continued to grow at a rapid rate, thus feeding both higher exports and domestic consumption, and investment. Output in July 1950 was 13 percent above that of July 1949. The hard currency holdings (gold and dollars) of the participating countries have increased almost $2,000,000,000 since September 1949.
> The gold and dollar reserves of the participating countries showed a further sharp increase during the third quarter of 1950.

Let me say at this point, Mr. President, that today our dollars are being banked in England, while we are borrowing the dollars from the people of the United States. The dollars our Government is borrowing from our citizens are going into the banks in England and are being saved there.

I can assure the Senate that if my amendment is adopted, the effectiveness of the ECA will not be interfered with, and we shall be saving $38,000,000. I realize that is not very much, as money goes these days; but it is something, and it might begin a trend in the right direction.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TAYLOR in the chair). Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. BREWSTER. I was interrupted at the moment when the Senator was speaking; but I think he gave the figures as to the British increase in gold reserves.

Mr. McCARRAN. Yes.

Mr. BREWSTER. I understood the Senator to say that that increase approximates the amount we are giving to Britain. Did the Senator say that?

Mr. McCARRAN. Yes, that is correct.

Mr. BREWSTER. Approximately $1,000,000,000, I believe?

Mr. McCARRAN. Yes.

Mr. BREWSTER. Has the Senator's attention also been called to what I think is correct, namely, that during the quarter from July to October the reserves, in dollars, of the European countries participating in the ECA plan were accumulating at the annual rate of approximately $2,500,000,000, which is approximately the amount we are providing under ECA?

Mr. McCARRAN. I have referred to that, and I am glad to have the Senator emphasize it, because it is an important point.

Mr. BREWSTER. Yes; and it is an indication of how prudently the program is being managed, after we have borrowed the money.

Is it not also true that Britain has had a balanced budget during this period?

Mr. McCARRAN. Britain has had practically a balanced budget; yes.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Did I correctly understand the Senator to say that his proposal is to transfer $50,000,000 from the ECA appropriations?

Mr. McCARRAN. Yes; up to $50,000,000.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. This amendment was not presented to the committee, and I am not quite sure of its full significance. Would the amendment, if adopted, mean that in order to take advantage of these funds, Yugoslavia would have to abide by all the obligations which other ECA countries now have to assume?

Mr. McCARRAN. Not necessarily. If I had my own way, I would say they should, but not necessarily under this amendment. In other words, the amendment will provide an opportunity for the President to utilize up to $50,000,000 of the ECA funds, to be devoted to the very purpose for which this bill is before the Senate.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Would it be fair to say that the only effect of the Senator's amendment, if adopted, will be that instead of appropriating fresh money out of the Treasury, we shall be transferring, free from any other obligation, this amount of money for the President to use?

Mr. McCARRAN. Yes; out of the ECA funds.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Out of the ECA funds; yes.

Mr. McCARRAN. Yes.

That is why, Mr. President, I am discussing the situation, for it is my purpose to try to show the Senate that the conditions in Europe at the present time justify the conclusion, without fear of successful contradiction, that there will be anywhere from a $500,000,000 to a $1,000,000,000 ECA carry-over.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. That was the next question I wished to ask specifically.

Mr. McCARRAN. I covered that in the earlier part of my remarks.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I assume that there is no real disagreement between the Senator from Nevada and the ECA officials themselves that there will be a very substantial surplus which ECA will not need.

Mr. McCARRAN. That is correct.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. In other words, a surplus of at least more than $50,000,000. That is all we need to be interested in, insofar as the Senator's amendment goes.

Mr. McCARRAN. In my own judgment, it will exceed $500,000,000, and will run toward $1,000,000,000.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Of course, that leads me to observe that that indicates that the Marshall plan has at least been successful in achieving the effect we intended.

Mr. McCARRAN. I think the report coming from the ECA's Recovery Guide—from which I have read only an excerpt—shows how successful the program has been up to date. It shows the gold dollar reserves at the present time—reserves which are practically up to standard. It shows, I repeat, that today Britain is banking American dollars, whereas we are borrowing dollars from our American citizens.

I point that out simply to emphasize the fact that the step proposed to be taken under the amendment can be taken without impairing at all the efficacy of the program under the Marshall plan.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I wish to make sure—because I have not had an opportunity to study the amendment at all—that the basic principle of the Marshall plan is not involved at all.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. Will the Senator explain why the amendment provides for $50,000,000, when the pending bill calls for only $38,000,000?

Mr. McCARRAN. They have already used $12,000,000.

Mr. AIKEN. Was that amount taken out of ECA funds?

Mr. McCARRAN. Yes; out of the ECA funds.

Mr. AIKEN. Is that authorized by the ECA Act?

Mr. McCARRAN. I cannot find any authorization for it, Mr. President. If I were to give the Senator from Vermont a blunt answer, I would say it is not authorized, but I would say that with reservations. I say frankly that on the basis of the language used in the ECA Act, I have been unable to justify the use of that money.

Mr. AIKEN. Then, the Senator's amendment contemplates legalizing the expenditure of $12,000,000, in addition to the authorization proposed by the pending measure; is that correct?

Mr. McCARRAN. Yes.

Mr. AIKEN. I think that answers my question.

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. CORDON. I should like to know why the Senator by his amendment seeks to be more generous in the use of funds than the State Department does, although the record of the State Department, as I have observed, is one of great generosity in these matters. In short, I refer to the difference between the $38,000,000 authorization carried in the pending bill and the $50,000,000 authorization carried in the Senator's amendment.

Mr. McCARRAN. The $12,000,000 which already has been utilized will be covered into the $50,000,000 authorization, and that will leave an authorization of $38,000,000.

Mr. CORDON. Is there anything in the Senator's amendment which would require that to be done? It would appear to me that when we consider the tenuous authority, if any, that the State Department had for its expenditures in the first place, if we expect it to replace what it already has spent, but which seemingly it had no authority to spend, we had better expressly provide that that be done.

Mr. McCARRAN. I am in general agreement with the Senator from Oregon, in that I have grave doubt as to the authority under the ECA Act for the use of the $12,000,000. However, be that as it may, that money has already been used. Now they want $38,000,000 in order to be able to go on with the program for the relief of Yugoslavia.

If we adopt this amendment, thus providing that they may utilize up to $50,000,000 of ECA funds, that will cover the $12,000,000 which they may have utilized without authority, and will give them authority to utilize $38,000,000 in addition.

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. CORDON. Would the Senator consider modifying his amendment so as to provide that the $12,000,000 shall be in lieu of the funds already spent?

Mr. McCARRAN. I would not object to modifying the amendment in that way.

Mr. CORDON. It seems to me that the amendment should be very specific.

Mr. McCARRAN. I would not object to modifying the amendment in that way, except for the fact that I do not like to give positive agreement to something which I do not think was done legally.

Mr. CORDON. Would the Senator consider such a modification over the week end?

Mr. McCARRAN. Yes; I certainly would.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. STENNIS. The Senator has stated that Great Britain has been taking the borrowed dollars which we have sent to her and has been putting them in banks in England. Will the Senator go into detail in that connection, or will he address a question to the sponsor of the bill, so that we may find what justification he has for such a procedure? After all, that point is a vital one.

Mr. McCARRAN. Today the funds we are affording Great Britain in the way of American dollars are not being utilized for the purposes contemplated by the Marshall plan. Britain does not need the money. Great Britain's economy is up to par, and Britain does not need that money. So what are the British doing with our dollars? They are putting them in the bank; that is what they are doing with them.

Mr. STENNIS. Why does the ECA Administrator continue to send those dollars, if they are not needed? Can the Senator from Nevada answer that question?

Mr. McCARRAN. I cannot answer it.

Mr. STENNIS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. I assume that the Senator from Nevada is familiar with the ECA's methods of doing business. If the ECA had the right to expend the $12,000,000 which has been spent for relief of Yugoslavia, and if there is sufficient ECA money on hand, as the Senator from Nevada seems to think there is, what is the reason for this bill at all—if the ECA has authority to spend the additional amount of money?

Mr. McCARRAN. This bill comes to us because Yugoslavia is not an ECA participating country, and never has been.

Mr. AIKEN. But if the ECA had authority to spend the $12,000,000, it has authority to spend $50,000,000 for the same purpose.

Mr. McCARRAN. The Senator may argue that way if he wishes to do so.

Mr. AIKEN. I do not wish to do so. I am seeking information.

Mr. McCARRAN. I should like to have information accompanied by a reasonable degree of legality.

Mr. AIKEN. But if it is reasonable for the ECA to spend $12,000,000 for this purpose, it is reasonable for them to spend $50,000,000 for the same purpose.

Mr. McCARRAN. I do not wish to do anything to impair the Marshall plan.

Mr. AIKEN. No one does.

Mr. McCARRAN. If I thought I was even on the edge of impairing the Marshall plan, I would not go forward with this amendment. However, I know it is admitted that the ECA has a carry-over. The ECA had a heavy carry-over last year, and this year the ECA will have a larger carry-over because the economies of the participating European countries have improved during that period of time.

Mr. President, in this critical period it behooves us to take every possible step to conserve our assets, inasmuch as we do not know the extent to which we may be called upon to furnish dollars in the near future. Faced, as we are, with unknown obligations, we must use our funds to achieve the greatest returns possible. It does not make sense to make or authorize new appropriations—which is what the pending bill in its present form provides—while we have already appropriated vast sums that could be used.

If more funds are needed before June 30, I am sure the Congress will be in a position to provide them.

Mr. President, I submit the amendment. I submit it without any fear that, if adopted, it will impair the Marshall plan. I submit the amendment because I think the time has come when we should look to the proper use of American dollars, and when we should stop making appropriations if there will be heavy carry-overs from appropriations already made.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, I first desire to express my regret that I was unable to be present at the committee hearings on this bill, and to become acquainted with some of the grounds upon which it is based. I also voice my regret that there is no evidence available to support the conclusions of the committee. It is not pleasant to appear here in the role of a devil's advocate, but this subject is of great importance.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Maine yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. BREWSTER. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate vote on all amendments to the pending measure on Monday at 4 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. BREWSTER That is agreeable.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I understand that excludes a vote on the bill itself. Am I correct?

Mr. CONNALLY. It does not include a vote on the bill itself. It is a proposal that the Senate vote on all amendments a 4 o'clock, and when that hour arrives and we vote on the amendments, we may then insist upon a vote on the bill; but that is not contained in the request as submitted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, if I may make an inquiry of the distinguished chairman of the committee, the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], Was it the intention to vote on each amendment at the hour of 4 o'clock, without any further debate?

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes.

Mr. WHERRY. And is that what was agreed to?

Mr. CONNALLY. Of course, it would be impossible to vote at 4 o'clock if there were to be any debate. The request I made was that at 4 o'clock Monday the Senate vote on all amendments.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, could there be some agreement as to a discussion, perhaps, for the 2 hours preceding 4 o'clock, so there would be opportunity for Senators to speak who might want to do so at that time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would point out that there is already an agreement to vote at 1 o'clock on certain amendments to the railroad labor bill.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am aware of that, but that will be out of the way by 4 o'clock.

Mr. BREWSTER. Could we have an agreement that between 2 and 4 o'clock there would be 10 minutes allocated equally to each side, on the various amendments?

Mr. CONNALLY. Tomorrow?

Mr. BREWSTER. On Monday, between 2 and 4.

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not know how the railroad bill would affect that situation.

Mr. WHERRY. We have an agreement on this bill, have we not?

Mr. CONNALLY. We have an agreement to vote at 4 o'clock on all amendments.

Mr. WHERRY. It is already agreed upon; therefore, there is nothing to be done now.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, was there a quorum call, in accordance with the rule, before the unanimous-consent agreement was entered into?

Mr. CONNALLY. A quorum call is not required on an agreement affecting amendments.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. The agreement does not include the final passage of the bill.

Mr. KEM. Earlier in the afternoon when a similar request was made in connection with unanimous consent regarding an amendment to the railway labor bill, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE] made the point that no quorum call had been had.

Mr. LUCAS. He merely said he was going to object, unless a quorum call was ordered.

Mr. KEM. And he did object. I feel quite sure that, if the Senator from Oregon had been on the floor when this request was made, he would have objected again.

Mr. CONNALLY. But he was not on the floor.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, in view of the fact that the agreement has already been entered into, I feel that, if the Senator from Texas will agree, we might vote on the first amendment. I do not care about any more debate on the first amendment. Obviously, we cannot vote on all the amendments at one time. I wonder whether it would be agreeable to have an understanding that, after the vote is taken on the first amendment, say 10 minutes on a side on each amendment be allotted until we vote on all of them. Is there any objection to that?

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, I think it would be better if, between 2 and 4 o'clock, the time could be divided between the two sides for the discussion of both the amendments and, as far as I am concerned, the bill, in order that we might be sure that both points of view on the matter may be adequately presented.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would suggest that that, of course, would be contingent upon the ability of the Senate to finish with the railroad labor bill.

Mr. BREWSTER. Yes; that is correct.

Mr. CONNALLY. I may say there is only one amendment, aside from the one offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McMAHON], on which we are all agreed.

Mr. WHERRY. That is true, I think.

Mr. CONNALLY. There is no danger.

Mr. WHERRY. May we enter into a further unanimous-consent agreement that, after the railroad labor bill has been disposed of finally, the time between then and 4 o'clock shall be divided equally between the Senator from Texas and the Senator from Maine—if the Senator from Maine cares to assume that responsibility—or between the Senator from Texas and the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN]. I suppose the Senator from Nevada should take it.

Mr. BREWSTER. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY. Very well.

Mr. WHERRY. We could then vote on that amendment, and then upon all remaining amendments to the bill, and we might agree that, if any additional amendments were offered, 10 minutes to a side be allotted on each amendment, and then proceed to vote on the amendments. Is that agreeable? Of course, there should be the usual stipulation that all amendments must be germane.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is agreeable to me.

Mr. WHERRY. Very well. If that is agreeable to everyone, I ask that the unanimous consent heretofore entered into be modified accordingly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nebraska? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The entire unanimous-consent agreement as reduced to writing is as follows:

Ordered, That on the calendar day of Monday, December 11, 1950, at the hour of 4 o'clock p. m., the Senate proceed to vote, under the limitation of debate hereinafter provided, upon any amendment or motion that may be pending or that may thereafter be proposed to the bill (S. 4234) to promote the foreign policy and provide for the defense and general welfare of the United States by furnishing emergency relief assistance to Yugoslavia: Provided, That after the said hour of 4 p. m., debate upon any amendment or motion shall be limited to not exceeding 20 minutes, to be equally divided and controlled, respectively, by the mover of any such amendment or motion and Mr. CONNALLY; (2) that no amendment or motion that is not germane to the subject matter of the said bill shall be received; and (3) that no vote on any amendment or motion proposed to the said bill shall be had prior to said hour of 4 o'clock.

Ordered further, That the time intervening between the disposition of the so-called railway labor bill and the said hour of 4 o'clock on said day of Monday, December 11, shall be equally divided between those favoring and those opposing the passage of said bill and controlled, respectively, by Mr. CONNALLY and Mr. McCARRAN.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am sorry the Senator from Nevada is not present at the moment. While he is out of the Senate Chamber, I accept the amendment offered by him.

Mr. BREWSTER. I am sure we are profoundly grateful for that. That is a great step forward.

Mr. CONNALLY. How grateful is the Senator from Maine?

Mr. BREWSTER. I shall be very gentle in my comments.

Mr. CONNALLY. Does the Senator desire to move the adoption of the amendment? It must be passed upon.

Mr. BREWSTER. It is a little premature for that. I think we had better wait until Monday to finally pass upon this matter.

Mr. CONNALLY. I anticipated the Senator from Maine would not agree, if I were willing to accept it.

Mr. BREWSTER. I am hoping I shall persuade the Senator from Texas to agree with me in this instance if he will listen to my suggestions.

Mr. CONNALLY. I shall listen.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, if the Senator from Texas is going to agree to this amendment, we can probably get this bill out of the way tonight, because there are no objections to the other amendments.

Mr. BREWSTER. I think there are other considerations besides the amendment of the Senator from Nevada. It is not the entire subject matter of this discussion.

Mr. CONNALLY. There is nothing else pending.

Mr. LUCAS. There is a bill pending.

Mr. BREWSTER. I should like to speak to that.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Maine has the floor.

Mr. BREWSTER. I am quite sure the Senator from Texas is not going to insist that the liberty of discussion be curtailed.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. WHERRY. In order that there may be no misunderstanding, I desire to state my understanding of the parliamentary situation relative to the pending bill giving aid to Yugoslavia. It is this: That when the so-called railway labor bill, on which we have entered into a unanimous-consent agreement, is out of the way and finished, the time between then and 4 o'clock Monday, December 11, will be divided between the proponents and opponents of the bill for Yugoslavia, and any amendments thereto; that at 4 o'clock, whatever amendments are then offered to the bill shall be voted upon; and, on any amendments which are germane, and which may be offered hereafter, debate shall be limited to 10 minutes on a side, until final passage of the bill. Is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the understanding of the Chair.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Chair.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, I wish to address myself first to the Senator from Arkansas, who challenged some questions that I raised regarding the extent of the drought in Yugoslavia. I may say that I discussed that question rather fully with Mr. Haggerty, who is the authority the Senator cited, Mr. Haggerty having been the agricultural attaché in Yugoslavia at the time we visited there in September of this year. I think that in the very report which has been filed by the committee it is quite evident that the extent of the drought is definitely determined, so far as Mr. Haggerty was familiar with it. The State Department, when it issued the release on this matter, said there had been a total crop failure, and I took occasion to comment that that was totally in error.

In the report of the committee, it appears that the corn crop of Yugoslavia for the current year is 59 percent of normal for 1947–49; the wheat crop is 88 percent of normal. Those are the two major crops. The percentages in 1950 of 1947–49 average of other commodities produced in Yugoslavia, as listed in the committee report, are as follows:

	Percent
Rye	83
Barley	87
Oats	79
Rice	100
Vegetables and melons	57
Potatoes	67
Edible fats	88
Sugar	103
Beans	72
Peas	57

I may say that corn and wheat are the major crops, as we were told by Mr. Haggerty. I desire to call attention now to the next sentence of the committee report:

These figures do not tell the whole story. Yugoslavia normally has food enough to export and thereby acquire foreign exchange with which to buy needed imports.

Certainly people are not starving when they have the food which is in any such amounts as those indicated; certainly at least not until the last half of the year. I noticed that the Senator from Arkansas referred to this crop year. This crop year runs until the harvest of next August and September, and the point which I wish to make is that there are very considerable reserves of food in Yugoslavia at the present time, unless they are exporting it.

I visited some of the farms with Mr. Haggerty. He pointed out the conditions. I saw some corn, which was equal to the finest corn ever raised in Iowa, which was being fed to the hogs on a cooperative farm which we visited in September of this year—finer corn than I have ever seen raised in most of the States in this country. There were very considerable supplies, as is indicated by the report of the committee.

I had anticipated that this would be a subject for the early consideration of the next Congress when it convened in January, and that there would be ample time then for the Congress elected last November to consider with all reasonable diligence the questions involved. Certainly I would desire that there be no undue delay. However, I regret that there has been the precipitate action which is indicated by what the State Department and the administration have done today.

Mr. President, there are aspects of the matter which lead me to ponder the wisdom of the course suggested. The tremendous haste to get aid to Yugoslavia, in contrast with the extreme reluctance to get Congress-directed aid to Spain has aroused in me questions as to why there should be this almost unseemly haste in the face of the very figures which the committee itself includes in its report.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, I did not intend to leave the impression that there was no corn and no wheat and no rye at all. However, I think 59 percent is what certainly we would call a crop failure in this country.

Mr. BREWSTER. It is a decrease of 41 percent.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I referred to 59 percent of what their normal crop is.

Mr. BREWSTER. They do not say it is normal. They say the average of 2 or 3 years.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I assume that would be normal. I asked Mr. Hagerty how the present drought compared with any other drought which Yugoslavia had experienced, and he said that the present drought was much the worse drought in the country's history. The last drought which was at all comparable to the present one occurred in 1927.

I agree that as of today the people in Yugoslavia are not starving, and that there are some provisions available. However, the Senator from Maine knows as well as I do how slowly Government machinery moves. After an authorization is obtained, the appropriations must be voted. After that the actual getting of the supplies into the pinelines takes additional time. If we were to pass the bill now, it is likely that it would be as late as February or March before much of this material would begin to move to Yugoslavia. That would be true certainly unless we resorted to some strenuous or rigid measures such as the transfer of wheat from Italy. Why that was done, except that there was an emergency, I do not know. I assume the picture is spotty, and that there are places where the situation is really bad today, and that there are other places where it is not so bad.

I should like to make one further comment. Reference was made to aid to Spain. In my view—and I think it is the view of the committee—the reason for passing the pending bill is not altogether humanitarian and not altogether due to our concern for people who need something to eat. There is no question that there are other considerations which are influenced by the state of the world today. The fact has already been commented upon. Certainly the fact is having an effect—and I would say a political effect—upon the attitude of the people of Yugoslavia.

Let us put ourselves in the position where 6 months from today the people of Yugoslavia can see that if they do not get aid they will be starving. Any prudent person must make some decision at to what will happen. The decision must be made whether they will get aid. If they do not know whether they will get some aid 2 or 3 months from now, during the interval I think they would have to do something about it. They would have to do one of two things. They would have to give up their independence and say to Moscow, "You have licked us. Therefore we are coming back to you on our knees. We may starve if we don't." They would have to do that or they would have to overthrow the present government.

Mr. BREWSTER. That might not be an unmitigated evil.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I think it would be a great loss to the west if Yugoslavia, with 30 army divisions, were to beg Moscow's pardon and then become an integral part of Soviet Russia.

Mr. BREWSTER. That is not what the Senator from Maine suggests. If the Senator from Arkansas assumes that any change in government in Yugoslavia would necessarily be to the left, it must be on the basis of assumptions which are not warranted by any evidence presented thus far.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I think the evidence is pretty clear.

Mr. BREWSTER. I should like to finish my statement, please. As a matter of fact, the government which was supplanted by Tito's government was to the right, and not to the left. The Communists are presumably a very small proportion of the population of the country. However, the Tito group is dominant and has control. I believe the Senator is familiar with the situation that in many countries Communists have taken control, although they represent only 5 or 10 percent of the population. However, it does not necessarily follow that any change in government would be to a government which looks in the direction of Moscow.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. In that part of the world it is clear to me that it would be toward Moscow. The same situation exists in Czechoslovakia. I agree that the great popular support is not for communism. However, the fact is that Yugoslavia's neighbors—Czechoslovakia, Rumania, Bulgaria, Albania, Hungary, and Poland—are under the complete domination of Moscow. It is not because the people of those countries love Moscow. It is because there is no force in those countries sufficiently strong to overthrow the Communists. The only reason that Yugoslavia can get away with its defiance of Russia and can maintain its independence is because it has an outlet to the west. It has an outlet to the sea, and consequently there is always the possibility of aid from us. Yugoslavia has an approach by sea. We can get to Yugoslavia. They can develop a relationship with the west. We cannot do anything about it so far as Bulgaria or Rumania or any of the other countries are concerned, and will not be likely to be in a position to do anything about it in the near future simply because of that reason. If we do not help the people of Yugoslavia to maintain their independence they have no place to turn.

Mr. BREWSTER. There is no suggestion by the Senator from Maine that we would wish to destroy the independence of Yugoslavia.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I believe that is the main reason why the bill should be passed.

Mr. BREWSTER. I should like to ask the Senator from Arkansas further whether or not Mr. Haggerty stated to the committee the system under which the Yugoslav Government accumulates its food and why there is difficulty with respect to it in some sections of the country.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. He did. We went into that question to some extent. Mr. Haggerty struck me as being a well-informed man as to the effect of collectivization, and that sort of thing. Collectivization, he told us, and I agreed, has also tended to decrease the production of Yugoslavia, and so on. That is in addition to the drought. However, I do not see how we can do anything about it at the present time.

Mr. BREWSTER. That is not the point to which I was addressing myself, although it is very interesting and somewhat anachronistic that Yugoslavia, which is a disciple of communism and collectivization, should seek aid from the free-enterprise system. The point I wish to make is that the Tito regime had made an assessment of a certain percentage of the crop. Last year that did not work out. Accordingly, they made an assessment on each farmer for so much corn and wheat, which the farmer, according to his normal production, must deliver. The Government did not set up a percentage, but set up the assessment in so many bushels. When the shortage came, the corn crop being only 59 percent of normal, and wheat about 88 percent, it meant that if the peasant did not deliver the assessment he would have nothing left with which to feed his family. The result was that the peasant headed out into the woods. He was not going to see his children starve. The peasant is assessed a certain quota, and if he cannot meet it, he is put in the work gangs that we saw being marched through the streets of Belgrade under the guns of the militia.

There would be no reason for the peasants of Yugoslavia to starve if they were permitted to have the food which they themselves have raised. When the government seizes the food, either for the army or for export, and allows its peasants to starve, it is not demonstrating much concern for its citizens or for its institutions. There is no question that the peasants would be able to get along all right if they could have some food for their families. That is what they are denied under the current policies of the government. My information in that respect came from Mr. Haggerty in person in Belgrade.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I am not disputing that aspect. Certainly the Senator from Maine cannot put me in the position of defending the domestic policies of Yugoslavia. That is not my purpose at all. The pending bill has nothing whatever to do with that situation. If we were thinking of Yugoslavia alone, with no relation to the present difficulties in which we find ourselves with regard to Russia, it would be an entirely different matter. I do not approve of those practices. I think they are wrong; they are misguided; they defeat their own purposes. I will go along with the Senator in that respect. I do not think, however, that it has anything to do with the passage of the bill insofar as our interests at this particular time are concerned. That is all I wish to say. I completely dissociate the wisdom of their domestic policies from what is proposed to be done by the bill.

Mr. BREWSTER. To me it is unfortunate that the humanitarian and expedient are so obviously intermingled, and I believe the Senator from Arkansas will agree with me. There are approximately a billion people in the world who are in dire distess. At Dublin, in September, at the Interparliamentary Union meeting, the representatives of India, Burma, and Ceylon denounced America as imperial colonialists because we were pursuing exactly the same policies which Britain, France, and the Netherlands are pursuing. They denounced us in unmistakable terms, and not one voice was raised in our defense, except as we could raise our own feeble voice.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. All I can say to the Senator from Maine in that respect is that we are confronted with a very serious situation which involves our very survival. I am quite willing to ignore the denunciations of India, if that is the way they feel about a situation such as this. I think we in the western countries are in an extremely serious situation, and it is high time that we tried to do some very practical things with respect to the challenge of Russia, regardless of whether it pleases the idealism of India, or any other country. I am not familiar with the denunciations to which the Senator has referred, but I could be critical of India, if it becomes necessary to discuss the subject. However, I do not think it would serve any purpose to do so.

Mr. BREWSTER. What puzzles me is that the Senator should present this subject first as a humanitarian measure.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I did not do any such thing.

Mr. BREWSTER. The Senator from Connecticut was the one who expressed that though when he said, "We are seekin to assist people in distress."

That was earlier advocated. The Senator from Arkansas is very frank in saying that this is a matter of expediency, and that we need to keep this situation under some kind of control.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I will go further and say that that was the predominating motive for ECA, and I said so on this floor. It was not because I was interested primarily in raising the standard of living of the British or French. I can find people in my own State who need help so far as their standard of living is concerned. If the Senator wishes to call it expediency, that is all right. I think it is simply a sensible effort to preserve the integrity of western civilization.

Mr. BREWSTER. Self-interest.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Exactly. It is an effort to survive. It was self-interest in an effort to preserve what we sometimes call western civilization. That is the principal motive for the entire program of ECA.

Mr. BREWSTER. Under ECA and under the North Atlantic Pact, in return for the assistance we have been rendering we have asked very considerable obligations. We have pledged more assistance than we have received thus far, even under the United Nations.

Under the circumstances it is to me a matter of regret that it did not seem appropriate to request some further commitments than are indicated or envisioned here. We hear about the 32 divisions of Tito, but there is no suggestion that they will ever be utilized unless his own country shall be invaded. I believe that the Senator from Arkansas or one of the other previous speakers emphasized that the Russians would undoubtedly move, if they decided to move, through Germany or Austria, or in other directions. In that event there is nothing whatever to indicate that Tito will not continue to teeter on the fence, exactly where he has been. Even since his break with Stalin, he has voted half the time with Russia in the United Nations. That is a situation which I find it very difficult to understand when he comes to us hat in hand. He assured us in Belgrade in September that he was still a practicing Communist. He made no bones about it. He did not deny it. He said, "I believe in communism." The very words which he used were:

> I look upon myself as the leader of the progressive peoples behind the iron curtain.

In other words, he was to take the place of Stalin as the leader of the Communists in the event, when, as, and if, he should liquidate Mr. Stalin, if Mr. Tito were not liquidated first. I think the American people are entitled to know something of the story of what goes on over there, and whether or not the course of action which is proposed is wise.

I have a very considerable respect for Mr. Reams, counselor of our Embassy, who in my judgment was the best informed man there. If I were to attach final weight to any opinion, it would be to his. That is what impressed me more than any other aspect of this matter. But unfortunately Mr. Reams is not going to be there. He has now left the embassy. He is here. He had been there for a long time. I have great respect for George Allen, our Ambassador, but he has only recently arrived. He is undoubtedly trying to do the best he can, but he faces an exceedingly difficult and delicate situation.

I cannot comprehend how the amendment dealing with religious, economic, and political liberty means anything at all. It simply says that we do not approve certain practices. In other connections, when we have had some other problems, our State Department has been vehement against certain countries. There was denunciation of Spain, where the abuses of religions are utterly insignificant compared with what is going on in Yugoslavia at the present time. Archbishop Stepinac and 400 priests are in jail. Three hundred and eighty have been murdered. There has been no such record of religious persecution in Spain, yet our State Department would never consider assistance to Spain because, forsooth, there had been alleged religious persecution, the circumstances of which were absolutely not supported by our investigations on the ground.

Some 10,000 Greek children were kidnapped by the Yugoslavs and their associates under Moscow domination. They have returned 50 or 60 of them. We took the matter up with Mr. Tito, and he absolutely refused to discuss it. He said, "That is a matter that we cannot go into at this time." He now talks about the 50 or 60 whom he returned.

We have heard a great deal about civil rights, and habeas corpus. It was announced a little while ago that measures were being formulated in Yugoslavia by which they proposed to lift some of the restrictions of a police state upon their people. Then it was added, "These proposals will be presented to the Yugoslav Assembly next spring when it meets." Next spring is a long way off.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BREWSTER. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. I desire to bring up a privileged matter, a conference report——

Mr. BREWSTER. Just a moment. I did not yield for that purpose.

Mr. MAYBANK. It is a privileged matter.

Mr. BREWSTER. Not while I am speaking.

Mr. MAYBANK. I understood——

Mr. BREWSTER. I assumed that the Senator wanted to ask me a question. I did not assume that he was going to take me off the floor.

Mr. MAYBANK. I did not suggest such a thing.

I ask unanimous consent, if it does not require any great amount of time, to present the report——

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, I should like to finish my remarks. I shall not unduly detain the Senate. I have been waiting all afternoon.

Mr. MAYBANK. I did not finish the request I was about to make.

Mr. BREWSTER. I do not propose to yield for that purpose. I am sorry, but I have been waiting all afternoon. I have some other obligations as well. I wish to dispose of this matter as quickly as I can.

Mr. President, I question seriously the effectiveness or the wisdom of this proposed grant to Yugoslavia.

What is the purpose of it? It is to bolster the authority of a Communist dictator who appears to have fallen out with Moscow and who now, because of a crop failure, finds himself in deadly peril between Stalin on the one hand and his rebellious and enslaved people on the other.

The State Department contends that the break with Moscow has magically turned the Yugoslav Government into a bulwark against Communism and that the Yugoslav Communist army is of vital importance in holding up the Russian advance.

This line of argument is difficult to accept.

The Yugoslav people already have had one bitter lesson in the operation of American policies. Their Communist dictator, Josip Broz, popularly known as Tito, got his place originally through the insistence of Stalin and an American camarilla of fellow travelers, headed by Louis Adamic, who had access to the White House. The United States Government, in the process of being an echo to Moscow in Tito's support, did nothing to prevent the treacherous betrayal and execution of Mihailovich, the great Yugoslav hero of the war. Mihailovich, the enemy of the Nazis, whose determined campaign held up the German advance in the Balkans many weeks, was handed over in 1946 to Tito's Communist gang and then judicially murdered.

The American people also have had a bitter illustration of Tito's character. In August 1946 a United States plane, flying its regular run from Vienna to the Udine, was beaten out of its course by a storm and passed over Yugoslav territory. Without a warning of any kind, Tito's gunners shot the plane down and the flyers were killed. Who but Dean Acheson said that this wanton attack was "an outrageous performance" and that "in practically every other part of the world the C–47 would have received help in getting its bearings. Instead it was shot down without warning." Now this same Dean Acheson wants $38,000,000 to help prevent Tito's police-ridden subjects from rising up and throwing him out. Is this what we call aiding the freedom loving west?

Why should we believe that the Yugoslav army is any protection to us against Moscow? Once the break with Moscow occurred Tito had to conduct a bloody purge of his army. Today he cannot tell who is for and who is against him. Of course, many of his officers are secretly as close to Moscow and the Cominform as they have ever been. When I was in Yugoslavia three of his leaders deserted him and went over, indicating the very difficult time he himself now has.

Do not forget that the ruling clique in Belgrade, whether they have outwardly broken with Moscow or not, are still Communists and that Tito's government is still a Communist government. During the past 5 years our Government has embarked on the strange practice of finding some Communists good Communists and others bad Communists. In China that theory does not seem to have worked out so satisfactorily. There were those who assured us that General Mao and his associates were the good kind of Tito Communists. They are now murdering American boys in the hills of North Korea. I hope we shall not find another experience of serious misjudgment in the case with which we are now concerned. It seems to me that all Communists are alike, and that all are very questionable allies.

I might say at this point that our State Department's passion for Tito and his government has had ghastly results eleswhere. After Tito's break with Moscow some of Mr. Acheson's master minds evolved the theory of Titoism. Titoism is a word used to describe a left wing government that can not get on with Moscow. The State Department loved this theory of Titoism so much that they applied it to China. They said that the Chinese Communists were just agrarian reformers, that they would not go along with Moscow at all and that the Chinese Communist regime was already showing signs of Titoism. Today, as I speak, those Chinese Communists are butchering Americans in cold blood in the snowbound passes of North Korea. If that is what Titoism means in China, why should we expect it to be something different in Yugoslavia?

I have said that Yugoslavia is a Communist country and that, despite the purge, Tito cannot tell who is for and who is against him, who are secretly for Moscow and who are not. A year ago one of the members of the central committee of the Communist Party of Yugoslavia declared that 85 percent of the Communists are against Tito and for the Cominform. How many Communists there are is quite another question.

The common soldiers of the Yugoslav Army are young peasants who have not the slightest sympathy with Tito. Why should they? They have seen with their own eyes the forcible collectivization of thousands of Yugoslav farms. I myself visited one of them. Half a million peasants have been condemned to forced labor because they did not give enough corn to the Communist government. Tito's brutal exactions upon the peasant farmers have been carried out with just as much ruthlessness as Stalin's famous and bloody liquidation of the kulaks.

What is the basis for the argument that the Yugoslav Army can offer effective resistance to the Russians? The Yugoslav Army has an air force of 800 antique planes. What good will they be?

Along the Adriatic coast they have an old-time toy navy consisting of one frigate, three destroyers, eight torpedo boats, and seven lame and halt submarines. What good will they be?

In the event of open war with Russia, the bulk of the officers will go over to Stalin, the common soldiery will melt away to their homes or attempt to get across the frontier, and the remnant, the little Tito gang, will try to find a refuge in the Bosnian Mountains. Just exactly how is all that going to help the freedom-loving nations of the west?

There is no question about the fighting qualities of the Yugoslav soldier. His valor was shown in both the World Wars. But today he has no confidence in his government and no hope for the future. To be effective, the Yugoslav Army would have to be reorganized and equipped with modern weapons and given leaders whom it could trust. Such a reform is utterly beyond the power of the Tito regime.

Tito is literally caught in the middle of a terrible squeeze. In his prison camps are perhaps 10,000 suspected sympathizers of Moscow and double that number of Yugoslav Nationalists, who, of course, are not Communists at all, but are intense patriots and bitter enemies of the regime. These 20,000 are the remnants of the native patriots who openly opposed Tito. It is estimated that since November 1, 1944, when Tito entered Belgrade, no fewer than 60,000 of these Nationalists have been liquidated. In May 1945 the British Government, still pursuing, with the United States, a policy of Moscow appeasement at any price, handed over 14,000 Slovenes to the Yugoslav Communists. All were killed out of hand. What possible reason have we to believe that there is any dependable strength in a government maintained with such blood-thirsty tyranny? Yet the administration asks that we give Tito outright $38,000,000 worth of foodstuffs.

Yugoslavia has always been a region driven by faction and the longing of native patriots for many years has been for reforms that would help in blotting out the factionalism. The policy of Tito's government has been to inflame these factions wherever possible.

One age-old source of trouble in Yugoslavia has been religious differences. Before Tito, nearly 49 percent of the Yugoslav population were members of the orthodox eastern church, nearly 35 percent were Roman Catholics, and about 11 percent were Moslems. Far from attempting to encourage toleration, the tactics of Tito with the churches has been infamous. More than 380 Roman Catholic priests are dead at the hands of Tito's men and some 400 are in prison today. The most famous of all is Archbishop Stepinac. In October 1946 he was seized and brought to trial, charged with crimes against the state. His defense was that he had raised his voice against massacres and conversions by force, arguing that such things were against canon law. No matter. He was condemned to the loss of his civil rights and sentenced to 16 years in prison.

Recently, when we were in Yugoslavia, we discussed this matter with Marshal Tito. He indicated that he was considering the matter at the time; that he had had discussions with high church dignitaries and hoped the matter would be adjusted. The principal solution was that he would permit Archbishop Stepinac to be freed from jail if he would get out of the country, which involved, by implication, either a conclusion that Archbishop Stepinac was guilty of the crime with which he had been charged or that the Government of Yugoslavia, in accordance with Communist doctrine, should arrogate to itself the right to dominate the activities of the church. If Stepinac were guilty, then by leaving the country he admitted his guilt. On the other hand, if he were not guilty he must admit that Tito was to dominate the activities of the church within that land.

It seems to me that the amendment which is proposed, by which we partially look down our noses, and says we do not approve the religious, political, and economic dictatorship of Tito, is a very poor compensation for the conditions which undoubtedly prevail, not because we are engaged in any crusade to bring freedom and liberty to any country in the world, but because we have very little reason to rely upon the operations of a dictator who conducts the affairs of his own country in so incredible a manner.

The administration maintains that the exports of Yugoslavia to the west are of a critical character, that they are absolutely essential. What exports? The exports of the country have dwindled until they are only a fraction of what they once were. This is not alone due to devastations of the war? It is also due to the crazy, wholesale effort to communize all business and industry. I note that even the House report on this Yugoslav proposal states that the rates for plan fulfillment of the Yugoslav 5-year plan "must have been"—and I am quoting—"the results of statistical legerdemain."

Mr. President, I am convinced that the pending proposal is of very questionable expedience, if not worse, and will represent no true aid whatsoever to the enslaved Yugoslav people. Moreover, here again we have American foreign policy at work with the same mistakes which have brought us to the sorry mess we see today. We are asked by the State Department to make this grant without gaining any assurances or considerations for the interests of the United States or of the free world. We can be certain that nothing will be done by Tito to rectify the confiscation of American economic interests in Yugoslavia. Even France in her recent aid to Yugoslavia was not so foolish. She demanded adjustments on the claims of her citizens.

The whole adventure bears the same precarious and doubtful character as does so many of our so-called calculated risks which turned out to be all risks and no calculation.

Mr. President, I hope that very careful consideration may be given to the bill before we enter into the arrangement. I hope the State Department and the administration will find it expedient—since this is a measure of expediency and not humanitarianism—to secure much more definite assurances from the present government of Yugoslavia before we commit so much of the money and the resources of this Government to help a country which, in the event of any crisis that may occur, we would find of very doubtful aid.

EXTENSION OF RENT CONTROL—CHANGE OF CONFEREE—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, two days ago, when conferees were appointed on the part of the Senate, the Vice President appointed the Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART] and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS] as Republican members. The Senator from Vermont could not be present when the matter was considered by the conferees. So there were three Democratic Senators and one Republican Senator present. It has therefore been suggested that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER], who is the next ranking Republican on the committee, serve as conferee.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER] may be appointed as a member of the conference, because of the fact that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS] cannot serve.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS] will be excused from further service and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER] is appointed to serve as conferee.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I now send to the desk a conference report, which has been unanimously approved by the conferees, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TAYLOR in the chair). The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 207) to continue for a temporary period certain provisions of the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the House amendment insert the following: "That section 204 (f) of the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended, is hereby amended by striking out 'December 31, 1950' in each place it occurs therein and inserting in lieu thereof 'March 31, 1951.'

"SEC. 2. Section 204 (j) (3) of the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended, is hereby amended by inserting before the period at the end thereof a colon and the following: 'Provided further, That as used in this Act the term "resolution" shall not be construed to be limited to ordinances or other legislative acts, and any resolution heretofore adopted by any local governing body is hereby declared to be effective for the purpose of this section 204 (j) (3) or section 204 (f) (1), whether or not such resolution was legislative in character; and no suit or action shall be brought under section 205 of this Act, or any other provision of law, on the basis of any administrative decision or the decision of any court that the resolution described in this Act must be a legislative act'."

And the House agree to the same.

B. R. MAYBANK,
GLEN TAYLOR,
J. WILLIAM FULBRIGHT,
HOMER E. CAPEHART,
JOHN W. BRICKER,
Managers on the Part of the Senate.

BRENT SPENCE,
PAUL BROWN,
WRIGHT W. PATMAN,
MIKE MONRONEY,
JESSE P. WOLCOTT,
RALPH A. GAMBLE,
JOHN C. KUNKEL,
Managers on the Part of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the conference report?

There being no objection, the report was considered, and agreed to.

COMMUNIQUÉ REGARDING THE MEETING BETWEEN PRESIDENT TRUMAN AND PRIME MINISTER ATTLEE

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, I do not know whether the communiqué which was issued by the White House in regard to the meeting between President Truman and Prime Minister Attlee has been introduced into the RECORD. If it has not, I think it desirable to have it printed in the RECORD, and I now ask unanimous consent that it be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the communiqué was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DECEMBER 8, 1950.

Since Prime Minister Attlee arrived in Washington on December 4, six meetings between the President and Mr. Attlee have been held. Among those who participated as advisers to the President were the Secretary of State Dean Acheson, the Secretary of the Treasury John W. Snyder, the Secretary of Defense Gen. George C. Marshall, the Secretary of the Interior Oscar L. Chapman, the Secretary of Commerce Charles Sawyer, the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff General of the Army Omar N. Bradley, Mr. W. Averell Harriman, the Chairman of the National Security Resources Board W. Stuart Symington, and Ambassador-designate Walter S. Gifford. Mr. Attlee's advisers included the British Ambassador, Sir Oliver S. Franks, Field Marshal Sir William Slim, Chief of the Imperial General Staff, Marshal of the Royal Air Force Lord Tedder, Sir Roger Makins and Mr. R. H. Scott of the Foreign Office and Sir Edwin Plowden, Chief of the Economic Planning Staff.

At the conclusion of their conferences, the President and the Prime Minister issued the following joint statement:

We have reviewed together the outstanding problems facing our two countries in international affairs. The objectives of our two nations in foreign policy are the same: to maintain world peace and respect for the rights and interests of all peoples, to promote strength and confidence among the freedom-loving countries of the world, to eliminate the causes of fear, want and discontent, and to advance the democratic way of life.

We first reviewed the changed aspect of world affairs arising from the massive intervention of Chinese communists in Korea. We have discussed the problems of the Far East and the situation as it now presents itself in Europe. We have surveyed the economic problems and the defense programs of our respective countries, and particularly the existing and threatened shortages of raw materials. We have considered the arrangements for the defense of the Atlantic community, and our future course in the United Nations.

The unity of objectives of our two countries underlay all the discussions. There is no difference between us as to the nature of the threat which our countries face or the basic policies which must be pursued to overcome it. We recognize, that many of the problems which we have discussed can only be decided through the procedures of the United Nations or the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

The peoples of the United States and the United Kingdom will act together with resolution and unity to meet the challenge to peace which recent weeks have made clear to all.

The situation in Korea is one of great gravity and far-reaching consequences. By the end of October, the forces of the United Nations had all but completed the mission set for them by the United Nations "to repel the armed attack and to restore international peace and security in the area." A free and unified Korea—the objective which the United Nations has long sought—was well on the way to being realized. At that point Chinese Communist forces entered Korea in large numbers, and on November 27 launched a large-scale attack on the United Nations troops. The United Nations forces have the advantage of superior air power and naval support, but on the ground they are confronted by a heavy numerical superiority.

The United Nations forces were sent into Korea on the authority and at the recommendation of the United Nations. The United Nations has not changed the mission which it has entrusted to them and the forces of our two countries will continue to discharge their responsibilities.

We are in complete agreement that there can be no thought of appeasement or of rewarding aggression, whether in the Far East or elsewhere. Lasting peace and the future of the United States as an instrument for world peace depend upon strong support for resistance against aggression.

For our part, we are ready, as we have always been, to seek an end to the hostilities by means of negotiation. The same principles of international conduct should be applied to this situation as are applied, in accordance with our obligations under the Charter of the United Nations, to any threat to world peace. Every effort must be made to achieve the purposes of the United Nations in Korea by peaceful means and to find a solution of the Korean problem on the basis of a free and independent Korea. We are confident that the great majority of the United Nations takes the same view. If the Chinese on their side display any evidence of a similar attitude, we are hopeful that the cause of peace can be upheld. If they do not, then it will be for the peoples of the world, acting through the United Nations, to decide how the principles of the Charter can best be maintained. For our part, we declare in advance our firm resolve to uphold them.

We considered two questions regarding China which are already before the United Nations. On the question of the Chinese seat in the United Nations, the two Governments differ. The United Kingdom has recognized the Central People's Government and considers that its representatives should occupy China's seat in the United Nations. The United States has opposed, and continues to oppose, the seating of the Chinese Communist representatives in the United Nations. We have discussed our difference of view on this point and are determined to prevent it from interfering with our united effort in support of our common objectives.

On the question of Formosa, we have noted that both Chinese claimants have insisted upon the validity of the Cairo Declaration and have expressed reluctance to have the matter considered by the United Nations. We agreed that the issues should be settled by peaceful means and in such a way as to safeguard the interests of the people of Formosa and the maintenance of peace and security in the Pacific, and that consideration of this question by the United Nations will contribute to these ends.

The free nations of Asia have given strong support to the United Nations and have worked for world peace. Communist aggression in Korea increases the danger to the security and independence of these nations. We reaffirm our intention to continue to help them.

The pressure of Communist expansion existed in Europe and elsewhere long before the aggression against Korea, and measures were taken to meet it. The need to strengthen the forces of collective security had already been recognized and action for this purpose is under way. Clearly, decisions regarding the Far East have their repercussions and effects elsewhere. In considering the necessities of the far eastern situation, we have kept in mind the urgency of building up the strength of the whole free world. We are in complete agreement on the need for immediate action by all the North Atlantic Treaty countries to intensify their efforts to build up their defenses and to strengthen the Atlantic community.

We recognize that adequate defense forces are essential if war is to be prevented.

Accordingly we have reached the following conclusions:

1. The military capabilities of the United States and the United Kingdom should be increased as rapidly as possible.

2. The two countries should expand the production of arms which can be used by the forces of all the free nations that are joined together in common defense. Together with those other nations, the United States and the United Kingdom should continue to work out mutual arrangements by which all will contribute appropriately to the common defense.

We agreed that as soon as the plan now nearing completion in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization for an effective integrated force for the defense of Europe is approved, a supreme commander should be appointed. It is our joint desire that this appointment shall be made soon.

In addition to these decisions on increasing our military strength, we have agreed that the maintenance of healthy civilian economies is of vital importance to the success of our defense efforts. We agreed that, while defense production must be given the highest practicable priority in the case of raw materials whose supply is inadequate, the essential civilian requirements of the free countries must be met so far as practicable. In order to obtain the necessary materials and to devote them as rapidly as possible to these priority purposes, we have agreed to work closely together for the purpose of increasing supplies of raw materials. We have recognized the necessity of international action to assure that basic raw materials are distributed equitably in accordance with defense and essential civilian needs. We discussed certain immediate problems of raw-materials shortages and consideration of these specific matters will continue. We are fully conscious of the increasing necessity of preventing materials and items of strategic importance from flowing into the hands of those who might use them against the free world.

In the circumstances which confront us throughout the world our nations have no other choice but to devote themselves with all vigor to the building up of our defense forces. We shall do this purely as a defensive measure. We believe that the Communist leaders of the Soviet Union and China could, if they chose, modify their conduct in such a way as to make these defense preparations unnecessary. We shall do everything that we can, through whatever channels are open to us, to impress this view upon them and to seek a peaceful solution of existing issues.

The President stated that it was his hope that world conditions would never call for the use of the atomic bomb. The President told the Prime Minister that it was also his desire to keep the Prime Minister at all times informed of developments which might bring about a change in the situation.

In this critical period, it is a source of satisfaction to us that the views of our governments on basic problems are so similar. We believe that this identity of aims will enable our governments to carry out their determination to work together to strengthen the unity which has already been achieved among the free nations and to defend those values which are of fundamental importance to the people we represent.

SUPPORT OF OUR KOREAN FORCES BY COMMANDERS OF VETERANS' ORGANIZATIONS

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, this morning's press carried a release and a statement issued by the national commanders of four great veterans' groups with respect to the determination of the veterans of the United States to stand by the fighting forces in Korea.

The release is very short, and I should like to read it into the RECORD, by way of calling the attention of the Senate to the release and to their position:

WASHINGTON, December 7.—President Truman was urged today by leaders of the four major veterans' organizations to authorize General McArthur to use all necessary means, including aerial strikes across the Manchurian border, to save his troops from disaster.

The plea was contained in a letter to the President signed by National Commander Erle Cocke, Jr., of the American Legion; Commander in Chief Charles C. Ralls, of the Veterans of Foreign Wars; National Commander Boniface R. Maile, of the Disabled American Veterans; and National Commander Harold Russell, of AMVETS.

The four veterans' chiefs also cabled the text of their joint declaration to General MacArthur in Tokyo. They notified MacArthur: "At your complete discretion, if you care to relay this message to the troops, we would be delighted."

Their appeal to the President follows.

This is the quoted appeal:

We, the national commanders of the four largest veterans' organizations, feel called upon to make the following declaration:

We are deeply concerned over the situation in Korea, where 150,000 American troops are fighting against overwhelming odds.

We veterans of previous wars understand the terrific odds faced by our combat troops in Korea. No one knows how many GI's have died because of imposed limitations which have prevented them from fighting on equal terms with the Communist aggressors. These Godless hordes know no laws and have no restrictions.

Every step must be taken to increase the chance of survival of our fighting men. They must be given all possible help. They must not be curbed by restrictions and delays which will lead to unnecessary casualties. They must not be abandoned to disaster. They must not be sacrificed to delusions of appeasement.

We urge the constituted authorities of the free world through the United Nations, to take these actions now. We urge them to make available every means to save our men, including an authorization to send aircraft across the Manchurian border to bomb vital military targets. We urge that the President, through the United Nations, give General MacArthur full authority to employ such means as may be necessary to save our troops from disaster.

We cannot, we must not, let these fighting men down.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I yield.

Mr. BREWSTER. I wonder whether the Senator heard the United Press report from Korea this morning? The United Press conducted among the Marines fighting in Korea, a poll as to whether they would desire the use of the atomic bomb. Perhaps it is not surprising to know that they thought it would be a most excellent medium, in their judgment, and they were unanimously and enthusiastically in favor of its use to assist in saving their lives.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, I did not see that report, but I would not want a lack of comment by me to make my position misunderstood. I can readily understand the desire of the fighting men in Korea, who are involved in one of the greatest catastrophes which ever has overtaken American arms at any time, to have all and any available arms and weapons brought to their aid for their support and to help extricate them from the terrible position in which they find themselves.

It happens to be my own personal view that the use of an atomic weapon is a question of very vital strategic importance and determination. Whether there is a strategic target or whether there are strategic targets in that area which would justify or warrant the use of an atomic weapon is a question to be decided by highly capable and competent military authority.

Again I say that I am utterly sympathetic with these fighting men, who want brought to their assistance every weapon which can be of substantial aid. However, I believe that the use of an atomic weapon is a matter which must be carefully considered, must be fully advised, and must be strategically practical before it is used.

I am not saying that it should be used or that it should not be used, but I say that is a matter for local, on-the-ground evaluation as to, perhaps I might say, the decisiveness of the results of the use of that weapon. Whenever it can be materially decisive for victory, I say it should be used. If it is not a decisive weapon, then undoubtedly there are other weapons which might be used, I assume.

Mr. BREWSTER. Is the Senator from Iowa familiar with the suggestion of the Senator from Maine, first, that since the Congress has entrusted the atomic bomb to the President, he is the one who has to determine, in the first instance, whether the general who is on the ground, General MacArthur, should have authority in his discretion to use it?

I do not know whether the Senator has read the release this afternoon, but it seems to indicate very clearly that the President has reserved that right from the United Nations. I hope that is a proper construction of what he said; I think it should be the construction.

The only suggestion the Senator from Maine has ever made has been that the President might in his judgment deem it wise to give General MacArthur authority to use it—as I understand that the bombs are there—if at any time he should deem that it was helpful to the situation he faces.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, Congress has charged the President with the authority to determine as to the release of atomic weapons. The President in the exercise of that authority I believe must authorize the use of atomic weapons, if and when the use of such weapons will contribute to the decisiveness of our success. According to my view, that happens to be a highly technical decision which has to be made by those who have the ability to evaluate the decisiveness of the use of the weapon. With all due respect to the President, I feel that he, in and of his own training and experience, is not sufficiently self-informed. I have no doubt that the President will receive and will accept the advice of those who are technically trained and informed in the probable decisiveness of the use of the weapon, in connection with any authorization which he may give.

I understand the position of the Senator from Maine.

I did not intend to discuss at this time, Mr. President, the use of that weapon; but I will say that the statement of these four commanders of great veterans' organizations today expresses strongly, I think, the complete opinion and the complete unity of the American people that not only must every effort be made to protect the American fighting men who today are in Korea, but every effort must be made to maintain the ideals of freedom for which they are dying and for which their comrades who do not die are fighting. I think there must be no appeasement. We have had enough of appeasement and the disasters that flow from it.

I say to you, Mr. President, that although there is indication that in the State Department of this Government appeasement is still the major effort and major policy, if appeasement continues to be the dominating policy of the State Department and of the Nation, nothing but utter catastrophe to the American system and to free men everywhere can flow in the very near future.

This is the time for principles to be announced, and for the free American people to stand vigorously and clearly in defense of the principles of freedom, if we are to have freedom for our posterity and even perhaps for the later years of our own lives.

I commend the statement by these four great commanders of their organizations, and I commend to the serious thought and consideration not only of the Senate, but of all the American people, the import of this statement and this declaration.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER subsequently said:

Mr. President, I have just been handed by a page a copy of a telegram from General MacArthur to Erle Cocke, Jr., the national commander of the American Legion. I have not previously known about the telegram, and I should like to have it go into the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks. If I may do so at this time, I shall read the telegram, which is short:

ERLE COCKE, Jr.,
National Commander,
The American Legion,
Washington, D. C.:

Accept and convey to Commanders Ralls, C. M. A. Maille, and Russell my profound gratitude for the understanding reflected in your inspiring message of the sixth. The fighting men of this war will find much added strength in this demonstration of invincible support from the veterans of the last.

MACARTHUR,
Commander in Chief,
United Nations Command.

TOKYO.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, I should like to say to the Senator from Maine, if he will give me his attention, that the United Nations have never had the right or the power to determine which of the weapons in our arsenal we should use in the defense of the security of the United States. Any commander in chief who has the right, as our President has under the law, to determine the use of this awesome weapon will, I am sure, be guided by our own military advice, and will bring to its use a prayerful consideration of military and psychological factors.

The Senator from Maine was not present recently when I made a statement in answer to a twice-affirmed conviction of his, based upon an assurance that is supposed to have been given by Dr. Karl Compton, that the Russians are not in possession of the atomic bomb. I told the Senate—and the Senator will find the statement in the RECORD—that the intelligence that was available to the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy was directly to the contrary. I wanted the Senator from Maine to know that.

I have been informed by a reporter that Dr. Compton was interviewed on Sunday, and stated—I myself have not seen his remarks as carried in the press—that, while at one time he had made such a statement, he had not done so within the past few years. I merely want to inform the Senator from Maine of that fact.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McMAHON. I yield.

Mr. BREWSTER. I am glad the Senator from Connecticut brought up the matter, as I was not present previously when he discussed it. I have not had an opportunity to examine the RECORD. I am familiar with the statements of the Senator from Connecticut as to his opinion, and that, I gather, of some of his associate, that the Russians possess this weapon.

Mr. McMAHON. If I may interrupt, Mr. President, since I still have the floor, I do not wish the Senator to introduce the casual note that a restricted number of persons—"some of the members of the joint committee"—entertain this belief. Let the Senator from Maine be informed that, so far as I know, it is the unanimous judgment of the 18 members of the joint committee, for which I speak, and it is the unanimous opinion of the Board of Evaluation of the Government of the United States, so far as I am advised, and I believe I am correctly advised. I merely want the Senator from Maine to entertain no doubt at all about the overwhelming weight of opinion on this subject.

Mr. BREWSTER. I was very much intrigued by the statement of Dr. Compton, of which I have a copy, and which I shall be glad to put into the RECORD, for, although he made the statement to which the Senator from Connecticut refers, namely, that he had at some time possibly expressed a doubt, he would not have said that, following the President's statement a year ago, the Russians had the atomic bomb.

Mr. McMAHON. I shall be very glad——

Mr. BREWSTER. Just a moment, please.

Mr. McMAHON. Just a moment; I have the floor. I yielded to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, who has the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair had recognized the Senator from Connecticut, but had not recognized the Senator from Maine.

Mr. McMAHON. I should like to say I was informed by a reporter that the Senator from Maine said that after a review of his records he would produce for the RECORD Dr. Compton's statement. I think this debate between the Senator from Maine and myself has little meaning at this point. I am informed, I may say to the Senator from Maine, that Dr. Compton was one of those who reviewed evidence which was available to the evaluators for our Government, and he concurred in their evaluation. I do not assert that upon my own responsibility, but that information comes from a highly creditable source.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, Dr. Compton, in his statement—which, as I say, I shall be glad to put in the RECORD; I think I can quote it exactly—said that he did not recall his statement, for it was made some time ago, but that if he had made it, he did not say "years"; he said "some time ago"; and that in any event he would not have made that statement after the President's announcement, a year ago, that the Russians now had the atomic bomb.

The only curious part of that statement is that the President never made such a statement. It may be the opinion—and I am quite willing to accept the assurances of the Senator from Connecticut, which have been repeatedly advanced with an insistence which sometimes has seemed to me a little extreme, if the assurances are as great as he would indicate—that the Russians have the bomb. The President, in his famous statement of August or September 14, 1949, I believe it was, did not say that the Russians have the atom bomb. I hope the Senator from Connecticut is familiar with that point, as he will be if he will read the statement.

My attention was not called to this matter until after the repeated statements by the Senator from Connecticut. It may be that the President of the United States, the Comander in Chief, is quite persuaded to the opinion the Senator from Connecticut has repeatedly advanced. All I say is that up to today he has not made such a statement at any time. When he released his statement, it was extremely carefully drawn, I feel sure. I think the words were not chosen by inadvertence. If the Senator from Connecticut is familiar with this matter, as I believe he is—and certainly as he ought to be—he knows that the words in the President's statement were drawn very carefully so as not to say that the Russians had the atomic bomb. Is the Senator from Connecticut familiar with that?

Mr. McMAHON. Is the Senator asking me a question?

Mr. BREWSTER. Yes, I ask the Senator.

Mr. McMAHON. In answer to the Senator from Maine, I may say I am very familiar with the terminology which was used in the President's statement.

Mr. BREWSTER. Is the Senator from Maine correct?

Mr. McMAHON. I do not understand the vehemence of the Senator from Maine upon the subject. I have not at any time in the Senate quoted the President's statement in any statement I made relating to the matter, since the 23d day of September 1949.

Mr. BREWSTER. The Senator used it just now. The Senator said the Government of the United States was persuaded. That is the President.

Mr. McMAHON. I referred to the persons with whom I have had contact relative to this matter. I do not intend to debate it with the Senator from Maine, because that would take me into matters which probably would have to be discussed with the joint committee before they could be discussed more fully on the floor of the Senate.

I am fully aware that the statement of September 23, 1949, referred to the incident, to the event, as an atomic explosion. All I say to the Senator, on my own responsibility and as chairman of the joint committee, is that after listening to the information furnished by our intelligence officers, I not only say to the Senator that I am persuaded, but I say to him that I believe that it is the opinion of our coworkers, both on his side of the aisle and on this side of the aisle, that the event described in the release of September 23 was the explosion of an atomic bomb.

I see no point in further laboring the matter. If the Senator from Maine wishes to cherish the idea and delusion that that is not the fact, he is perfectly welcome to do it. In my position, I feel a responsibility to state what my belief is and what the belief of the other members of the joint committee is. That is all there is to it.

Furthermore, I wish to say that so far as Dr. Compton is concerned, I particularly said that I have not seen the release upon which the Senator from Maine relies. I merely reiterated what I had been told by a newspaperman as to what Dr. Compton had said about the assurance which he was supposed to have given in a public release, as voiced by the Senator from Maine.

Mr. President, if the Senator from Maine wants to believe what he has stated, let him believe it; I do not care. I think I have a responsibility to the Senate and to the American people to state the facts as I know them. The Senator from Maine need not become excited about it. As a matter of fact, the Senator may believe just what he wants to believe; it is all right with me.

Mr. BREWSTER. I appreciate the courtesy. I shall continue to exercise that proud privilege of every American. I am very much intrigued, indeed, to know that the Senator from Connecticut is familiar with all that has been said on this subject by these important persons. I further understand that when the President made his statement he did not even use the word "bomb," but he said they had evidence that there had been an atomic explosion in Russia. That is not the same as stating that the Russians have control of the atomic bomb, as the Senator from Connecticut knows exceedingly well.

Whether any significance was to be attached to the language which was used, I do not know. It did not attract my attention until the statement of Dr. Compton came to my attention, and it then led me to an inference that there might be some question regarding this matter. Certainly this is not any time to underestimate Russia's strength. On the other hand, it is equally desirable that the American people shall have the benefit of all the knowledge and all the views which are available. I am still somewhat puzzled as to why Dr. Compton, even in his statement, did not himself state that he was persuaded that the Russians had the atomic bomb. I do not know whether that is his opinion today. In view of the amount of information which has become available to the Russians, through the various acts of treason that have occurred, I would assume that it is very likely that the Russians might have achieved the development of the atomic bomb.

It is clear, however—and I think even the distinguished Chairman of the Atomic Energy Joint Commission agrees—that at the present time we have a considerable superiority in this weapon. At any rate, I have never seen that statement challenged.

If the Russians have control of this secret, other than having in the course of their experimentation occasioned an explosion, undoubtedly they are moving as rapidly as possible to facilitate the development and the production of these bombs; and it is very likely that whatever advantage we now enjoy is to some extent being reduced, and that the extent to which we surpass Russia today in the development of atomic power is not so great as was the case a year ago, and will be even less 2 years from now or 3 years from now.

It seems to me that it is appropriate not only for the members of the Atomic Energy Commission, but for all citizens of America whose sons may be obliged to pay the price of our difficulties, and for our European friends, as well, who shudder at the contemplation of the atomic bomb, to take into account that our ratio of leadership in this field today may be 10 to 1, but tomorrow may be 5 to 1. All of us should take that situation into account, in determining whether it is wise to postpone the evil day when the atomic war may finally come.

Certainly there is nothing in the record thus far to justify the impression that when, as, and if the Russians possess the atomic bomb in adequate supply they will not move and strike. On that score I cite the opinion of Winston Churchill, who I am certain is recognized as an authority on Russian psychology. He said:

> The only thing that holds the hands of the Russians today in Europe or elsewhere is the superiority of America in the atomic bomb, for which we are profoundly grateful to Almighty God.

Why it should be so disturbing to point out that Dr. Compton at one time expressed doubt as to whether Russia had the bomb, that President Truman in his famous statement did not say the Russians now did possess control of this awful weapon, and whether any significance should be attached to his carefully limited language, I do not know. I am simply one person who feels it is appropriate that we should consider all the facts and information which are permitted to come to the attention of the Members of the Senate, of Congress, and of the country. On the basis of such information the American people themselves must ultimately decide as to the wisdom of the moves which we may deem it best to make.

RECESS TO MONDAY

Mr. CONNALLY. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon on Monday.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 8, 1950

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Bernard Braskamp, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, without whose divine guidance we cannot carry on, we pray that the life of men and nations everywhere may be touched and transformed by a greater fidelity to Thee.

We penitently confess that we so frequently forget and forsake Thee. We fail to see that our supreme loyalty is to Thee and that this is the source and basis and inspiration of all other loyalties, the fidelity of the soul to its better self and to truth, of the loyalty of patriot to country, of friend to friend, of man to man, and of nation to nation.

Help us to understand that our tragic world problem is not primarily one of human or international relationship but that it is something far more basic and fundamental. May we see that it is the problem of bringing man into an obedient relationship to Thee.

Grant that we may realize more fully that all our efforts to achieve good will and a lasting peace will be vain and futile unless humanity is brought into a glad and willing obedience to Thee and Thy divine will.

Hear us in Christ's name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Woodruff, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate disagrees to the amendment of the House to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 207) entitled "Joint resolution to continue for a temporary period certain provisions of the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended"; agrees to a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. MAYBANK, Mr. TAYLOR, Mr. FULBRIGHT, Mr. CAPEHART, and Mr. FLANDERS to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

EXEMPTING FURLOUGH TRAVEL FROM TAX

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 9840) to exempt furlough travel of service personnel from the tax on transportation of persons.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. REED of New York. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to the bill but I might offer this explanation.

This bill was introduced by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK]. It has been amended. The bill, as amended, would exempt personnel of the United States Army, Air Force, Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard and authorized cadets and midshipmen traveling in uniform of the United States from the tax on transportation of persons when they are traveling at reduced round-trip fares at their own expense while on official leave, furlough, or pass.

The bill as introduced, however, would have permitted the same privilege for members of the United Nations representatives; the privilege is not extended to members of the United Nations as the bill is now amended.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED of New York. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS. When the committee met yesterday it was indicated by the drafting force that they would have some difficulty in preparing this language. I take it, of course, now that the drafting force has agreed to everything that has been done as we agreed in committee yesterday.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, H. R. 9840, as amended, would extend to personnel of the armed services traveling on furlough in uniform the same tax exemption that was in effect during World War II in the case of round-trip fares purchased at reduced rates at their own expense.

All railroads in the United States have recently announced that they will offer military personnel a 2-cent-per-mile special rate, effective from December 15, 1950, to January 10, 1951, inclusive.

The Secretary of Defense is in favor of the bill, and early enactment is imperative if the exemption is to be available for holiday travel of service personnel.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED of New York. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. I did not understand exactly the statement of the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] a moment ago. This does not apply to the so-called representatives of the United Nations, does it?

Mr. REED of New York. It does not, as amended.

Mr. RANKIN. I am glad to know that.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED of New York. I yield.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Does this apply only when a soldier is traveling on a reduced-rate ticket or on any ticket?

Mr. REED of New York. On any ticket when he is in uniform and traveling on furlough.

Mr. DOUGHTON. It applies when the person is on furlough and in uniform.

Mr. Speaker, I might mention that this is a unanimous report of the committee and it is recommended by the Secretary of Defense.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 12 of the act of August 8, 1947, entitled "An act to terminate certain tax provisions before the end of World War II" (61 Stat. 919) is hereby repealed.

SEC. 2. Section 3469 (f) (2) of the Internal Revenue Code is hereby reenacted, to read as follows:

"(2) Exemption of members of military and naval service: The tax imposed by this section shall not apply to the payment for transportation or facilities furnished under special tariffs providing for fares of not more than 1¼ cents per mile applicable to round trip tickets sold to personnel of the United States Army, Air Force, Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard traveling in uniform of the United States, or to members of the military or naval forces of any of the other United Nations traveling in uniform of such nation, at their own expense when on official leave, furlough, or pass, including authorized cadets and midshipmen, issued on presentation of properly executed certificate."

SEC. 3. This act shall take effect from and after the date of its enactment.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert "That effective with respect to amounts paid after the date of enactment of this act—

"(a) Section 12 of the act of August 8, 1947, entitled 'An act to terminate certain tax provisions before the end of World War II' (61 Stat. 919), is hereby repealed.

"(b) Section 3469 (f) (2) of the Internal Revenue Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'(2) Exemption of members of military and naval service: The tax imposed by this section shall not apply to the payment for transportation or facilities furnished under special tariffs providing for fares of not more than 2 cents per mile applicable to round-trip tickets sold to personnel of the United States Army, Air Force, Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard traveling in uniform of the United States at their own expense when on official leave, furlough, or pass, including authorized cadets and midshipmen, issued on presentation of properly executed certificate.'"

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Speaker, I believe this is a good measure. I feel that any break this Congress can give to the men in uniform ought to be given to them. During World War II I introduced a measure to give free transportation to the men in uniform when they were on furlough. That bill gained considerable interest in the Congress. I believe it would have been passed, had we been able to get enough impetus behind it before the war ended. This particular measure, as I understand, will result in giving to young men who are on furloughs and who need transportation a reduced rate on the railroads. For that reason it seems to me it ought to be passed. It is one of the most commendable measures I have seen come before the House during the Eighty-first Congress. However, it does not go as far as I would like to have it. I would like to have a furlough pass issued to each man in service so that when he is granted a furlough he can have the opportunity, at least once a year, of using that pass on any mode of transportation he chooses so that he can get to and from his home. But half a loaf or a quarter of a loaf is better than none, and I am glad to see the members of the Ways and Means Committee and the Congress interested in the young men in service to the point where we can get a measure of this type before the House.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Is the tax exempt on tickets purchased for what we might call first-class passage, riding in Pullmans, or does it apply only to coach tickets?

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. I would assume it would apply to coach tickets. I am not informed as to the details of the bill.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is the way it looks to me; and if that is true, I do not think the statement made in reply to the gentleman from California [Mr. PHILLIPS] is correct.

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. I heard the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee give an outline of the bill, and as I understood it, it was to benefit the buck privates more than anyone else. I am glad to see the rank and file get benefits which they should have had during World War II. Not many GI's have a chance to use Pullmans anyway.

Mrs. BOLTON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Yes, I gladly yield.

Mrs. BOLTON of Ohio. You spoke of the buck privates. What about the does?

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. I presume this bill applies to men and women alike who are in uniform. It certainly should, anyway. At any rate, I am glad to see this measure brought up, because I have some little pride as I was one of the first in pioneering this type of legislation, and I am very happy to see it brought before the House today. I hope it is passed unanimously.

During World War II, several thousand women in the triple-cities area, in Binghamton, Johnson City, and Endicott, organized groups of servicemen's wives, sisters, mothers, and sweethearts, and banded together into what they called Hall Furlough Clubs.

Their primary objectives consisted of giving militant support to my free furlough bill and also to actively aiding their soldier relatives.

While the Hall Furlough Clubs did not become national in character, they were indeed powerful in the triple cities and did a fine patriotic work in maintaining a splendid spirit on our home front.

So effective were these Hall Furlough Clubs in promoting Americanism and helping service people in general that it leads me to believe some similar group should be promoted at the present time.

Certainly the triple cities were better off for such activities, and our local young men benefited tremendously because of the marvelous spirit of these patriotic ladies.

I am giving serious thought to assisting the folks back home, if any want to join with me in such a movement, now that so many thousands of patriots are once again donning uniforms and leaving for training camps and battlefields.

Let us hope I can serve them in a somewhat similar capacity as I did in World War II.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL] has expired.

The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

THE LATE HONORABLE EDWARD GARDNER

Mr. BREEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. BREEN. Mr. Speaker, it is with deep sorrow that I rise to announce to the Members of the House of Representatives the death of Edward Gardner, a former Congressman from the Third District of the State of Ohio.

Mr. Gardner very ably and energetically represented the Third Ohio District in the Seventy-ninth Congress. Prior to his splendid record of service in this honorable body, he faithfully and diligently served the citizens of his native city of Hamilton, Ohio, as president of the city council and as a State representative, and in more recent years he served as Butler County Democratic chairman.

Mr. Gardner's fine record remains as a glowing and lasting tribute of service. His death is a loss to our district, State, and Nation, and, Mr. Speaker, I believe it fitting and proper that the House of Representatives rise for a moment of prayerful silence to pay tribute to a former colleague.

To Mr. Gardner and to his son Edward and his daughter Patricia Marie I would like to sympathetically add that we too will miss him.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BREEN] has expired.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Speaker, the sad news which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BREEN] brings to the House saddens me greatly. The death of our former colleague and my very good friend, Edward Gardner, is a shock to me.

Ed Gardner and I entered Congress at the same time. Early in the Seventy-ninth Congress I formed a close friendship with him. I learned to know him well—to know something of his principles and to know his fine character. He was a fine man; a splendid public servant. He was sincere in everything he did; honest and conscientious.

As the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BREEN] has stated, he served the citizens of his district well, and prior to coming to Congress he was a faithful and diligent official in his home community of Hamilton, Ohio. He had a long and honorable career in public service in Ohio.

I, too, offer my deepest sympathy to his family.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Speaker, Edward Gardner was an outstanding citizen of Ohio. He had represented the Third District of Ohio in the Seventy-ninth Congress.

As a Member of Congress he served his constituents and the Nation with fidelity and zeal. The public services and record of Edward Gardner have endeared him to many people in my State.

Before his service as a Member of Congress he had represented Butler County in the General Assembly of Ohio, and at one time he was President of the City Council of Hamilton, Ohio. He was a faithful public servant.

On many occasions I met him personally. He was a prominent party leader in southern Ohio. He was a man of great ability. In addition to that he was a citizen well respected by everyone and held in the highest esteem by his neighbors and friends.

His thousands of friends in Ohio were shocked over his untimely passing.

He proved his friendship to me many times during his useful life. I join with others in extending my sympathy to his wife, to his son, and to his daughter. He was not only a distinguished Member of Congress, but in addition was a good citizen, a good neighbor, a good husband and father, and a good friend.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I was a Member of the Congress when Mr. Gardner was here. I knew him well and favorably. He was a man of fine parts and great ability and good character. He represented the Dayton district and he represented it with honor and dignity. I am sorry indeed to hear of his passing. I extend my most sympathetic regards to those of his family who survive him. He was one of nature's noblemen.

NO SECRET AGREEMENTS

Mrs. BOLTON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mrs. BOLTON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, we have had so much tragedy in the Far East that our hearts are torn every moment of our days and nights. To me it is very important that we stress our right as citizens of a free country to know what is said at these talks between the President of the United States and the Prime Minister of Great Britain. Despite many requests for accurate information, we have never had such a report of the conference that was held between President Truman and General MacArthur in the Pacific. If this country is to unite, if the people are to support a program of high taxes and increasingly difficult living, we must know what is being done to us, what commitments are being made that will affect the Nation, our fighting forces and the world as a whole.

"IFS" THAT WOULD PREVENT WAR

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, if every Member of the House of Representatives, every Member of the United States Senate, Cabinet officers, and President who sanctioned war in Korea, China, India, any place in Asia, in Europe, in Africa, had to go to the front lines to fight, would we have any war?

If all the generals, admirals, colonels, majors, and so forth, had to go to the front-line trenches in Korea or any place else in the world, would we have any war?

If you asked the mothers, fathers, sisters, aunts of the boys at the front if we should have war, if their boys had to be killed in the front-line trenches, would they vote us into war? Emphatically not.

America is doing 95 percent of the fighting, 95 percent of the paying for the war in Korea. What for? Why? Making this effort is the most senseless, foolish war in all history. Over 30,000 casualties to this time. A war of bullies, not of diplomats.

These Asiatics have been fighting each other periodically for centuries. We cannot settle their differences, nor can we, by diplomatic means only, stop them from fighting.

Why kill our boys by getting into this mess? If you win the Korean war, you will start the work of rehabilitation only to find you will have to do this job over. Let the missionaries and churches work from here on to Christianize the world.

I have condemned the State Department and Foreign Affairs Committee for their actions.

I am against arming the 14 Atlantic Pact nations. It will lead to war, not prevent it. It will lead to bankruptcy, not prevent it. It will lead to hardships, not prevent them.

Little lending, curb your spending, and no giving.

SPECIAL ORDERS GRANTED

Mr. BIEMILLER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 hour on Tuesday, December 19, following the legislative business of the day and any special orders heretofore granted.

Mr. POTTER asked and was given permission to address the house for 30 minutes on Tuesday, December 12, after the legislative business of the day and any special orders heretofore entered.

A MISLEADING AND INEFFECTUAL GESTURE

Mr. BIEMILLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. BIEMILLER. Mr. Speaker, the American Medical Association, meeting in Cleveland, Ohio, this week, has just appropriated $500,000 to aid the Nation's medical schools in their present extreme financial crisis.

I want to advise the Members of this House that this $500,000 donation is a Trojan gift—serving no purpose but that of fatal indecision and inaction on our part.

The sum involved is about 1 percent of the minimum needs of America's medical schools. It is almost meaningless when you consider the sums that are necessary to keep these vital schools in operation and the still greater sums required to expand them to train doctors for our total military, civilian defense, and ordinary civilian requirements.

More than a year ago the Senate passed unanimously a bill authorizing a 5-year $250,000,000 program to meet the minimum needs of medical colleges and other schools training professional health personnel.

The AMA, however, has successfully prevented this measure from coming to a floor vote in the House. It has been the sole opponent of a measure which its own best-informed members, the deans of the medical colleges, have overwhelmingly endorsed.

The AMA has claimed time and again that the financial crisis in our medical schools could be met with private aid. Yet all efforts to obtain such aid have failed. A $500,000 contribution does not change that situation in the slightest.

I agree absolutely, however, with two of the statements made by Dr. Louis H. Bauer, chairman of the AMA's board of trustees, when he announced the appropriation of the $500,000.

He quite correctly remarked that "many medical schools, if they were assured a solvent future, would increase their enrollment now." He is also correct in noting that "the financing of medical schools is one of the most pressing problems facing the medical professions today."

A study of the needs of the medical schools of this country as prepared by a committee of deans and other experts shows that about $10,000,000 more a year is needed to meet operating deficits alone. Any expansion requires still more money—and there is no question that expansion is needed in the light of current war and civil defense requirements.

As a matter of fact, the need for the average school—again for 1 year's operational expenses alone—is $516,000. just $16,000 more than the contribution of the AMA. And that for 1 school, not the 79 we have or the many more which are needed.

We plainly need Federal aid to medical education, and to dental, public health nursing, and other professional health training schools. This $500,000 drop in the rain barrel should not obscure that basic and desperate need or the AMA's basically selfish motives.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. BIEMILLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may be absent all of next week because of reasons of health.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

(By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted to Mr. IRVING for all of next week.)

ACREAGE ALLOTMENTS FOR COTTON IN TEXAS

Mr. BECKWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. BECKWORTH. Mr. Speaker, throughout this year a number of the Members, I know, have noticed that I put in the RECORD numerous letters from farmers and county agricultural committees. I have had these letters analyzed by the Library of Congress and I am not altogether pleased to report these facts although I feel it my duty to do so. This, of course, does not cover the entire Cotton Belt because I did not get answers from all of the counties, but it does show, in my opinion, a trend of what is happening. I do not regard the trend to which I shall refer as a healthful one.

The analysis of the letters referred to shows the number of allotments of less than 5 acres was 22,145. The number of those who will grow no cotton was 4,453, or 20 percent of the cases referred to. That means this 20 percent of the people referred to will be out of the business of growing cotton. The number who were thrown out of the business of farming, referred to in the analysis, is 4 percent.

I have just one observation to make. If you should put 20 percent of the people who are in the grocery business out of the grocery business, naturally those people who are left, as long as we have good times, will be all right. If you put 20 percent of the people who are growing a given crop out of the business of growing it, naturally those who are left will do all right so long as times are good.

Is it the proper thing to legislate people out of business? I say "no." I am for free enterprise in farming just as I am in private business.

THE LIBRARY OF CONGRESS,
Washington, D. C., October 4, 1950.

Hon. LINDLEY BECKWORTH,
House of Representatives
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. BECKWORTH: We have tabulated the information on the number of farmers who received cotton acreage allotments of less than 5 acres which you requested in our recent telephone conversation and your note of September 26.

A summary of this information taken from the letters published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of July 26, July 31, September 22, and September 23 shows the following:

Number of allotments of less than 5 acres reported	22,145
Those who will grow no cotton:
Number	4,453
Percent	20
Those who will quit farming:
Number	878
Percent	4

I am returning the CONGRESSIONAL RECORDS and am enclosing the listing sheets as you may be interested in reviewing the individual items.

Sincerely yours,

WALTER W. WILCOX,
Senior Specialist, Agriculture, Legislative Reference Service.

Source: Letters to Hon. Lindley Beckworth, Daily Congressional Record, July 26, 1931, Sept. 22, 23, 1950. Compiled by Warren W. Scott, Legislative Reference Service, Economics Section, Library of Congress, Oct. 3, 1950.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, November 21, 1950.

Hon. LINDLEY BECKWORTH,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. BECKWORTH: This replies to your inquiry of November 6 with reference to changing price support legislation to require a farmer to carry out conservation practices in order to be eligible for Government price support.

In the statement of April 7, 1949, on the general farm program before a joint session of the Senate and House Agricultural Committees, one of the conditions recommended on an eligibility for price support was the observance of minimum and sound soil-conservation practices. It is recognized that such a requirement would present certain administrative difficulties and additional costs of administration, but it is believed that if the requirements are flexible to permit local adaptation to meet local conditions, such a requirement would advance the overall objectives of a sound farm program.

Further consideration should be given to the provision in future agricultural legislation.

Sincerely yours,

C. J. MCCORMICK,
Under Secretary.

STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA,
DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Columbia, S. C., November 20, 1950.

Hon. LINDLEY BECKWORTH,
New House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. BECKWORTH: I thank you very much for sending me copies of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORDS of September 22 and 23, 1950. You have certainly gone into the cotton allotment problem very thoroughly.

For your information I find conditions in South Carolina very much like you describe them in your State and we do hope something can be done to straighten out allotment messes when they are reimposed on the cotton farmers.

Very truly yours,

ROY JONES,
Commissioner of Agriculture.

OFFICE OF THE MAYOR,
CITY OF KILGORE, TEX.,
September 30, 1950.

Hon. LINDLEY BECKWORTH,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR LINDLEY: Enclosed is a photo copy of a cotton notice to Tommie N. Nixon, who resides near Kilgore, which is self explanatory.

I think it a shame and disgrace to penalize this man—or any other person of like status—for growing three bales of cotton on a little old worn-out east Texas farm, especially in the face of such a short cotton crop throughout the Nation this year, and with a big demand for cotton. We here in Kilgore can't buy sheets for our new hospital because of shortages of sheets on the market.

I have known Tommie for 30 years or more. During all these years he has been trying to eke out a living raising whatever crops and stock he could in order to live—not make money. He lives outside the oil field and has no income from that source. As I understand it, he didn't grow any cotton for perhaps 1 or 2 years and for that reason was refused a quota for this year.

In view of the fact there is every indication now there will be no restrictions on planting cotton in 1951; the short crop this year, and, the high cost of living for these poor farmers, I see no reason why these restrictions can't be lifted now and give these people the relief so badly needed.

What can you do about it now?

Regards and best wishes.

Sincerely,

ROY H. LAIRD.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, D. C., November 15, 1950.

Hon. LINDLEY BECKWORTH,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. BECKWORTH: This is in reply to your letter of October 30, 1950, with which you returned our letter to you, dated October 19, regarding overplanted cotton farms.

The statements made by "Roy" on the bottom of our letter have been observed and it is certainly true that there is need for additional cotton production as stated in the press release issued October 3, 1950, in connection with the announcement that acreage allotments and marketing quotas would not be in effect on the 1951 crop of cotton, a copy of which is enclosed. In general, the press release explains the need for at least a 16,000,000-bale crop of cotton next year.

You will observe that in the last paragraph of our letter of October 19, 1950, the condition under which marketing quotas could be terminated under the legislation was set forth.

Sincerely yours,

C. J. McCORMICK,
Under Secretary.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, D. C., October 23, 1950.

Hon. LINDLEY BECKWORTH,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. BECKWORTH: This is in reply to your letter of October 10, 1950, copies of which you addressed to Mr. Ralph S. Trigg, Administrator, and Mr. Frank K. Woolley, Deputy Administrator, Production and Marketing Administration, and with which you enclosed a letter from Mr. Roy H. Laird, Kilgore, Tex.

Cotton acreage allotments and marketing quotas for 1950 were established under the authority of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended. This legislation provides that the farm marketing quota for cotton shall be the actual production of the acreage planted to cotton on the farm less the farm marketing excess. The farm marketing excess is the normal production of that acreage planted to cotton on the farm which is in excess of the farm acreage allotment. If the overplanted acreage is not adjusted to the farm acreage allotment within a reasonable period, the farm marketing excess produced on the farm will be subject to penalty at a rate equal to 50 percent of the parity price for cotton as of June 15, or 15.5 cents per pound.

The farm marketing excess will in no case be larger than the normal yield per acre times the acreage planted in excess of the allotment. If the actual yield is less than the normal yield, and the producer establishes such fact to the satisfaction of the Production and Marketing Administration county committee, the farm marketing excess will be reduced to the amount by which the total production on the farm exceeds the normal yield times the allotment. In cases such as the one referred to in Mr. Laird's letter where no allotment is established for the farm, if the producer establishes, within 30 days after harvest is completed, that the actual production on the farm is less than the normal production of the acreage planted to cotton on the farm, the producer may avoid the payment of a part of the penalty or may receive a refund of a portion of the penalty previously paid.

There is no authority in the legislation for waiving the acreage adjustment provision, except by suspension or termination of marketing quotas for the 1950 crop. The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized by the act to terminate or increase a national marketing quota when such action is found necessary to meet a national emergency or a material increase in export demand for the commodity. However, the large majority of cotton farmers who planted in excess of their farm allotments and who intended to adjust the planted acreage to their farm allotments have already made such adjustments. Others have paid a penalty on their excess acreage and have harvested or will harvest the cotton from this acreage. The termination of the national marketing quota for the 1950 crop of cotton, at this time, therefore, would add no appreciable amount of cotton to the production of 1950. Consequently, it is our opinion that cotton-marketing quotas for the 1950 crop year should not be terminated.

Sincerely yours,

K. T. HUTCHINSON,
Assistant Secretary.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
College Station, Tex., November 6, 1950.

Hon. LINDLEY BECKWORTH,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. BECKWORTH: As requested in your memorandum of October 28, I am returning the copy of correspondence from the Honorable K. T. Hutchinson, Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, together with other attachments.

As outlined in my letter of October 3 and as restated in the letter of October 23 from the Assistant Secretary, it is felt that marketing quotas on the 1950 crop should not be suspended or terminated at this time. Mr. Nixen should arrange to meet with his local PMA county committee for the purpose of paying the marketing quota penalty described on Form MQ-93-Cotton.

Very truly yours,

B. F. VANCE,
Chairman, State Committee.

BIG SANDY, TEX., November 1, 1950.

Congressman LINDLEY BECKWORTH,
Gladewater, Tex.

DEAR LINDLEY: I am writing to explain the position I am in as a farmer. I have a farm leased in which there are 251 acres. This farm belongs to J. Press Davis. I moved on this farm in the fall of 1947. The place hadn't been farmed in several years. The following year I planted 20 acres of cotton, 10 acres of corn, and some small grain. My peanut allotment was zero. This year they allowed me 4.2 acres of cotton and no peanuts. I planted the cotton, knowing that I couldn't make much more than enough to pay my expenses and rent for the farm in which is $175. I planted 12.4 acres of peanuts. When they came to measure my crop I told them that I planted those peanuts at my own risk, but they determined to measure them anyway.

On October 23, 1950, Mr. Lewis E. Stracener, administration officer, sent a man out to see me about my peanuts. He asked me if I had tried to sell them, or if I was going to sell them. I told him I was if I could. Then I went up to talk to Mr. Stracener. He told me there would be a penalty of 5.4 cents per pound, in which would be half or more than I would get out of the peanuts.

I am a veteran of World War II. I thought freedom was what we were fighting for, but when they allowed me 4.2 acres of cotton to make a living for my wife and two children I felt that my freedom was gone.

After returning from the service I borrowed money from the FHA to buy some cattle and a tractor in which I still owe some on this debt.

The point is if I can't plant but 4.2 acres of cotton I'll just have to quit and sell my cattle and tractor to get out of debt.

I believe since you being raised in east Texas, you know what I am up against, but I feel that there is some that don't.

That is about all I have to say except I would like very much to continue farming.

Yours very truly,

HOWARD M. SMITH.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, D. C., October 30, 1950.

Hon. LINDLEY BECKWORTH,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. BECKWORTH: This is in reply to your letters of October 11, 1950, asking whether the Department expects to recommend mandatory price support on the 1951 crop of sweetpotatoes.

Under the Agricultural Act of 1949 sweetpotatoes were placed in the same category as other veegtables with respect to purchase operations. Existing legislation appears adequate insofar as sweetpotatoes are concerned and unless circumstances change materially, the Department does not expect to recommend any change in legislation affecting sweetpotatoes.

Sincerely yours,

C. J. McCORMICK,
Under Secretary.

UNITED STATES
DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
FARMERS HOME ADMINISTRATION,
Dallas, Tex., November 3, 1950.

Hon. LINDLEY BECKWORTH,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. BECKWORTH: I wish to keep you fully informed as to recent developments as applicable to the Farmers Home Administration program in your district. I am attaching your memoranda and letters from various individuals as you requested.

Last year, as you will recall, our agent went into various counties in that east Texas area with funds to assist farmers suffering a loss on their sweetpotato crops due to the heavy rainfall and flood conditions in 1949.

We held a meeting of all supervisory personnel in the east Texas area on October 31, about which I wrote you some few days ago. It appears that disaster conditions are prevalent in the area, especially with growers relying entirely on the one-cash-crop system of sweetpotatoes or cotton only.

In analyzing the situation and working out recommendations as an outgrowth of the Tyler meeting, I believe our agency can assist the area by developing a program under the Supplemental Appropriation Act of 1951, making funds available for adjustments to assist these farmers in developing a sounder approach to their problems, by including livestock in their farm plans and in furnishing the finances necessary for an over-all farm program.

Our desire to recommend a program of this type to our Administrator is based on the fact, as you know, that our disaster program was set up last year in the area to assist the sweetpotato growers. From financial crop reports these loans are going to be one of loss to the Government; anyway, it appears they are headed in that direction now, as the growers are not able to market their potatoes and repay their loans under the prevailing conditions.

The statistical information necessary to enable us to present a formal request for the area to be declared a disaster area is being developed by our personnel. I plan to give Mr. Lasseter a full report on the entire area as soon as this information can be compiled and passed on to the Secretary of Agriculture, requesting that the area be designated under Public Law 38 and funds made available through the Supplemental Appropriation Act of 1951.

Sincerely yours,

L. J. CAPPLEMAN,
State Director.

TYLER, TEX., November 3, 1950.

Mr. DENNIS M. POE,
Purchase Representative, Production and Marketing Administration, Pittsburg, Tex.

DEAR MR. POE: The harvesting of the East Texas sweet potato crop is far along and I believe that with clear weather 2 more weeks will see over 90 percent of the crop out of the ground. Some of the late plantings have been left as long as possible to increase size and weight.

Yields of No. 1 potatoes have been very disappointing. I doubt if the average would amount to more than 50 to 60 boxes per acre. This explains why growers are not going the route of selling their crop for school-lunch purposes. The actual cost to them will run at least $75 per acre and at $1.35 per box, they could not afford to lose some $25 per acre. Most of them tell me that they had rather go ahead and gamble on a rising price in future months. The market will no doubt react and we are encouraging farm storage by everyone who has any volume of potatoes.

I was hoping that a price of at least $1.75 could be set up to assist the growers during the low-priced period which would have held the market at somewhere near that level. The small farmer with a 5- to 10-acre patch of potatoes has had to sell them at considerable loss in order to get the crop out of ground before frost. It is this type of farmer that surplus programs are designed to aid. Of course, you and I do not have any control over the setting of the price which is offered to farmers, but if it had been set at a reasonable figure we would not have had the losses to the farmers which have occurred this season.

We appreciate your fine cooperation which you and your coworkers have given and if we can help you in any way, let us know.

Yours truly,

J. F. ROSBOROUGH,
Horticultural Marketing Specialist.

House of Representatives,
Gladewater, Tex.

DEAR MR. BECKWORTH: You will find enclosed copy of final report of Sweetpotato Program RMP–25a–74, which was terminated November 3. You will note that only 500 bushels of potatoes were purchased.

I am also enclosing copy of a letter to Mr. J. L. Harris, route 1, Gladewater, Tex., and one to Mr. N. E. Dudley, of Whitehouse, Smith County, Tex., giving them information we have regarding shipments of sweetpotatoes from quarantined areas.

I want you to know that I appreciated the visit with you and it is regretted that we were not able to help the farmers in your area. In summing up the potato situation up there this year and with the interest of the farmer at heart, you cannot blame the farmer for not selling his potatoes to the Government at a price we offered, as most of the farmers were only getting 25 to 40 percent U. S. No. 1 potatoes off of their land and the actual cost to them runs at least $75 per acre and the farmers felt that they had rather hold, taking a chance on a better market instead of taking a $25-per-acre loss on their potatoes.

The market is stronger and has improved some. I think the cooperative advertising has helped some. Assuring you of our cooperation, and with kindest personal regards, I am,

Yours very truly,

DENNIS M. POE,
Purchase Representative.

To: Hon. Congressman LINDLEY BECKWORTH.
From: Upshur County PMA Committee.

Subject: Provisions be changed in acreage allotment law to give veterans a better break in getting future acreage allotment for farms that have no previous acreage history.

For instance: All veterans of World Wars I and II and subsequent wars that buy or rent farms that have no cropland history in the base years from which farm allotments are computed, by making application to the County Committee shall be granted crop acreage that compares favorably with other farms in the vicinity.

Then their acreage for allotment crops shall be computed according to the acreage granted by the County Committee.

If you remember, the industrial workers were guaranteed their jobs back if and when they returned home. All kinds of promises were made the other boys but no provision was made in the law for their benefit on crop acreage allotments on farms with no crop history.

The veterans that come within this category that made application for allotments received on an average about 1.5 acres, some as low as 0.2 of an acre. This was so small that some of them would not plant.

POLITICAL CONTROL CRIPPLES COTTON

Senator TOM CONNALLY says that Secretary of Agriculture Charles F. Brannan's restriction of cotton exports favors the spinning industry to the disadvantage of the farmers. This is the truth, but not the whole truth. The whole Government program of controls also favors the foreign cotton growers and the producers of both natural and synthetic competing fabrics to the disadvantage of the cotton farmers.

Looking at the record of cotton crop control to date, we find the following results indisputable:

First, it has given the farmer a momentarily higher price but robbed him of most of the benefits of it by inflating the purchasing power of the dollar through similar moves favoring other minority groups.

Second, it has increasingly encouraged all manner of competition with cotton in such a way that more and more artificial stimulus must be injected into the cotton growing industry in order to maintain even a semblance of higher value. For example, Texas cotton normally sells on a parity with, or a little above, Mexican cotton. Since the recent order of the Department of Agriculture, Texas cotton has dropped $20 a bale and Mexican cotton has increased $40. The same boost in price of foreign cotton has been general. The American taxpayer—and the American cotton farmer—are paying through the nose to encourage foreign production of cotton.

Third, it is largely offsetting the good results being obtained in cotton growing, marketing and spinning research such as is being carried on by the Texas Cotton research committee.

The present crisis in the southern cotton industry comes from official blundering almost without parallel. And the blundering has been done primarily by people in authority who know little about the cotton industry.

It appears that the cotton industry of the South is headed for extinction, despite some sound economic and scientific achievements to preserve it, unless something is done to reverse the trend of political control.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, D. C., November 14, 1950.

Hon. LINDLEY BECKWORTH,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. BECKWORTH: This is in reply to your letter dated October 19, 1950, copies of which were forwarded to Mr. Ralph S. Trigg, Administrator, and Mr. Frank K. Woolley, Deputy Administrator, Production and Marketing Administration, with which you enclosed a copy of a letter from the Upshur County, Texas PMA Committee. This county committee has recommended that the acreage-allotment law be amended to provide certain privileges for veterans of World Wars I and II.

The Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, under which the 1950 national cotton acreage allotment was apportioned to the respective States, counties and farms is specific as to the manner in which the apportionments shall be made. The act contains no provisions which would permit special consideration for veterans, as individuals, in the establishment of cotton acreage allotments.

Since marketing quotas and acreage allotments will not be in effect on the 1951 crop of cotton, veterans who are operating farms which do not have cotton acreage history for the other base period years will have an opportunity to establish cotton acreage history for 1951.

Sincerely yours,

C. J. MCCORMICK,
Under Secretary.

TALKS WITH OUR READERS

(By Ferdie J. Deering, editor)

The futility of Government attempts to control crop production through acreage allotments is demonstrated again in the 1950 cotton-crop failure. So, for 1951 at least, there won't be any acreage controls on the cotton crop.

The breakdown of the allotment system might be glossed over by designating last spring's "cotton surplus" as a "national reserve" this fall. But that won't keep farmers from regarding last spring's red tape in the form of red ink this fall. What does it matter if cotton sells for 40 cents a pound if you lost your crop to bugs, bad weather, and bureaucrats?

Farmers planted only about 18,000,000 of the 21,000,000 acres allotted this year, in spite of clamor for larger allotments in some areas. Texas in 1949 grew about one-third of the Nation's cotton, so drew a big cut in acreage this year. But farmers planted 8 percent less than allotted. Oklahoma, with a small allotment, failed by about 19 percent to get it all planted.

A survey by Texas Congressman LINDLEY BECKWORTH revealed that one reason was that, all over the cotton belt, thousands of farmers received less than 5 acres cotton acreage allotment. Many of these planted no cotton.

In Oklahoma, 384 of LeFlore County's 2,097 cotton growers had less than 5 acres. In Stephens County 305 had 5 acres or less, in Atoka County 659 growers were assigned less than 5 acres. In Carter County, where Ardmore was once a major inland cotton market, 154 of the 735 old cotton growers had under 5 acres. The list could be extended in Texas, Tennessee, Arkansas, or Mississippi.

The allotments didn't cause the main reduction in cotton yields, though. Bad weather in many areas, and heavy insect damage in most sections cut yields so that farmers grew only about 10,000,000 bales of cotton, much less than our usual needs. Most of the 1948 and 1949 loan cotton has moved into trade. We need a cotton crop in 1951 to avoid a cotton shortage. Until Government can control the weather, it can't control crop production.

Commentators have a lot to say about Government losses on price-support programs. Some of it is true. Part may be easily misinterpreted.

The United States Chamber of Commerce, supported by big business, has made a study in which it points out that only one manufacturing company apparently has greater assets than the $3,250,000,000 held by the Commodity Credit Corp. Standard Oil of New Jersey is larger. General Motors and United States Steel are smaller. Agriculture is big, and with $100,000,000 in capital and $6,750,000,000 in borrowing power, CCC is a major factor in all aspects of our national economy.

The report also points out that not all CCC programs show losses. It cites 4 years with profits totaling $138,000,000 paid to Federal Treasury. From 1933 to 1950 the domestic cotton program shows a profit of $245,000,000 the cotton-rubber barter program carried on during the war netted $11,000,000 and the domestic tobacco program shows a profit of over $5,000,000.

On the loss side are the $416,000,000 for potatoes, $92,000,000 on wool, $82,000,000 on eggs, $67,000,000 on peanuts, and $51,000,000 on wheat.

The net loss on price-support programs since its organization in 1933 is reported to be $646,000,000, according to the United States Chamber of Commerce.

Some people want the national farm program to fail, so they make a lot about these losses. A good price-support program should just about break even, over a period of years. If it loses consistently it becomes a subsidy. Neither farmers nor taxpayers are pleased with that kind of dole system.

Some farmers have been disappointed because their hybrid corn didn't turn out the big yields they'd read about. Trouble usually is that they planted the corn on poor land, expecting miracles from the seed. But even hybrid seed has to have something to grow on if it's to make a crop. One noted corn breeder told me last summer, "You can do more to increase corn yields by building up your soil fertility than you can by switching to hybrid seed. But once you've built up your soil, then plant hybrid seed and stand back for a big harvest."

Are Federal orders regulating milk marketing in metropolitan milksheds a good thing, or not? Some producers are seriously debating their value. The trouble is, in the Oklahoma City milkshed especially, that they already have the order, and they are finding it is much easier to get under a Federal control than to get rid of it.

In the Oklahoma City area the price paid to producers under the order has been less than it was before the order. The price to consumers has been increased. The base has been broadened so that producers may market more of their milk over the flush season, and accurate weights and tests are assured.

A similar order is in effect in Tulsa. The Dallas-Forth Worth area has the matter under consideration. Houston survived a milk war without an order, and now producers there receive one of the Nation's top prices. Which is best we cannot say. We do believe that producers should look at the situation carefully before vesting marketing rights in a Federal bureau. The time to consider is before the action is applied; it isn't easy to change things afterward.

Every now and then we get a complaint from some shipper who thinks his stock has been mixed up in selling. We've never found a case where there was substantial evidence that this happened.

However, it could happen, because a lot of people never brand or mark their animals before shipping. They only know that they sent a red steer and a black cow to market. The yards receive daily scores of head that would meet that general description.

Don't spoil the hide by too large markings, but help defeat rustlers at home and avoid mistakes in shipping by using some clear marking that will identify your stock to your neighbors, the trucker, and the commission man who sells them for you.

You can have your brand registered for your exclusive use if you wish, affording greater protection against the thieves that are working our ranches these days.

Hon. LINDLEY BECKWORTH,

DEAR SIR: More than 70 members of the association recently voted unanimously to oppose any reduction in the peanut acreage allotment in a special meeting held in the Elkhart auditorium.

I am instructed by unanimous resolution to ask your support in the matter of using your influence to stop this reduction in acreage over 1950 allotment.

Yours very truly,

Hon. LINDLEY BECKWORTH,
Member of Congress,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN: I have your letter of November 28, in which you quoted a letter received from Mr. M. V. Stuteville, Elkhart Farmers Cooperative Association, Elkhart, Tex.

I regret that there is nothing this organization can do about the reduction of peanut acreage allotment since the law as passed by Congress specifies the method to be used by the Department in allocating peanut acreage allotments. The reduction in Texas is very severe and is going to work an extreme hardship on many producers.

Very truly yours,
B. F. VANCE,
Chairman, State Committee.

DEAR MR. BECKWORTH: Enclosed is a letter from a broker in Canada, whom Mr. King, of the King Peanut Co., Abilene, Tex., contacted in regard to my peanuts.

From this letter you will see where our agriculture market is going.

Please return to Mr. King after you have digested the contents.

Thanking you for your efforts in my behalf,
Yours very truly,
A. WM. SCHILD.

KING PEANUT CO.,
Abilene, Tex.

DEAR SIRS: We thank you for your favor of the 14th instant quoting us on Spanish peanuts. However, we are sorry that the prospects are not very favorable for business with Canada at this time due to the fact that similar commodities are obtainable from China, India, at prices anywhere from 5 to 7 cents per pound below the basis you quote. We, however, doubt whether you can meet this competition in view of your Government price guarantee. However, should circumstances enable you to give us lower prices, we would be very pleased to hear from you.

Yours very truly,
W. H. ESCOTT CO., LTD.

THE LATE HONORABLE JOHN McDUFFIE

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, on November 1, I was across the water under an assignment from the chairman of the Judiciary Committee of which I have the honor to be a member. I have only recently returned and today have just been apprised that the attention of the Members of the House has not been called to the fact that on that day a former distinguished Member of this House fell asleep, at the end of a service of 15 years as judge of the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of Alabama, who served for 20 years theretofore as an honored and beloved Member of this House, the Honorable John McDuffie of Monroeville and Mobile, Ala.

Judge McDuffie was born at River Ridge in Monroe County, Ala., on September 25, 1883, the son of John and Virginia Marion Lett McDuffie. He was educated by private tutors and in the Southern University at Greensboro, Ala., then graduated from the Alabama Polytechnic Institute at Auburn, in 1904, graduated from the University of Alabama Law School with a degree of LL. B. in 1908.

His first public service was in the legislature of Alabama where his service commended him to the electorate of Alabama, who elected him prosecuting attorney for the first judicial circuit of Alabama for two terms, and then sent him to Congress, where he was a member of the House of Representatives from the Sixty-sixth to the Seventy-fourth Congresses, representing the First Alabama District.

He resigned March 2, 1935, to become judge of the United States District Court for the Southern District of Alabama.

He was the author of much important legislation, including the McDuffie-Tydings Act, which decreed freedom for the Philippines.

He came within three votes of being elected speaker of the National House of Representatives.

He was a member of the Democratic Party, the Presbyterian Church of the United States, the Masonic, and Knights of Pythias. He was married twice, his first wife being Mrs. Cornelia H. McDuffie. Of that union there was born one child, a daughter, Cornelia, who is now Mrs. Turner. He is survived by his second wife, Mrs. Mary C. McDuffie.

He was known and beloved by many Members of this House and by everyone who ever served with him. It is not too much to say that he was as popular as any man who ever graced these Halls.

Judge McDuffie rendered a memorable service to the bench as well as to the bar, and the administration of justice, not only in Alabama but here in Washington and in many other places where he had been called by his duties.

It gives me pride to certify that this truly great man rendered his State and the Nation a service that few have equaled and none excelled.

Every heart must go out to his bereaved loved ones.

It is a sad duty to apprise the House of his passing onto the reward which he so richly earned and deserves, in the house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I am delighted to yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. I simply wish to endorse everything the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS] has said about our distinguished friend and former colleague, John McDuffie.

I served with him here for many years. We were intimately acquainted. In one contest we were pitted against each other. I can truthfully say that I never met a finer American, a more courteous gentleman, or a nobler character than John McDuffie.

His passing is a great loss, not only to the State of Alabama, but to the entire Nation.

Mr. HOBBS. I now yield to our distinguished Speaker, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN].

Mr. RAYBURN. John McDuffie lived a great and useful life. His was a good and great soul. He was a friend to man. He truly served his day and generation.

Mr. MCCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I am delighted to yield.

Mr. MCCORMACK. I think the gentleman from Alabama best expressed our late friend and colleague when he said that he was known and loved by many Members as anyone who ever served in this body. When I first came to this body in 1928, John McDuffie was one of the first Members that I met, and there developed a very close and strong friendship between us. Those of us who served with John McDuffie will always remember him not only as a legislator but as a man. He was always a gentleman; kind, considerate, and charitable. As a legislator he was outstanding. The respect and confidence that his colleagues had in him is evidenced by the fact that he was Democratic whip for several years. He was at one time a candidate for Speaker. He was defeated only in a very close vote, and as one of our colleagues sitting close by observed just a few moments ago to me and a few of us who were seated near him it was one of the hardest-fought contests for Speakership ever waged. John McDuffie rendered outstanding service to his State, and when he came to the Congress, outstanding service to his country in the legislative walk of life and, later, in the judicial branch of our Government, for many years, he rendered equally outstanding service. I am deeply grieved in the passing of John McDuffie. When his death was announced I sent a telegram to his widow conveying to her and the other loved ones left behind the deep sympathy of Mrs. McCormack and myself, which I reiterate and repeat on this occasion.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I am delighted to.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, as one who served in the House with the late Judge and Representative John McDuffie, I would like to join in paying tribute to his memory and to his services as a Member of the House and district judge of the United States Court for the District of Alabama in which Mobile is located.

Judge McDuffie served in the House of Representatives for eight terms, or 16 years, from March 4, 1919, to March 2, 1935, when he resigned to accept an appointment as United States district judge.

When I became a Member of the House on March 4, 1925, John McDuffie was among the first Members of Congress that I met. Our families lived in the same hotel for a number of years. He was a member of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and supported the improvement of the rivers and harbors of the country. The improvement of the Mississippi River and its tributaries was vital to the people of the district I represent. We thus had many interests in common.

John McDuffie was an able and capable legislator. He was familiar with the science of government. He was a man possessed of wide information and was familiar with the problems and issues of all parts of our common country. He had his political convictions. He was not only a very capable legislator but he was a courageous statesman.

He possessed the judicial temperament. While I am more familiar with his record as a legislator than as a judge, he occasionally presided over the district Federal courts in Mississippi and he enjoyed the esteem of the members of the bar for his fairness and ability in the conduct of the court.

John McDuffie was a great patriot. He was devoted to his country. He was a kind husband and father. He had a most successful career in the House of Representatives and on the bench of the district court of the United States. Honor to his memory and peace to his ashes.

Mr. HOBBS. I thank the gentleman.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I would be delighted to yield to the distinguished lady.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I am very much the richer for having known and having served in the Congress with my former colleague, Judge McDuffie. I can say that there were no party lines as far as he was concerned, and that he was beloved and respected by the Republicans as well as by his colleagues of his own party. Among his outstanding characteristics I remember his humor, his ability, and his courage.

With his wife and all his friends, I mourn the passing of a great man, a great judge, a great statesman, and a great patriot.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I am delighted to yield to the distinguished minority leader.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I join with the gentleman from Alabama in his splendid tribute to a man who was a brilliant and outstanding American. It was my privilege to know John McDuffie for many years when he served as a Member of the House. I was pleased to enjoy his fine southern hospitality in his home in Mobile, Ala. John McDuffie was of the scholar-in-politics type. He served for the purpose of making his country a better place in which to live. He believed the closer the Government was to the people, the better it was for all. He vigorously opposed the trend of an all-powerful bureaucracy. In his later life he was an able jurist and served with great distinction.

The world is much poorer for his passing at this time. I extend my deepest sympathy to his family in this, their hour of bereavement.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I will be delighted to yield to the very distinguished gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. KERR. I want to join with the gentleman and the other Members of the House in paying a last tribute to John McDuffie. I was here in Congress with him for many years. He was my friend and I was his friend. I heartily supported him for Speaker of the House. I was very sorry that he was defeated. However, he was defeated by one who was also a great man.

John McDuffie was one of the most useful Members of this House I ever served with. He loved his fellow man. He served his country with zeal and earnestness.

Along with the gentleman from Alabama and the other Members of this Congress I want to pay tribute to John McDuffie, and we are sorry he is gone. We who served with him will never forget him or the fine service he rendered this country.

Mr. HOBBS. I thank the gentleman so much.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may extend their remarks on the life and services of the late Honorable John McDuffie.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I did not know of the passing of our former colleague, Judge John McDuffie, until the matter was brought to the attention of the House, a few minutes ago, by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS]. Certainly, I want to join with the others in paying my tribute to the life and character of Judge McDuffie.

When Mr. McDuffie was in the House I knew him well. We lived at the same hotel and our families were most friendly. We all regretted when Mr. McDuffie left us. When men like John McDuffie retire from Congress there is an unexplainable void. Things just do not seem the same for a time. His friends were numbered by his acquaintances and he accomplished much in the Congress for his district, his State and his Nation. He became United States judge in Alabama and I continued as a member of the Committee on the Judiciary of the House of Representatives having jurisdiction over Federal courts. Because of this fact, our friendly relations and mutual interests brought us together occasionally and prompted much correspondence between us. We usually agreed on judicial matters and I always prized his information and suggestions. He had a fine legal mind, was a tireless worker and was intellectually honest. In short, he had the courage of his convictions and the court reports stand as a monument to his sound judgment and his fearlessness. My family joins me in expressing sympathy and sorrow to his bereaved family.

SUGGESTIONS: TRUCE IN KOREA; ABOLISH SECURITY COUNCIL; LET NATIONS APPLY

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, we are all tremendously concerned with the Korean crisis and its meaning for the future of the world. This morning, as one suggestion for a course of action, I sent the following telegram to the President of the United States:

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 8, 1950.
President HARRY S. TRUMAN,
The White House:

Respectfully suggest following as possible basis for easing Korean crisis:

First. Mutual cease fire orders and withdrawal of United Nations and Chinese troops from North Korea.

Second. United Nations to set up interim seven man commission to supervise rehabilitation and administration of all Korea, selected from nations not represented by troops in current fighting.

Third. Elections September 1, 1951 for constituent assembly and provisional government to take office October 1, 1951 and make provisions for a permanent government for Republic of United Korea.

Fourth. United Nations to withdraw troops from South Korea and fleet from Formosa waters not later than October 15, 1951.

Fifth. United Nations interim commission to report progress periodically and to withdraw from Korea by December 31, 1951.

Sixth. Change United Nations Charter to abolish Security Council and provide that any member nation may exempt itself from application of Assembly actions involving its sovereignty by filing an exception within 30 days.

Seventh. Make question of admitting new states to United Nations General Assembly the first order of business following the organization of each annual session and provide for a standing committee to receive applications from any government and to report with recommendations at the opening of each annual session next following receipt of such application.

FRANCIS CASE,
Member of Congress.

THE EUROPEAN ASIATIC SITUATION

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Speaker, in all the speculation regarding what is happening in the conferences going on between Prime Minister Attlee and President Truman, it has been frequently reported or suggested that some of the European countries favor our reducing our own efforts in the Far East and our assistance to those who are resisting armed communism in Asia, there seems to be a belief that less aid to Asia will mean more aid to Europe; and that even to let Asia go will improve the prospects of saving Europe. I think our friends in Europe ought to understand that any such belief has a very dubious basis. It is more likely that less aid to Asia will mean less aid to Europe also. Why? Because the loss of Asia to Communist control, thereby freeing Russia to send into Europe all of her own forces and a few million Chinese, too, if needed, will so reduce the prospects of being able to save Europe that it is very doubtful whether the United States would be justified in continuing aid to Europe. To weaken ourselves further without saving them is of no benefit to them any more than to our own country.

I say this as one who has supported fully every program of aid to Europe, and who will continue to do so just as long as there is any reasonable possibility of success. But you have heard me express repeatedly during more than 3 years my conviction that our best chances of preventing war with Russia is to keep both Western Europe and China free and capable of resistance so that the Soviets are compelled to divide their strength and attention between two widely separated fronts. We still must find means to prevent her concentrating all of her forces against Europe or there will be no chance of its successful defense. I am convinced as much as ever that to save either Europe, or Asia, both must be kept independent of Soviet control. The loss of either will mean the loss of both. If Western Europe does not help us to the full in Asia, it is not reasonable to expect that we will consider it wise or possible to increase or even to continue our help to them in Europe. I hope that is clearly understood by all in our Government as well in the European countries.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, will the majority leader tell us what we may expect next week?

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes. On Monday we will continue consideration of the air-mail-separation bill.

On Tuesday the Yugoslav bill. A rule has been reported out granting 3 hours of general debate. Only general debate will be had on Tuesday, and the bill will be taken up under the 5-minute rule on Wednesday.

I am informed by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] that the appropriation bill will probably be ready to be taken up the latter part of next week.

There is also the civilian defense program. I am unable to give anything approaching definiteness on that, except that one member of the committee told me that it probably would not be ready at the earliest before the latter part of next week. However, the other two bills are definite. It is quite definite that the appropriation bill will be in order the latter part of next week. Conference reports may be in order any time.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I withdraw my reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK]?

There was no objection.

SPECIAL ORDER

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] is recognized for 10 minutes.

(Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks and include a newspaper article.)

BENEFITS TO VETERANS

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, earlier in the day our distinguished colleague from New York [Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL] who, on every possible occasion advocates consideration for our veterans, as do we all, had something to say, and I commend his remarks to your attention and hope you will read them as printed in the RECORD. He referred to a certain benefit which it is proposed be given to the veterans.

We can all go along with this program of giving every benefit possible to the veterans, but I am wondering if the veterans, their wives and relatives would not appreciate it more if, before they become veterans, we give consideration to and adopt a policy which would avoid the necessity of their becoming veterans and fighting here, there, all over the world. Would they not like it much better if they had an opportunity to stay at home, get married, raise a family, educate their children, and provide for their own old age rather than to receive any benefit which the Congress or a grateful country can extend to them later as veterans?

If my understanding of our Chaplain's prayer this morning is correct, he suggested that more important than the relationship of the nations of the world to each other was the relationship of each nation, and presumably our Nation was included, to God. I will agree with him on that, we have drifted far away from the Scriptures and from the sound principles of our forefathers. But unfortunately all nations do not seem to have, or at least they do not recognize, the same God. We have one. Other nations have others. At least I think they have—no, I will take that back. I will not say I think they have. Some folks think they have. I have an idea that perhaps we are all trying to worship the same Divine Being.

I never did fall for the doctrine that if a Chinese died he was going to hell just because he did not belong to the Lutheran Church. I have sometimes thought, in fact I have always thought, that even the Methodists, whose ministers used to preach hell fire and damnation, and to which church my mother used to send me or even go with me when as a youngster when I slipped a little and did something I should not, would get to heaven just as easily, just as quickly, as any of the rest of us. She would send me there or go with me sometimes, and I was forced to listen to that minister preach. That minister would scare the everlasting daylights out of me for a week or two, and I would be a fairly decent boy.

I do not think that all these nations are going to the bad place, even if they do not worship, by name at least, the same Divinity that we do.

Permit me to express my humble judgment—and I speak in all humility.

THE INTERNATIONALISTS' FOLLY, PLUS TRUMAN'S STUBBORNNESS, ENDANGERS THE REPUBLIC

American internationalists have refused to recognize any limitation of the kindly precept that every man is his brother's keeper. If such a policy was universally accepted and acted upon, the world's troubles might be over. But, acted upon by only a fraction of the people, such a policy is futile.

The internationalists believe, or pretend to believe, that it is the duty of the American people to aid and sustain all those whoever, wherever, they may be, who have less of anything deemed desirable.

The internationalists have not only attempted to commit us to the program of reestablishing the economic life, of rehabilitating the people, not only of the countries injured by World War II, but also of modernizing in every respect areas which were not affected by that war.

Yes, the internationalists go even further and insist that, where other people, other nations, do not ask for or do not want our aid, we should, by force of arms if need be, mold them to our way of thinking and life. Our internationalists are insisting that a world police force be used to compel acceptance of our policies.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I yield.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. It is stated that that will be accomplished through the point 4 program.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. But I would say to the gentleman from Minnesota that before they ever thought of point 4 they had another way of doing it.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I yield.

Mr. REED of New York. Quite a number of things that arise in these international affairs are rather puzzling. Secretary Acheson, I believe, served notice on the Koreans that if they did not balance their budget we could not help them any more; he also served notice on Greece that unless they balanced their budget they could not get aid from this country. What about balancing the budget of our own country instead of chiding them because they have not balanced their budget?

Another thing, the gentleman will recall that they were making plans to spend $10,000,000,000 to rehabilitate Korea when the war was over. I do not know how much more they expect it will cost for rehabilitation or how many other countries they anticipate having to take over.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I thank the gentleman from New York.

There has never been any thought of balancing our own budget. The chaplain, I think, almost every day asks the good Lord to help us. Apparently altogether too many are relying upon the thought that the Lord is going to balance the budget, because certainly the Congress does not make any effort to do it. So I suggest that we Members not only seek the assistance of the Lord in our prayers in balancing the budget, and in saving the country from its foolishness, but after praying it might also be well to have the prayers written up and then bring them down to the House with us the next day and look at them before we vote and do a little something to help the Lord accomplish the task we have delegated to him.

Now, coming back to point 4, before they ever thought of point 4, the internationalists had the idea that if any of these nations did not want what we were attempting to give them or force on them we should just join up in a world police force and make them take it, force it on them. I do not think that can be done.

The internationalists, for the last 10 or more years, have had their way. Financially, politically, powerful and arrogant, with false charges of a lack of patriotism against all who oppose their program, they have intimidated the overwhelming number of our people and their representatives, who long have realized that it is impossible for 150,000,000 people to impose their will upon the rest of the world.

The internationalists learned little, if anything, from World War I or World War II. Stubbornly refusing to either count the cost or evaluate the prospect of success, the internationalists have involved us in world war III.

The administration and specifically Mr. Truman, through Dean Acheson, who never apparently has considered first the welfare of America, and those of his school of thought, while pretending to fight communism, have coddled, harbored, and encouraged Communists and near-Communists in strategic positions in the Federal Government.

We are in world war III. Mr. Truman and his State Department set the stage for that war.

July 19, 1950, the President sent a message to Congress, in which, among other things, he stated that, on the morning of June 25, the North Koreans invaded the Republic of Korea.

He further told Congress that—

> In response to urgent appeals from the Government of Korea, General MacArthur was immediately authorized to send supplies of ammunition to the Korean defenders. * * * The United States Seventh Fleet was ordered north from the Philippines, so that it might be available in the area in case of need.

In the afternoon, the Security Council of the United Nations met at the request of Mr. Truman, who assumed to speak for the United States. At that meeting, the Security Council passed a resolution which called for the immediate cessation of hostilities and for the withdrawal, to the thirty-eighth parallel, of the North Korean invading troops.

The President further said that—

> Throughout Monday, June 26, the invaders continued their attack with no heed to the resolution of the Security Council of the United Nations. Accordingly, in order to support the resolution, and on the unanimous advice of our civil and military authorities, I ordered United States air and sea forces to give the Korean Government troops cover and support.
> On Tuesday, June 27, when the United Nations Commission in Korea had reported that the northern troops had neither ceased hostilities nor withdrawn to the thirty-eighth parallel, the United Nations Security Council met again and passed a second resolution recommending that members of the United Nations furnish to the Republic of Korea such aid as might be necessary to repel the attack and to restore international peace and security in the area.

Forthwith Mr. Truman, at the request of the Security Council, without the consent of the Congress, which alone has power to declare war, put us into world war III.

World war III, staged by Mr. Truman and his State Department, has already cost the lives of more than 10,000 American men. No one today knows even approximately the number of casualties. Their foreign policy has given us, next to Pearl Harbor, the greatest military defeat in our history.

Unless their program is repudiated, it may give us the greatest casualties sustained in all other wars in which our country has engaged. It may ultimately destroy our ability to defend ourselves.

But one thing we do know—one thing even the most ardent internationalist should know—is that England does not propose to go all out in a war against either Russia or the Chinese Communists. Did you note the statement of Prime Minister Attlee the other day? He said that the British flag would be found flying beside our flag in Korea. But he did not say that the British flag or the British troops would follow the Stars and Stripes, our Armed Forces, into Manchuria. The omission was significant.

France seems to have no will to join us in a world war. Her support, even in Western Europe, does not appear to be wholehearted.

We know, too—at least those of us who are willing to accept realities—that neither England nor France has any enthusiasm for a war in Western Europe.

Every thinking man also knows that the United States alone cannot engage in war throughout the world and win.

Those who have advocated the surrender of a portion of our sovereignty, insisted that we become a part of United Nations, a member of the North Atlantic Pact, will admit that it is Stalin's policy to induce us to dissipate our strength, our resources, by fighting a war wherever he can induce his satellites to start war. If we drop into that dead-fall, we may be bled white, our strength dissipated, the ability to defend the Republic destroyed.

The foregoing being the situation, it being evident that our so-called allies intend, at all times and in every way, to protect and advance their own national interests, whatever may be the harmful result to us, we should without delay, as quickly as can be done, get out of Korea—of Manchuria.

To withdraw from Korea may be humiliating, but never was there a war in which the victor was not at some time during the conflict forced to shorten and consolidate his battle line. Better to suffer humiliation now than to attempt to hold an untenable position at the risk of losing a war—destroying the Republic.

And unless the British and the French drastically change their policy, we should get out of Western Europe. We should get our men home and do as every other nation throughout the world is attempting to do—build up our national defense, make ourselves secure in the homeland.

An editorial, recently published by the Hearst papers, expresses to some extent the thought I have in mind and which has been repeatedly emphasized in letters from my constituents. It is as follows:

OUR AMERICAN DUTY

The blundering and disloyal foreign policies of the New Deal are taking this country into complete disaster—both military and economic.

Our sovereignty has been impaired by making us a virtual vassal of the United Nations, which disrupts our councils, and seeks to fly its mongrel flag over our public buildings.

Our wealth is dissipated to support socialism abroad and to defend alien peoples who are not willing to defend themselves.

The lives of our young men are being sacrificed in a desperate war which our purported allies are not trying to help us win on the battlefields and are conspiring to make us lose in the mazes of diplomacy—and duplicity.

For our own survival, it is imperative that we extricate ourselves from these destroying situations at once.

Without even inadequate support from others in the United Nations, we are fighting almost alone against massed hordes on the Asian continent.

Continuing the war means only the slaughter of millions in a quixote American attempt to conquer a vast and distant population.

First and foremost, therefore, this country should withdraw its armed forces from the invasion areas.

We should get our troops out of Korea as quickly as possible.

We should come home to our own country, reconstruct our defenses, and give heed to our own security and welfare.

This might be a defeat for the New Deal, which is responsible for our dismal plight.

It would not be a defeat for the United States, but merely an act of self-preservation.

Secondly, we should get out of the United Nations.

That organization has not sustained us in the war that we undertook in its behalf.

Instead, it has interfered with our operations.

Furthermore, it is conniving to admit the enemy into a privileged membership where the enemy could dictate peace terms.

Accordingly, the United Nations should let Red China in—and leave the United States out.

Then let the United Nations see how it gets along.

This country has maintained the United Nations since its inception, with no return in loyalty or gratitude.

So let those who run the United Nations pay for the United Nations—and fight its wars.

Finally, we should end our unrequited efforts to support and supply an ingrate Europe.

Even England, our supposedly stanch ally, has not genuinely backed us in our solitary United Nations war, nor assisted us elsewhere.

On the contrary, Marxist England formally recognized the Chinese Communist government, and collaborates with Marxist France in preventing an European rearmament.

Europe has intimated it no longer wants our martial help.

This is Europe's attitude. Let Europe look out for itself, and see how Europe gets along.

Since, obviously, we stand alone, we should have the wisdom and the courage to act alone.

For our duty is to protect our own people and to foster our own nation.

SENATE

MONDAY, DECEMBER 11, 1950

(Legislative day of Monday, November 27, 1950)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. Frederick Brown Harris, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou God of our salvation, the darkness and the light are both alike to Thee: Lest we lost our footing and our way in all the terror and tragedy of these testing days, we turn from the din of earth's shouting and tumult to this noontide altar of Thy grace. Through the tangled wilderness of human relations, show us the clear path of Thy will for our troubled day. In the dense darkness, black as the pit from pole to pole, be to us as a pillar of cloud and of fire. In the confusion of tongues and councils, endue us with the wisdom to rightly discern the signs of the times. This day, keep our tongues from evil and our lips from speaking guile, so that no careless word of ours may smite or hurt the spirit of another by our side. So may we do justly, love mercy, and walk humbly with Thee, our God. We ask it in the Redeemer's name. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. HILL, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Friday, December 8, 1950, was dispensed with.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States submitting nominations were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

On request of Mr. HILL, and by unanimous consent, Mr. MAYBANK was excused from attendance on the sessions of the Senate today and tomorrow.

AMENDMENT OF RAILWAY LABOR ACT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3295) to amend the Railway Labor Act and to authorize agreements providing for union membership and agreements for deductions from the wages of carriers' employees for certain purposes and under certain conditions.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the unanimous-consent agreement, the time is equally divided after a quorum call, and the unanimous-consent agreement seems to contemplate a mandatory quorum call.

Mr. HILL. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his suggestion of the absence of a quorum?

Mr. HILL. I withhold the suggestion.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, some business has already been transacted before we have had a quorum call. I therefore ask that the time thus consumed be charged equally to both sides.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the unanimous-consent agreement, the time does not begin to run until after a quorum call.

Mr. WHERRY. In that case I should like to ask a question of the distinguished Senator from Alabama, the acting majority leader. What will happen in the event the motion to lay on the table the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. JENNER] is agreed to? Is it the intention of the Senators who are in charge of the bill to press for an immediate vote on the bill, or will the bill be open to further amendment?

Mr. HILL. Under the rules of the Senate, the bill would be open to further amendment. However, it is our intention to try to get a vote on the bill as quickly as possible.

Mr. WHERRY. I believe it would clarify the situation if immediately after the quorum call the acting majority leader would make a statement to that effect. Under the form of the two unanimous-consent agreements entered into we are faced with a rather complicated situation, because no time is stated when a final vote on the railway-labor bill is to be had. Does the Senator see what I mean?

Mr. HILL. Yes.

Mr. WHERRY. I think such a statement should be made, so that we may be able to vote immediately on the bill if the Senate desires to do so.

Mr. HILL. Yes; I will do that.

Mr. WHERRY. Very well.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. LUCAS. I announce that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BENTON] and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHAPMAN] is absent on official business.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I announce that the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON] is absent by leave of the Senate on official business, having been appointed as a delegate from the Senate to attend the meeting of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association in Australia.

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] is absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] is necessarily absent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. A quorum is present.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, with reference to the inquiry of the distinguished minority leader, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY], I beg to say that under the unanimous-consent agreement arrived at last Friday the Senate will, at 1 o'clock p. m., proceed to vote on the so-called Holland amendment. Following the vote on the Holland amendment, the Senate will immediately proceed to consider the so-called Jenner amendment. On that amendment the junior Senator from Indiana has 15 minutes, if he desires to use that much time, and Senators who oppose the amendment have 15 minutes, if they desire to use that much time. Then a motion will be made to lay the Jenner amendment on the table.

Shortly after disposition of the Jenner amendment, we hope to take final action on the union-shop bill, a bill to amend the Railway Labor Act, which is the unfinished business, so as to leave as much time as possible between final action on that bill and 4 o'clock, when, under the unanimous-consent agreement arrived at last Friday, the Senate will proceed to vote, under the limitation of debate provided, on the bill providing aid for Yugoslavia. Of course, if we do not complete action on the union-shop bill at 4 o'clock, the Senate will return to the bill providing aid for Yugoslavia, and after action on that bill has been completed, the Senate will return to the union-shop bill.

Mr. President, how much time is left for the proponents and opponents of the union-shop bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Thirty-five minutes, which is equally divided between the proponents and the opponents.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I yield 12 minutes to the distinguished senior Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER].

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, we have heard it said that an old jurist was one time the recipient of a complaint by someone who protested about the volume of the law. This old jurist said:

> It is not the great volume of the law which raises such difficulties; it is the voluminousness of the commentaries about it.

And so with respect to the pending proposal. It is not the subject itself which is confusing, it is the irrelevancies which have been injected into it which make it appear there is some confusion about it if, indeed, there is any element of confusion existing at all.

Mr. President, as I see it, the matter before us is very simple. By the passage of a bill in 1926, and by its amendment in 1934, we have a Railway Labor Act. That act has always segregated legislation dealing with railway management-labor relationships. While air carriers and some other small sections of transportation are included within the act, it has primarily been legislation dealing with management-labor relations in the railway industry.

For reasons which the Congress at the time deemed adequate, there was denied to railway labor the privilege of having a union shop. Therefore, Mr. President, the question arises: Does the Congress desire to retain that limitation and deny to railway labor the right by collective bargaining with management to provide for the union shop? The bill which is now before the Senate would change that prohibition and permit collective-bargaining agreement between railway management and labor providing for the union shop.

Mr. President, and my colleagues, we all realize the reasons why that should be done. Congress has specifically recognized the same right in the case of labor generally. Under laws heretofore enacted the union shop has been specifically permitted in other fields of labor. That was done in 1947, and it was carried over in the enactment of Congress in 1949.

That is not the question here. But my distinguished colleague from Florida says that we should also attach a condition and limitation whereby management and labor by collective bargaining would not be allowed to enter into an agreement for the union shop in States which by their constitutions or statutes forbid the union shop. One of those States is our great State of Florida.

Mr. President, I say that merely because such a provision is in the Taft-Hartley law does not mean that we should adopt the Holland amendment and attach that condition to the bill which is now pending before the Senate, and there are several very clear reasons why the amendment should not be adopted.

In the first place the Taft-Hartley law applies to a very much larger field of management-labor relationships than is covered by the pending bill, which solely affects railway labor. As will be seen by an examination of page 3 of the Taft-Hartley law, Public Law 101, Eightieth Congress, it applies where "commerce is affected." That means all interstate transportation, not merely railway labor, but all interstate transportation. It also applies to all that vast category of industries covered by the phrase "affecting commerce." We know that that reaches down to a point where a very narrow margin divides what is intrastate and what is interstate commerce, when the broadest possible language, "affecting commerce," is used. In fact, Congress has been reluctant to use the language, "affecting commerce," which constitutes the utmost of its jurisdiction in the field of commerce among the States and with foreign countries.

So, Mr. President, the Taft-Hartley law touches almost the entire field of management-labor relations. It covers an innumerable list of industries and activities, whereas the pending bill affects only railway labor, a distinct segment of interstate commerce. That is the first distinction.

The second distinction is that in dealing with railway labor the Labor Board and the courts have held that it is necessary to bargain with all of a craft of a given character throughout a single carrier's jurisdiction. The particular Board decision to which I refer is found in the volume entitled "Determinations of Craft or Class of the National Mediation Board." This is case No. R–690, decided on May 27, 1941. I read from page 209:

> The Board does not undertake to discuss the relative advantages or disadvantages which may inhere in single or divided representation, respectively. Doubtless serious arguments may be made both for and against each method. The act leaves the Board in no doubt that Congress had in mind single representation for each craft or class on each carrier when enacting it; and that had the Congress thought of subdivisions of a craft or class or of a carrier as desirable methods of representation it would have made provision for their use.
> Finally, the Board concludes as a matter of law that the Railway Labor Act vests the Board with no discretion to split a single carrier or combine two or more carriers for the purpose of determining who shall be eligible to vote for a representative of a craft or class of employees under section 2, ninth, of the act, and the argument that it has such power fails to furnish any basis of law for such administrative discretion.

In the case of Switchmen's Union versus Board, that decision of the Railway Labor Board was affirmed. On page 309 of Three Hundred and Twenty-eighth United States Reports, where the decision of that case appears, we find the language of Mr. Justice Reed, who states that the Court refused to interfere with that specific finding of the Board, namely, that in the railway industry all employees of a given railroad, for example, in a given craft must be dealt with collectively in collective-bargaining agreements.

So I say that the analogy that we should impose the limitation that the Congress cannot enact legislation contrary to that of a State—which limitation is contained in the Taft-Hartley law—is inapplicable to the pending bill, first, because in this case we are dealing only with railway labor, which is engaged in interstate commerce. The Taft-Hartley law is dealing with interstate commerce as a whole and with industries and activities and employees "affecting commerce." So the Taft-Hartley law affects interstate commerce on a vastly broader scale than does the measure now before the Senate.

Because there are many cases in which there is doubt as to whether the State or the Federal Government should have jurisdiction, it was proper for the Congress to provide that in connection with the Taft-Hartley Act the limitations of a State prohibition would apply. However, the pending measure is narrower than the Taft-Hartley law, and the analogy is not applicable.

Secondly, in connection with the pending measure, under the decisions of the Board, affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States, the management of a given railroad—for example, the Atlantic Coast Line—has to bargain collectively with all employees of a given craft or class in every State where it operates, whereas if the Holland amendment should be adopted, in the State of Florida, for example, a railroad could not deal with all the employees in the same category, because of a prohibition on the part of the State. So that is a difference which does not prevail with respect to the Taft-Hartley law, for in that law there is no provision that management has to deal collectively with all the employees in a given craft, as the United States Supreme Court, in affirming the decision of the Board has held is required by the act of Congress known as the Railway Labor Act.

Third, reason is on the side of not making a distinction in this case, because obviously if a carrier is going to have satisfied labor, it must deal with all of them in the same class alike. It cannot deal with all alike and have one or more States left out and say to those in that State or some other given area, "We are very sorry, but here we cannot give you the same rights that the rest of your workers have, because your State law does not allow you to have those rights."

Mr. President, I am just as zealous in the desire to give full effect to the enactment of my State as is anyone else; but my State does not have the right, nor do the States of other Senators have the right, I say with all deference, to usurp a preeminent constitutional prerogative of the Congress of the United States to legislate when it chooses to do so in the field of interstate commerce. Reason is on the side of having Congress lay down legislation prescribing the rules which will apply in this matter, rules which similarly will affect all who are similarly situated. That is all this bill purports to do.

Therefore, Mr. President, surely public interest, reason, and logic are on the side of making it impossible for a single State to defeat the conferring of this salutary provision upon an entire class of workers.

Mr. President, I have received a great many letters and communications in regard to this matter. I have received 43 letters and 8 telegrams in support of the bill. I have received 16 letters and 1 telegram in opposition to the bill. It might be interesting for me to read from a letter which comes to me from Mr. R. G. Smith, of St. Augustine, Fla., and the Railway Employees' Department, who says:

> This amendment had been discussed with representatives of the carriers during meetings in Washington prior to the introduction of S. 3295. Frankly, we did not anticipate the opposition which is now developing on the question, but instead we had hoped for only token opposition—if any at all.

I call particular attention to this language:

> However, the Florida East Coast—

Meaning the Florida East Coast Railroad's management—> passed out a pamphlet edited by the Association of American Railroads entitled "Shall Railroad Workers Be Compelled To Join Unions?" along with pay checks on June 1, 1950. Others will probably do the same.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Florida has expired.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield me one additional minute?

Mr. HILL. I yield one more minute to the Senator from Florida.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Florida is recognized for one more minute.

Mr. PEPPER. I thank the Senator very much.

So, Mr. President, judging by the letter Mr. Smith has sent to me, railroad management, which is the real opposition to this bill, has been passing out advice in connection with pay checks to railway employees; in that way railroad management has been giving to railroad employees advice as to whether workers should join unions and urging opposition to this measure. By the very language of the bill, railroad labor and management will be permitted to negotiate for a union shop. There is no compulsion in the bill for management and labor to do so. Management will be able amply to protect itself through free, voluntary bargaining on the subject.

So I do hope that the Senate will approve this bill which will enable railroad management and labor freely to bargain collectively for the union shop which is not now permitted by law and which for all practical purposes would not be effective if the Senate were not to adopt the pending bill and pass the Holland amendment.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I yield 2 minutes to the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE].

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, the amendment proposed by the junior Senator from Florida would deny effect to the bill now before the Senate in those States which either in their constitutions or in their statutes prohibit union-shop agreements and check-offs. This proposal runs in the face of previous Federal action in the field of legislation applying to the railroad industry. In this area the Federal Government has for a long time preempted the field. This is no accident, but stems from the close interrelation, both physical and in the nature of the functions performed, of various segments of our railroad industry. Thus, for a long time the Federal Government has had a special labor-relations act for the railroad industry; the railroad industry was excluded both from the Wagner Act and the Taft-Hartley Act.

The adoption of the amendment proposed by the junior Senator from Florida would, in large measure, either make unworkable the provisions of Senate bill 3295 or make its provisions difficult to administer. Here, too, as in the case of other legislation dealing with the railroad industry, the peculiar nature of the activity involved requires many of the employees to cross State lines in the discharge of their duties. Moreover, a dispute in one location of the railroad industry has repercussions that are unmatched in virtually any other industry in this country.

I would emphasize in closing, Mr. President, that it seems to me if we are to make the Taft-Hartley law applicable to the railway industry we should make it applicable in toto, not piecemeal. I speak briefly as a past chairman of a President's Emergency Board, the 1941 Board, which had jurisdiction of a labor dispute involving all the railroads of the country, including both the long and the short lines. On the basis of that experience it would be most unfortunate if we varied from the policy of uniformity in connection with the handling of railroad problems through Federal legislation in connection with the Railway Labor Act.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Oregon has expired.

Mr. MORSE. May I have one more minute?

Mr. HILL. I yield one more minute to the Senator from Oregon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon is recognized for one more minute.

Mr. MORSE. We have set up in Chicago, for example, the Railway Adjustment Board, which again functions on the principle of uniform application of its policies throughout the country. I respectfully submit that if we start making an exception of the Railway Labor Act, as proposed by the amendment of my good friend the Senator from Florida [Mr. HOLLAND], we shall soon find that the Railway Labor Act will be so disrupted by great disparities in administrative policies growing out of differences in State laws that the effectiveness of the act will at an early date be greatly impaired. Therefore, I sincerely hope that, in the interests of keeping the railway labor problems separate and distinct from the application of the Taft-Hartley law, as has been the historic pattern, the Senator's amendment will be defeated.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I yield myself the remainder of the time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator is recognized for 1 minute.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, the question has been raised as to the stand of the railway brotherhoods on this bill. I wish to call the attention of Senators to a telegram sent to each Senator, signed by 25 of the railroad and kindred organizations. The telegram, which is signed by all except one organization, that of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, reads as follows:

> We urge that you vote against the amendment offered by Senator HOLLAND for the reason that it would make the bill unworkable and create chaotic conditions in the railway industry, and that it is impractical and impossible of application and administration.

Mr. President, the Senate committee, in reporting this bill unanimously to the Senate, had in mind the paramount consideration of what was best for the public interest, what was the best step to take for the maintenance of industrial peace in the railroad industry, what was best to insure a stable and harmonious management-labor relationship in the railroad industry. Therefore, we reported the bill unanimously.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President and Members of the Senate——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Florida is recognized. He has 17 minutes, if he wishes to use it.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of Members of the Senate to the fact that, instead of this bill being, as pictured here, in conformity with what has happened heretofore under legislative policy as determined by the Congress, the bill is a substantial departure from anything which has happened heretofore in the Halls of Congress. The fact is that in 1926, when the railway labor law was enacted, the Congress insisted upon the open-shop provision. When the bill was reenacted in 1934, the Congress again insisted upon retention of the open shop. I am told by the distinguished legislative representative of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers that this was not only the insistence of Congress but that it was also the unanimous position of the leaders of the operating railroad brotherhoods at that time, both in 1926 and in 1934. I asked that gentleman as to what was the fact as to when any change took place in that thinking. He said that up to the time of the death of Mr. Whitney, which occurred, I believe, something more than a year ago, no change had taken place in his thinking on the open shop. He stated that no change had taken place on this subject in the thinking of Mr. Fraser, the long-time president of the conductors, until the time of his retirement, which was but a few months ago. He stated likewise that no change had taken place up to this time in the thinking of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, their legislative representatives and officials.

So, Mr. President, what is designed by this bill is to make a sweeping change in the policy of the Nation as laid down by the acts of Congress affecting railway labor, by placing in the Railway Labor Act, if amended by the pending measure, a provision which for the first time will bring the union-shop principle into that act and into the public policy of the Nation as stated by that act.

Mr. President, it is not surprising that there are Senators who are strongly against my amendment, because they were strongly against a similar provision when it was voted into the Taft-Hartley Act. I call to the attention of the Senate and the public the fact that all three of the distinguished Senators who voiced their opposition to my amendment—and I think there should be added to them the distinguished chairman of the committee, the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], who likewise, by his brief participation in the debate, indicated his opposition—all three of those who have spoken, and the distinguished chairman, making four in all, were as diametrically opposed to the thinking of the majority of the Congress on this question when the amendment came up to the Taft-Hartley Act. When the question arose as to whether the provision should be removed from the Taft-Hartley Act, as recently as 1949, as the RECORD clearly shows—and there has been inserted into the debate on this bill the vote—all four of the Senators mentioned took exactly the same adverse position with reference to protecting the rights of the States, who had voted anti-closed-shop or anti-union-shop amendments into their constitutions or who had enacted statutes of that kind. Those four Senators took exactly that position in denying, or in seeking to deny, the protection to the States and to the State enactments, at the time of the various debates and votes on the Taft-Hartley Act. I find no fault with the distinguished Senators for continuing their point of view today. They are consistent in the continuance of their point of view, but I would remind the Senate and the country that, as recently as last year, 1949, a large majority of the Senate, not including any of the distinguished Senators who have spoken against my amendment, showed by their vote—the large majority of the Senate amounting to 54 to 41; 53 of the affirmative votes having been actually cast, the other vote having been indicated by the distinguished senior Senator from Louisiana, who could not be present—the Senate, by a vote of 54 to 41, indicated that the Senate still felt it was sound public policy that the protection of the State constitutions and State laws in this field should be preserved in the Taft-Hartley Act. They insisted that that be done. So, Mr. President, we still have the same division.

I may call to the attention of the Senate now, as clearly as I can, the fact that there is no sound reason whatever why the same rule, which is now applicable to motortruck carriers, who are as much engaged in actual interstate operation as are railroads, and which is applicable to the maritime industries of our Nation, who are engaged almost exclusively in interstate commerce and in foreign commerce—there is no more reason why the rule which is applied to them, and which is applying to them without difficulties under the Taft-Hartley Act without any complaints being made to the Congress, insofar as the junior Senator from Florida has been aware, cannot be made applicable to the railroads and to the aviation industry, which are the only two industries covered by the Railway Labor Act.

So, Mr. President, it is completely futile for anyone to claim or to assert here on the floor of the Senate that a complete denial of the collective bargaining privilege, or a frustration of that privilege, or a serious interference with that privilege, is involved in the adoption of my amendment, which is in the same words as are already included in the Taft-Hartley law. To the contrary, my amendment will merely limit the application of this completely new philosophy, this completely new thinking on the part of the Federal Government, so that the union shop would make its appearance in this field solely in those States and areas which have not proclaimed their thinking as adverse to the union-shop principle, either through their constitutions or through their statutes.

Mr. President, let me remind all Senators that collective bargaining agreements are now in force not only in the two great transportation industries which I have mentioned, namely, the maritime industry and the auto-trucking industry, but also in many other industries which are not directly transportation industries, such as the coal industry, for instance, which do not operate under local bargaining agreements but under industry-wide or regional agreements which give full respect, under the Taft-Hartley law, to the provisions of the constitutions and statutes of the States in banning the closed shop or union shop. The fact is that in the negotiation of those Nation-wide or region-wide agreements under the Taft-Hartley Act they have merely had to make a limitation in the application of the union-shop principle to those States or areas where the union-shop principle can be legally enforced.

Mr. President, no serious question has arisen under that whatsoever. Senators know that is true, so why make a mountain out of a molehill, when there is no mountain here? The real fact is that, if my amendment be agreed to, the Senate of the United States will proclaim that its thinking and philosophy in relation to transportation in the railroad field and in the aviation field are based on exactly the same considerations that apply to the maritime field or the water-transportation field under the Taft-Hartley Act, and to the auto-trucking industry under the Taft-Hartley Act.

Mr. President, we might as well face this question: Is it sound to make a wide difference between industries which are directly competitive? That is what would be done if my amendment were defeated. We would have the railway industry and its employees, and the aviation industry and its employees, under a completely different and indeed contradictory law from that which prevails as to two other very vital and competing transportation industries, namely, the maritime industry and the auto-trucking industry, and which likewise prevails in many other industries not transportation industries, but in which the collective-bargaining agreements are on a regional or industry-wide basis instead of merely on a local basis.

So, Mr. President, it is a complete fallacy to claim seriously that a hardship would be imposed by the adoption of this amendment. On the contrary, it would require collective bargaining under the amended act to follow the same pattern which already prevails under the Taft-Hartley Act.

Let us open our eyes to the fact that if this amendment is defeated it will be an entering wedge for the defeat of that provision of the Taft-Hartley Act which has been found to be salutary and is being followed and is giving protection to the constitutional and statutory enactments of some 18 or 20 States, by which enactments the people of those States have adopted the principle, which is still regarded in those States as good, sound Americanism, that a worker has the right to work, independent of the question of whether he does or does not belong to a union.

Mr. President, that right prevails under the Taft-Hartley Act in 18 or 20 States. If the pending bill shall be enacted so as to break down the provisions of that act, break them down by applying contrary provisions to highly competitive industries competing in those States with industries already under the Taft-Hartley Act, surely it must be clear that such action would be an open invitation to break down and change entirely the policy of the country and of the Congress as applied under the Taft-Hartley Act in this field of union-shop agreements.

Mr. President, there is very little more that I wish to say, except to remind the Senate in these last minutes before we take the vote that the real fact of the matter is that not just the policy of the Senate and not just the policy of the Congress is sought to be changed, but that a very wide change in the thinking and philosophy of the leaders of the operating brotherhoods engaged in the railroad and aviation industries is sought to be applied, and that the people in those brotherhoods are by no means unanimous in their views.

Mr. President, I placed in the RECORD several days some 15 or 20 communications which I have received from a much larger number of reputable citizens in my State, who are members of these brotherhoods, and who spoke of their unyielding opposition to the pending legislation.

Senators will recall that some of those communications spoke of the unyielding opposition of the entire local organization or local membership in some of those unions. In addition to that, we know that the legislative representative of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers insisted upon having placed in the RECORD a few days ago, by the distinguished Senator from Alabama, in the first instance, and later a different communication by myself, evidence showing that his particular brotherhood, which is one of the most dignified orders and one of the soundest and most reputable orders in this field, does not agree at all with the philosophy of the pending bill, and desires to have its position clearly understood as being opposed to the bill.

Mr. President, it seems to me it is lamentable in the extreme that the leadership of the Senate has seen fit, in these days when we have impending problems so tremendous in their scope that we ought to be spending all our time in attempting to get the soundest solution possible of those problems, when our men are fighting and dying in Korea, when our people continue, as indicated by the mail coming to the office of every Member of the Senate, to reflect a lack of confidence in their national leadership and national policies—it seems to me it was a highly debatable and highly questionable decision to bring legislation of the type of the pending bill to the floor of the Senate, and to consume nearly 3 days in discussing it, when there were other matters which could have been taken up, like the measure brought up last Friday under the leadership of the distinguished Senator from Texas, the Yugoslavia-aid bill, which had been ready the day before.

Is it wise to follow such a course when we have no assurance that the House will even consider this pending bill; and, certainly, let me ask, is it wise to consider it when one of the most highly reputable organizations in the whole railway field, the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, indicates that it is in unyielding opposition to the proposed legislation, with the contention that without my amendment the bill will be highly destructive of the rights of the members of the brotherhood?

Others have explained that exactly the same situation exists with reference to the Order of Railroad Conductors, although we have no formal or official showing from them to that effect, but instead, they are signers, through their representative, of a letter indicating that with the Hill-Taft amendment in the bill they are willing to swallow this particular legislation.

Mr. President, in closing let me say that we are asked here to make a sweeping change in a Federal public policy which has been applicable since 1926, applied first to one great field, that of railway transportation, and later extended to the aviation industry. We are asked to make this sweeping departure at a time of great confusion and in a time of great emergency.

Mr. President, is that wise, or prudent? Is that an act of prudent leadership? It does not so appeal to me. It seems to me we are asked to make that sweeping change in national policy, we are advised that there is no serious question about it now, that we should make this sweeping change in the policy relating to the railroad brotherhoods which will be accomplished if this bill is enacted, when in 1926 such a policy was unanimously rejected, in 1934 it was unanimously rejected, and from the best information I have been able to get, namely, from the representative of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, we are told that no real sentiment for this measure was evident until a little over a year ago, and there is still great division among those who are affected.

Mr. President, the mail which I have received from important members of the brotherhoods in my own State would indicate more clearly than any words the junior Senator from Florida could speak the fact that the thinking is divided and that there are many sound, reputable members of these brotherhoods who want to cling to the policy to which they have attached themselves through all these years—to the policy which they insisted on engrafting into the Railway Labor Act, both when it was enacted in 1926 and when it was reenacted in 1934, and which was preserved there with general consent and approval up until about the time when, without unanimity or accord, this proposal for sweeping change of policy was introduced.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

So Mr. HOLLAND's amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the unanimous-consent agreement, the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. JENNER] is automatically before the Senate. Fifteen minutes' debate on each side is allowed, after which time a motion to table will be in order, if any Senator wishes to make it. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. JENNER. Mr. President, I call up my amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment is automatically before the Senate.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. JENNER. I yield.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska will state the parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. WHERRY. How much time does the Senator from Indiana have?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Indiana has 15 minutes, and the opposition has 15 minutes.

Mr. JENNER. Mr. President, through the courtesy of my colleague, and the indulgence of this body, the remarks I had intended to make on the amendment to S. 3295, which I have proposed, were printed in the RECORD of December 7. In those remarks I set forth verbatim the language of the proposed amendment, because each clause, each phrase, each word of the amendment has a specific meaning.

It is not necessary, perhaps, to read the amendment again, but I do wish to state again its main purpose. It is simply to insure, insofar as such a result can be obtained by statute, that in giving to railroad labor unions the enormous increase in power which is granted by S. 3295, we shall not at the same time deliver into their hands, bound hand and foot, without recourse or appeal, those employees of the railroads who happen to have been born Negroes, or of Filipino, Mexican, or Spanish extraction.

S. 3295 undertakes to give congressional approval to contracts between unions and railroads which will require that any man who wants to hold a job on a railroad must become and must remain a member of a union.

But many of the unions upon whom we would thus confer the power to compel railroad workers to become members will not admit Negroes, Filipinos, Mexicans, or Spaniards to membership, or will admit them only to a limited, auxiliary, secondary sort of membership, without real participation in the affairs of the union, or actual influence in the determination of its policies and practices.

In a feeble, half-hearted, wishy-washy attempt to correct such an obvious impossibility as requiring union membership as a condition of continued employment when the unions will not admit certain employees as members, the bill contains certain weasel words, as follows—and it is said that this is the provision which cures all the defects:

Provided, That no such agreement require such condition of employment with respect to employees to whom membership is not available upon the same terms and conditions as are generally applicable to any other member.

In other words, a man must be a member of the union to hold a job, unless the union says that because of his color, his race, his creed, or some other individual characteristic, he will not be accepted into membership.

But that, Mr. President, does not correct the basic injustice of a vicious situation.

It should not be overlooked that S. 3295 proposes an amendment to the Railway Labor Act.

Under that act, the majority of those employed on a railroad in a given craft or class of employment have the right to select the representatives through whom the entire class must bargain collectively with their employers.

To double-rivet this requirement, the railroad companies are forbidden to bargain collectively with any organization or representative other than the one chosen by the majority of the employees of a craft or class.

This majority organization, whatever it may be, is not compelled by the present law to admit minority employees to membership, or to participation in its counsels or the conduct of its affairs.

It follows that such minority employees—and in this connection I have in mind particularly employees of the Negro race, and so forth, who are specifically excluded from membership in many unions—are without any real and effective means of making their views known, of having their influence felt, or even having their rights respected.

Indeed, their rights can be—and their rights have been—bargained away by representatives whom they did not choose, for or against whom they could not vote, and to whom they had no effective means of remonstrance or protest.

Oh, I know there have been instances in which these disfranchised, misrepresented minority employees have taken their grievances to the courts. But that is a long, slow, cumbersome, expensive, and ineffective method of protecting the common right to make a living. It is no substitute for the real representation which is denied these employees through the combined effects of present union constitutions and of the Railway Labor Act.

As I said, the situation which Congress now permits is bad enough, and the feeble little proviso which is in the bill, and which I quoted a moment ago, is no remedy for it.

But what is proposed in S. 3295, unless it be amended as I am now proposing, would be infinitely worse. It would remove the governing groups of those unions which now refuse real membership or representation to minorities among the employees from any compulsion ever to recognize these minority rights. It would confirm the present situation, and give it congressional blessing. It would end all possibility of railroad employees of the Negro race ever securing those equal rights of employment to which they are justly entitled.

The issue here is not one of social relations. I do not propose that railroad labor unions shall be required to admit Negroes to membership if they do not want to do so. But I do propose—and every instinct of justice endorses the proposal—that if any union wishes to enter into a contract with any railroad by which employees shall be compelled to become union members as a condition of employment, then at the same time such a union shall open its membership to all employees otherwise qualified, without discrimination on account of race, color, creed, or national origin.

There is a very practical aspect of this situation. So long as Negroes, for example, are excluded from membership, or are confined to limited or auxiliary membership in the very organizations which are supposed to represent them in the vital matter of employment, then Negroes are not in any true or proper sense of the word represented.

Negro employees of American railroads—and it should not be forgotten that American railroads are among the largest employers of Negro labor—know by bitter experience what this denial of the right of real representation means.

They have seen their rights of promotion, their opportunities to better themselves, even their basic opportunity to work for a railroad at all, bargained away by men whom they did not choose and upon whom they had no means of exerting effective influence.

If we here in Congress are now to strengthen the hands of these leaders of railroad labor, we should at the very least require them to come before us with clean hands, not hands besmirched with the continuance of unjust, unjustifiable, un-American discrimination against those railroad workers who are of the Negro race.

That is what is proposed in the amendment which I have offered.

That is why I believe that this body, in the interest of economic fair play, should adopt the amendment as offered.

On December 7 the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] said:

> In effect, the bill inserts in the railway mediation law almost the exact provisions, so far as they fit, of the Taft-Hartley law.

But, Mr. President, the pending bill does not require the union seeking to establish a union shop to file with the Secretary of Labor a report on certain provisions of its constitution and bylaws, and that it shall file and also furnish to all members a financial statement showing receipts, assets and liabilities, disbursements, and other pertinent information. Such a report must be brought up to date annually, so says the Taft-Hartley law, but the Senator from Ohio cannot find such a provision in the pending bill.

Mr. President, in conclusion, I wish to say that I do not know why the Congress at this juncture in history should be obliged to take time to consider such legislation as that now pending before the Senate. I believe the people of America are extremely sick and tired of politics as usual. There are more important things that should be before this body. But since the bill is here and since we are willing to take our precious treasure and blood all over the world to fight for other colored people's interests, what is wrong with giving our own colored brother in this country an even break? Both parties have played politics with the colored man; they have dangled civil rights before his eyes for many, many years. Here is a place to be fair, to be honest, and to be decent.

Mr. President, at this time I ask for the yeas and nays on the question of agreeing to my amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered on Mr. JENNER'S amendment, which is as follows:

> On page 3, line 8, insert new paragraph twelfth to read as follows:
> "Twelfth. Notwithstanding any other provisions of this act, or of any other statute of law of the United States, or Territory thereof, or of any State, any union, labor organization, or labor representative that segregates members into separate or auxiliary locals or excludes any member of the craft or class from membership therein on the grounds of race, creed, color, or national origin, or denies membership therein to any member of the craft or class upon terms or conditions not generally applicable to all members of the craft or class; or excludes any member of the craft or class from participation in the collective bargaining process; or that uses its position as a collective bargaining representative under this act to discriminate against members of the craft or class on the grounds of race, creed, color, or national origin; or that uses its position as such collective bargaining representatitve to bar the employment by the carrier of any person because of his race, creed, color, or national origin, shall not act as representative under this act of any craft or class, and shall not be entitled to any of the provisions of the act."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STENNIS in the chair). The time of the Senator from Indiana has expired.

The Senator from Alabama is recognized.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, the other day when the question of this amendment was before the Senate, a number of Senators, representing different schools of thought in this body, voiced their opposition to the amendment, stating that it had no place on this bill.

Certainly this amendment has no place on this bill, for it is irrelevant to the bill. The purpose, the object, of this bill is to try to maintain and more nearly insure industrial peace in the great railroad industry which is so vital to the transportation and to the economic life of the Nation. The purpose of this bill is to secure, to maintain, and, insofar as possible, to insure stable, orderly, and harmonious relationships between management and labor in the railway industry. This amendment would do the very opposite; it is entirely opposed to the purpose of the bill, for the amendment would create feeling, disruption, and confusion. Not only would it impair the purpose of the bill, but it would defeat the purpose of the bill.

Mr. President, I move that the amendment be laid on the table; and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, of course the yeas and nays go with a motion to lay on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is not necessarily so.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I ask that the yeas and nays be ordered on the question of agreeing to the motion to lay the amendment on the table.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum has been suggested, and the clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state the inquiry.

Mr. HILL. Am I correct in my understanding that the Senate is now about to vote on the motion to lay on the table the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. JENNER]?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct. The Senator from Indiana offered an amendment, and the Senator from Alabama moved that the amendment be tabled. The question is on agreeing to the motion to table the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana. The yeas and nays having been ordered, the clerk will call the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment to be offered, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

Mr. LUCAS obtained the floor.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair calls the attention of the Senate to the fact that there is another unanimous-consent agreement which the Chair understands is now in operation.

Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. LUCAS. I want to make one announcement, and then I shall be happy to yield.

Mr. President, after we finish consideration of the pending measure, which is the authorization of funds to take care of Yugoslavia, the question may arise as to what the Senate will next do. On tomorrow, Mr. President, the Senator from West Virginia, who is chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, will present a joint resolution to amend and extend the provisions of the District of Columbia Emergency Rent Control Act, as amended. It is an emergency matter and should be taken up at the earliest possible time. That will be the first thing on the program tomorrow.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. NEELY. Let me inform the distinguished majority leader that not more than 10 minutes should be required to pass the bill.

Mr. LUCAS. We shall at least make it the unfinished business after we dispose of the Yugoslavia bill. Possibly we can make disposition of it this afternoon.

Mr. President, I recently gave notice that the Senate would proceed to the consideration of a bill involving an amendment of the Clayton Act. That bill is Calendar No. 1737, H. R. 2734. It is my understanding that that measure will require approximately 2 days of debate. Following the disposition of the District of Columbia rent-control bill, we propose to make the bill amending the Clayton Act the unfinished business. There are four other bills which have recently been reported——

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. Is the majority leader referring to Calendar No. 1777, H. R. 2734, an act to amend an act entitled "An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopoly, and for other purposes"?

Mr. LUCAS. That is the measure which I have in mind.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Senator.

Mr. LUCAS. That is the bill as to which I gave notice some time ago that we would try to dispose of during this session.

I desire to say, Mr. President, that in the event any other measure dealing with the emergency situation which exists throughout the world comes before the Senate, of course, the bill amending the Clayton Act will be laid aside, and the Senate will proceed to the consideration of any other measure of emergency character which may be reported.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee has reported four bills, namely, Calendar No. 2581, House bill 9484, an act to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to effect the settlement of claims for losses and damages inflicted upon the Portuguese territory of Macao by United States Armed Forces during World War II in violation of neutral rights; Calendar No. 2570, House bill 5902, an act for the relief of the Pan American Union; Calendar No. 2580, House bill 8546, an act to amend the Philippine Property Act of 1946, and Calendar No. 2569, House bill 7445, an act authorizing the village of Baudette, State of Minnesota, its public assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Rainy River at or near Baudette, Minn.

These bills were passed by the House during the regular session. They have been carefully examined, so I am advised by the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, and they are not of a controversial nature. I assume they can be taken up when we call the calendar. But, anyway, they are important measures, which we should dispose of, if possible, before we conclude the session. They will be considered following the disposition of the bill amending the Clayton Act.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. Is it the intention to call the calendar some time this session?

Mr. LUCAS. Yes; the calendar will be called once from the beginning.

Mr. WHERRY. When does the Senator contemplate calling the calendar?

Mr. LUCAS. Possibly in the latter part of this week.

Mr. WHERRY. Another question, Mr. President. It is somewhat in the nature of a parliamentary inquiry, but I am satisfied that the majority leader will answer it. When the agreement was entered into, under which we are now operating, relative to the proposed Yugoslavia relief bill, the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] had an amendment pending when opposition to the proposed legislation developed. There are now other Senators who desire to offer amendments.

Mr. LUCAS. I read from the unanimous-consent agreement:

That the time intervening between the disposition of the so-called railway labor bill and the said hour of 4 o'clock on said day of Monday, December 11, shall be equally divided between those favoring and those opposing the passage of said bill and controlled, respectively, by Mr. CONNALLY and Mr. McCARRAN.

The Senator from Texas accepted the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN], so there should not be too much further debate upon the question.

Mr. WHERRY. Then Senators who would like to offer amendments, if they want to take the time between now and 4 o'clock, could see, I suppose, the Senator from Nevada, in order to have time assigned to them in which to discuss their amendments. Is not that correct?

Mr. LUCAS. That is the way the unanimous-consent agreement reads.

Mr. WHERRY. There was some question on the division of time. I came in late, and I merely wanted to make sure. Of course, if there is an amendment offered after 4 o'clock, there will be 10 minutes allowed on each side.

Mr. LUCAS. That is what the agreement provides.

Mr. WHERRY. Prior to that time, if a Senator wants to offer an amendment it will be necessary for him to have time allotted by the Senator from Nevada; is that correct?

Mr. LUCAS. That is correct.

Mr. WHERRY. Does the Senator want to make arrangements to take a little time now for that purpose?

Mr. LUCAS. I do not see the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] on the floor.

Mr. WHERRY. I should like to have the majority leader make an answer to my request. I think it would be very timely to get some amendments out of the way and charge the time to both sides.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I have the floor. There is no great calamity impending.

Mr. President, in addition to the bills which I noted for the RECORD a moment ago, I also desire to include in the list Calendar No. 2583, the bill (H. R. 9524) to supplement the District of Columbia Teachers' Leave Act of 1949. I do not think very much controversy will develop with respect to that bill.

Mr. President, I now yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, I wonder whether the distinguished majority leader has in mind calling up Calendar No. 2506, the bill (S. 3135) to amend the peanut-marketing-quota provisions of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended. I ask the question because a vote on the quotas will be taken on the 14th of this month.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I will say to my able friend from New Mexico that I have not considered doing so because no Senator who is interested in the bill has talked to me about it.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, both Senators from Virginia, North Carolina, and South Carolina are interested in the bill.

Mr. ROBERTSON. The distinguished majority leader will recall that I did speak to him as soon as we returned for the present session. I told him that if other pressing matters would permit, I hoped he would give us an opportunity to vote on the peanut bill.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I apologize to the Senator from Virginia. I recall that he did speak to me about the bill. Therefore, I shall include Calendar No. 2506, the bill (S. 3135) to amend the peanut-marketing-quota provisions of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, in the list of bills which may be taken up at any time when a lull should develop in the proceedings of the Senate.

EMERGENCY RELIEF ASSISTANCE TO YUGOSLAVIA

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 4234) to promote the foreign policy and provide for the defense and general welfare of the United States by furnishing emergency relief assistance to Yugoslavia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN]. Under the unanimous-consent agreement the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] is entitled to the floor.

TRANSACTION OF ROUTINE BUSINESS

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. Yes.

Mr. WHERRY. Many Senators desire to present routine matters and offer brief insertions for the RECORD. I ask unanimous consent that Senators may be permitted to do so and that the time required be charged equally to both the opponents and the proponents of the bill (S. 4234) to promote the foreign policy and provide for the defense and general welfare of the United States by furnishing emergency relief assistance to Yugoslavia.

Mr. McCARRAN. I have no objection to such a request, provided we have sufficient time within which to discuss the pending bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Nebraska? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Maurer, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the joint resolution (S. EMBARGO ON GOODS DESTINED TO RED CHINA

Mr. O'CONOR. Mr. President, it would seem most pertinent to call to the attention of the Senate an announcement by the Honorable C. D. Howe, Canadian Trade Minister, on Saturday, December 9, to the effect that he had ordered an embargo on all Canadian goods destined for Red China.

The order applied, he made clear, to Korea, Hong Kong, Manchuria, and Macao, and he emphasized that all export permits previously granted would be recalled for revalidation.

The official action of the Canadian Government in this respect points up sharply the nonaction of our own Government to protect United States interests and to safeguard our fighting men in Korea, by placing a similar complete embargo on all shipments to Communist China.

The disclosures of the subcommittee investigating this matter have shocked the people of this country with information regarding the vast amounts of strategic materials of many kinds, the shipments of which our Government has not only permitted but actually encouraged to the fullest.

I say again what I have declared before both on the Senate floor and on other occasions that a complete embargo against all shipments to China is absolutely vital to our Nation's interests at this time when every product from this country which helps either to further their aggression in Korea or to bolster their industrial or civilian economy adds to the terrific load which our fighting men are carrying at this very moment.

The executive branch of our Government will be acting in accord with the feelings of the United States Senate, I am sure, just as they will be carrying out the wishes of the great mass of our people throughout the country, if they act immediately to restrict all shipments from this country to Communist China or other Communist points.

I ask that the Associated Press dispatch regarding the Canadian embargo be printed herewith as a part of my remarks. I also ask unanimous consent that an editorial from the Washington Evening Star of December 9, 1950, entitled "Trading With the Enemy" be made a part of my remarks. Let me quote just the first sentence of this editorial:

> Whatever justification there may have been in the past for maintaining trade relations with Communist China, a drastic change in policy has become necessary as a result of Chinese entry in the Korean war.

I concur wholeheartedly in that statement and offer it for the thoughtful consideration of the responsible Federal authorities in this field.

There being no objection, the article and editorial were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CANADA CANCELS CHINA SHIPMENTS

OTTAWA, December 9.—C. D. Howe, Trade Minister, today ordered an embargo on all Canadian goods destined for Red China.

The order applies also to Korea, Hong Kong, Manchuria, and Macao—all in or near the eastern war area.

The main point of the order is to ban all goods from shipment to the Chinese Communists. Hong Kong, a British possession, is a transshipment point for goods going to the Chinese mainland.

Howe said in a statement all export permits granted will be recalled "for revalidation."

The embargo is, in a way, a reversal of government policy. Though Canada has had restrictions on the export of strategic goods to Communist countries, previous policy was to allow normal civilian trade to function.

[From the Washington Evening Star of December 9, 1950]

TRADING WITH THE ENEMY

Whatever justification there may have been in the past for maintaining trade relations with Communist China, a drastic change in policy has become necessary as a result of Chinese entry in the Korean war. The Department of Commerce has just announced tighter export controls on shipments to Red China. That tightening was needed is evident from disclosures made by Chairman O'CONOR of a Senate Commerce Subcommittee. The inquiry has indicated that substantial quantities of steel and rubber products that possibly could be diverted to military purposes have been shipped to Communist China since the start of the Korean war.

Senator O'CONOR has charged that more than 10,000,000 pounds of scrap rubber have gone to the China mainland during the past 5 months. This rubber, in the form of old tires, is used for making shoes. And shoes have definite military value. Senator O'CONOR pointed out that shipments of scrap rubber jumped from 263,000 pounds in July to 4,400,000 pounds in September and about 3,000,000 in October. "It seems perfectly evident," the Marylander said, "that the Communists would not bring all this rubber to China, at great expense, unless they were finding good use for it."

The time has come to consider something more effective than a tightening of trade controls. Formerly it was to our advantage to exchange products with the Reds, for we were getting considerable quantities of strategic tungsten from them. But apparently the Russians have cornered the Chinese tungsten supply in recent months, for shipments of tungsten have been falling off sharply. About all we are receiving from Red China now is hog bristles, animal hair, and feathers. These are useful to us, but not indispensable.

Commerce officials say that the new controls can be drawn tighter at will—that, in fact, the machinery has been set up to enforce a complete embargo on trade with Communist China if that final step becomes advisable. They point out, however, that an American embargo would mean little to the Reds unless other western nations took similar action. Irrespective of the economic effect of a unilateral embargo, an important principle is involved—that of trading with the enemy. And surely there no longer can be any doubt left that Red China is an open enemy of this country.

THE KOREAN WAR

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, last Saturday the New York Journal-American and a number of other newspapers published an article written by Constantine Brown, the well-known foreign-news analyst, dealing with the Korean war. In the New York Journal-American the article is entitled: "Political and Military Summary of Korean War: Writer Called the Turn on Events in the Far East—Declared United States Was Informed."

Mr. President, because of the accuracy of Mr. Brown's predictions in the past, because of his ability to call the turn on future events, and because of the significance of such instances in the past when he called the trend of our foreign events and the probable happenings which would result therefrom, I ask unanimous consent that Mr. Brown's article, together with the headlines which I have read, be printed in the RECORD at this point as part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

POLITICAL AND MILITARY SUMMARY OF KOREAN WAR: WRITER CALLED THE TURN ON EVENTS IN FAR EAST—DECLARES UNITED STATES WAS INFORMED

(By Constantine Brown)

There is no question that the outbreak of hostilities in Korea on June 25 caught the administration totally unprepared for a military undertaking of the magnitude which confronts us now.

Our highest officials claim they did not have the information needed to justify military preparedness of the kind needed in a shooting war.

The following items, taken at random from a number of columns published by this reporter during the last 12 months, show, however, that the administration was fully informed about Russia's plans and intentions.

ITEMS LISTED

Newspapermen obtain their information from sources near the top Government officials some time after the latter have had the full benefit of the reports.

Following are the items:

December 18, 1949: "The world crisis * * * is expected to enter its final phase with the coming of the new year. The Russians have nearly completed the circle which they have so skillfully been building around us since VJ-day."

January 23, 1950: "It is believed they (the Russians) will concentrate * * * on South Korea, Indochina, Burma, and eventually the Malay Peninsula."

February 5: "The United States is in a more critical situation than ever before in its history." (About this time Secretary Johnson began to trim the fat of our armed services.)

February 24: "We are in a weaker position with respect to Russia today than we were with respect to Japan 9 years ago."

READY TO MOVE

April 30: "Russia * * * has given indications that she is tiring of the cold war and is preparing to move into action."

May 9: "More than 2,000 Soviet officers are engaged * * * in planning coming events in Asia, which is expected to become the principal theater of a shooting war this summer."

June 4: "Whatever explosion may occur in the near future will come on the Asiatic mainland."

June 6: "The start of the * * * Communist invasion * * * (of Korea) is set for the second half of this month." (Confirmed June 25.)

THE PRICE OF EGGS

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, the Boston Post in a front page story on December 9 stated, "See eggs reaching $1 a dozen."

The Wall Street Journal of last Friday carried the headline: "Wholesale egg prices reached 30-year high in Chicago yesterday. Record consumption responsible; top-quality eggs may hit $1 a dozen in New York."

The Washington Post on a front page story carried the headline: "Price of grade A large eggs near dollar a dozen" last Saturday.

I wish to bring these headlines to the attention of the Senate, because, since reading these headlines, I have checked with the Commodity Credit Corporation and I find the following situation: The estimated inventory of dried eggs as of December 4, 1950, held by the United States Government amounts to 93,605,000 pounds. I am told by the Commodity Credit Corporation that it takes approximately 3 dozen large grade 1 eggs to make 1 pound of dried eggs. This means that it has taken 280,815,000 eggs to produce the poundage of dried eggs which the United States Government now has in storage. This is the equivalent of very nearly 2 dozen eggs for every man, woman, and child in America.

I also learned and wish to bring to the attention of my colleagues that on November 22 the Secretary of Agriculture issued a release stating that there would be no price support of eggs in 1951. This was later supplemented with a statement by the Secretary that if necessary in certain areas there would be a surplus removal of certain quantities of shell eggs which would be used in school-lunch programs.

I bring these facts to the attention of the Senate, Mr. President, in the hope that in the critical days that lie ahead of us steps may be taken to try and stop such a situation in the case of any commodity. I hope that steps may be taken in the interest of the consuming public. I want to be fair to our farmers, but as I have repeated many times, all of us are consumers. Eggs are perhaps the very basic food of the majority of the citizens of our country. Rises in the prices of eggs to record heights mean more, I believe, to more people than increases in the prices of any other agricultural commodity unless it be bread and milk.

Mr. President, in these difficult times when the very survival of our country may be at stake, I hope that our whole agricultural support program can be reviewed and restudied for the best interests of everyone.

Following my remarks, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed the articles to which I have referred.

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SEE EGGS REACHING $1 A DOZEN—BOSTON PRICES ON RISE STEADILY SINCE MONDAY

Egg prices in the Boston wholesale market have jumped 4 to 11 cents a dozen this week, with a corresponding increase in the prices consumers have to pay, and unless the upward trend is halted, householders may soon be paying $1 a dozen for the best eggs. The market has been moving upward since Monday. On that day large eggs were quoted at the Boston Fruit and Produce Exchange at 61 to 66 cents for large and 61 cents for mediums. Yesterday, large were 69 to 77 and mediums 65 to 70.

GIVE MANY REASONS

One stall at Faneuil Hall market Thursday had grade A jumbo size eggs at 98 cents a dozen retail and large were marked 85 cents. Some dealers predicted dollar-a-dozen eggs next week if wholesale prices go any higher. Bids on yesterday's supply to wholesalers stopped abruptly when the new high figure was reached. The would-be buyers simply would not go along as the quotations inched upward.

A variety of reasons were given for the unusual state of affairs. Usually this is the most productive season for eggs, marketmen said. Some were inclined to blame it on a greater consumer demand, due to high meat prices, others on the fact that more hens and chickens are being killed for meat, thus cutting off a big source of supply. Still others blame weather conditions, recent storms making pickups from farmers difficult. Another factor was said to be a smaller backlog of storage eggs than usual, with private holdings hereabouts being virtually cleaned out. Many hatcheries, generally closed at this season of the year, are said to be in operation, and this takes a large percentage of eggs away from the market.

Records show that not since December of 1919, just 31 years ago, have eggs been so high-priced in the month of December. At that time consumers were paying $1 and sometimes more for a dozen eggs. It looks as if history is repeating itself.

WHOLESALE EGG PRICES REACHED 30-YEAR HIGH IN CHICAGO YESTERDAY—RECORD CONSUMPTION RESPONSIBLE; TOP QUALITY EGGS MAY HIT $1 A DOZEN IN NEW YORK

(By John A. McWethy)

CHICAGO.—Top quality eggs yesterday reached the highest wholesale price here since 1920.

They brought 72 cents a dozen. The big selling grade known in the trade as No. 2 extras climbed to 67 cents, up 3 cents from the previous day. A year ago they were 40 cents and as recently as October 10, when the rise got under way, they were 48 cents.

In Chicago, these advances will mean you'll have to pay 85 cents a dozen for grade A eggs (No. 2 extras) in chain stores this week end, trade sources here say. The chains were charging around 80 cents for these eggs in Chicago yesterday. In New York, the same grade will move up to about 90 cents this week end and top quality eggs may sell in some New York stores for $1 a dozen.

"Terrific consumption—more than anyone dreamed there would be—is the main reason for the price rise," one egg man here said. "Four weeks ago, I don't think there was an informed observer in the country who believed egg prices would go up. Almost everyone was looking for lower prices."

PER CAPITA CONSUMPTION UP THIS YEAR

For all 1950, per capita consumption in the United States will average 384 eggs. At the moment, it's probably risen to a gluttonous 390 to 400 a year rate, egg men here estimate. In 1949, consumption averaged 379 eggs per capita and prior to the war it was 298.

Why are people suddenly eating more eggs? The economist for a large food firm here says it probably reflects the war. People are earning more money and, with the country tooling up for war, they feel safe as far ahead as they can see. The same thing happened in 1942, he said.

This buying generates higher and higher prices until suddenly the housewife wakes up out of her trance and resists. Prices could turn down fast and it could happen any day.

On the supply side of the picture, production of eggs is running at about the same level as a year ago, produce men here say. But the movement of eggs from the country to terminal markets has been slowed down by snow storms which have blocked a number of country roads. Arrivals of eggs in Chicago, for example, were only 9,312 cases yesterday compared with 12,403 cases a week ago and 12,130 a year ago.

SNOWSTORMS NOT MAJOR FACTOR

Snowstorms, however, are a secondary rather than the major reason for the rise, egg men say. Prices were moving rapidly upward before the storms began.

Cold storage stocks of eggs are the lowest in history. This, too, has accentuated the rise. On December 1, there were only 71,000 cases of eggs in cold storage, a record low for that date. A year earlier, stocks totaled 250,000 cases. Were stocks larger, they would help cushion the effect of the sudden burst of appetite for eggs the public is showing.

Still another factor may be the rise in purchasing of eggs by the Army. Trade sources here say the military services are buying about 100 cars of eggs weekly now.

[From the Wall Street Journal of December 9, 1950]

Wholesale egg prices in Chicago climbed to the highest levels in 30 years. No. 2 Extras jumped 4 cents a dozen to 70 cents. A year ago they sold for 40 cents. Heavy consumer demand has been pushing these prices up since early October when they were around 48 cents. The further rise this week has been spurred by heavy snowstorms which blocked the flow of eggs to market. In Cincinnati, Procter & Gamble Co. raised wholesale prices of shortening and soap powders by 3½ percent.

[From the Washington Post of December 9, 1950]

PRICE OF GRADE A LARGE EGGS NEAR DOLLAR A DOZEN

The retail price of grade A large eggs was expected to push the dollar mark for a dozen in the District today.

A spokesman for the Merchants and Manufacturers' Association explained that a rise to 80 cents a dozen wholesale on the New York Mercantile Exchange yesterday would bring about a retail range here from 95 to 99 cents. Some retailers, however, were reportedly holding prices below 90 cents, at least for today.

The wholesale increase—14 cents a dozen since Monday in New York—was attributed to heavy buying by the armed services, curtailed transportation due to stormy weather, and a shortage of cold-storage eggs. The District's present "deficit market," with demand outstripping supply, forces wholesalers to pay New York prices for eggs produced in Virginia, Maryland, and Pennsylvania, a spokesman said.

EXTENSION OF DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA EMERGENCY RENT CONTROL

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nevada yield to me to make a motion, with the understanding that if it leads to debate it will be withdrawn?

Mr. McCARRAN. Before doing so, let me inquire how the time now stands.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. An hour and 50 minutes remains, divided between the Senator from Nevada and the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY].

Mr. McCARRAN. Is the Senator from West Virginia willing to agree that if consideration of his motion requires more than 5 minutes he will withdraw it?

Mr. NEELY. I gladly make that agreement with the Senator from Nevada.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia asks unanimous consent to make a motion out of order. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, subject to the agreement just made, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 209, Calendar 2588, to amend and extend the provisions of the District of Columbia Emergency Rent Act, as amended. This resolution was unanimously approved by the District of Columbia Committee. Except the brief extension requested, no change whatever is proposed in the existing law.

Mr. President, I know of no opposition to the resolution.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NEELY. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I should like very much to accommodate the distinguished and able Senator from West Virginia, and no doubt will do so. However, I am wondering if the Senator from West Virginia will give us a little time to check the situation. There may be some Senators who are just as enthusiastic about the joint resolution as is the Senator from West Virginia, but who may wish to say something in behalf of the measure. I should like to have the opportunity to make a check. If the Senator will renew his motion immediately after the vote is taken on the pending business, or even before, if the managers will give the Senator the time, I shall be glad to answer "Yes" or "No." At this time I should like to have the Senator withhold the motion until I can make a check.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from West Virginia withhold his motion?

Mr. NEELY. Very gladly, Mr. President.

EMERGENCY RELIEF ASSISTANCE TO YUGOSLAVIA

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 4234) to promote the foreign policy and provide for the defense and general welfare of the United States by furnishing emergency relief assistance to Yugoslavia.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I should like very much, if possible, to have the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CORDON] in the Chamber. The reason is that some of my remarks are addressed to a colloquy which took place between the Senator from Oregon and myself on last Friday. If it is possible for him to be here, I should like to have him present.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. KNOWLAND. While the Senator from Oregon is being contacted, I wonder if the Senator from Nevada will yield to me to permit the clerk to read for the information of the Senate the 6-line amendment which I propose to offer. Since it has not been printed, I should like to give notice to Senators who may support or oppose the amendment, as to what it contains.

Mr. McCARRAN. I have no objection to its being read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of the bill it is proposed to add the following new section:

SEC. 7. This act shall not become effective until at least $38,000,000 of the $75,000,000 appropriated for the purpose of carrying out section 303 of the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949, as amended, has been expended or obligated for expenditure for assistance to the Republic of China.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, in order that Senators who are now present, but who were not present last Friday, may know the text of my amendment, I respectfully request that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 1, line 5 through line 8, it is proposed to strike out all of section 2 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

The President is hereby authorized to expend not in excess of $50,000,000 of the funds heretofore appropriated for expenses necessary to carry out the provisions of the Economic Cooperation Administration Act of 1948, as amended (Public Law 759, 81st Cong.), for the purpose of providing emergency relief assistance to Yugoslavia under the authority of this act.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, on Friday, when I submitted my amendment to the bill, I made reference to the economic position of the United Kingdom and its relation to Marshall-plan aid.

For the benefit of those interested, I desire to clarify my remarks so that they will not be misinterpreted. First, I want it clearly understood that I used the United Kingdom as the best example for the purpose of demonstrating the recovery that has been had in Europe so that the use of the amount included in my amendment out of funds heretofore appropriated for the ECA will not adversely affect that program. I bring this information to the attention of the Senate, not by way of criticism, but in order that we may all more clearly understand the implication of our action.

During the period September 1949 through September 1950 the gold and dollar assets of the United Kingdom increased by the sum of $1,331,000,000. During this same period, that is, September 1949 through September 1950, ECA has provided Marshall-plan assistance to the United Kingdom in the amount of $768,000,000. By comparing these figures, it is a matter of simple arithmetic to see that a considerable portion of the aid that was furnished during this period was not actually required to finance import transactions, but was used to replace and increase the gold and dollar reserve supply of the United Kingdom.

I do not intend to argue that it is not good, or even necessary, that the United Kingdom have a large reserve of gold and dollars, maybe larger than its present gold and dollar reserve. However, the point I wish to make is that while her trade position is such as to balance her gold and dollar expenditures, it is rather foolish for us to provide dollars, which we have to raise by burdensome taxation or through borrowing, for the purpose of building up the gold and dollar reserve of the United Kingdom, it seems to me the pledge of the United States to the United Kingdom of our willingness to provide dollars if the drain on her gold and dollar reserves should become too great would serve to provide the necessary stability for the pound and would cost the American taxpayer considerably less. Certainly under present conditions that would be the case.

I think it should be recalled that the Government of the United Kingdom and the Government of the United States have had recent conversations aimed at reexamining the aid requirements of the United Kingdom and designed primarily to arrive at an understanding whereby further aid under the Marshall plan might not be considerably reduced, if not discontinued, during the remainder of this fiscal year.

I wish to repeat, Mr. President, that the object of these remarks has not been necessarily to criticize the United Kingdom, for she has made an excellent record in recovery, but rather they are designed to clarify my position that the diversion of funds heretofore appropriated for the Marshall plan to the purposes of the present legislation will not interfere with the Marshall-plan program.

Mr. President, I desire at this point to place in the RECORD a statement of the United Kingdom gold-and-dollar position.

As of September 1949 there was $1,425,000,000, gold and dollars, in the British reserve.

As of September 1950 there was in the British reserve, gold and dollars, $2,750,000,000.

The increase during the period was $1,331,000,000.

Mr. TAFT. Will the Senator restate those figures please?

Mr. McCARRAN. Yes. Gold and dollars as of September 1949, $1,425,000,000.

Gold and dollars as of September 1950, $2,756,000,000.

Increase during that period, $1,331,000,000.

ECA procurement authorization during the same period was $768,000,000.

Trade deficit during that period was $235,000,000.

The amount of ECA funds in excess of trade requirements was $563,000,000.

Mr. President, on Friday there was a colloquy between the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CORDON] and myself. I regret that the Senator is not present, because I have a high regard for his ability to discuss these subjects. During that colloquy I consented to give consideration over the week end to a modification of the amendment to make specific the understanding that $12,000,000 of the $50,000,000 authorized in my amendment was for the purpose of covering commitments already entered into by the Economic Cooperation Administration.

I have given this matter considerable thought and I believe that a clarification for the record is all that is necessary in this instance.

The stopgap program inaugurated by the Government up to the present totaled $31,400,000. This sum was provided by the utilization of three different sources of funds. The Export-Import Bank loan provided $5,600,000, the military assistance program provided $13,600,000, and the ECA provided $12,200,000. It is this latter fund with which my amendment is concerned.

Mr. President, I hope those present on the Senate floor will follow me closely in this matter because it is of vital importance.

The question has arisen as to the authority to commit ECA funds for this purpose. I must admit, Mr. President, that I am not satisfied as to the authority for this commitment, however, I should like to point out that up to date this is a morale commitment more than a legal one. Although an allotment has been made of ECA funds to Germany in the sum of approximately $4,000,000, and a tentative allotment to Italy of an equivalent sum, the procurement authorizations which are in the final analysis the legal obligation of funds have not, I am informed, been issued by the ECA. These allotments are generally for information purposes and may be changed at any time prior to the issuance of a procurement authorization.

Therefore, in view of the doubt—and I entertain such doubt—as to the legal authority for such use of ECA funds, I felt that the authorization for further aid to Yugoslavia should include authorization for the use of the approximately $12,000,000 heretofore morally committed. Since the legal authority for such action is in doubt, the Congress should make clear its intent lest the executive action in this case establish an undesirable precedent for future use of ECA funds.

I make no comment with respect to the authority for the sums obligated from the military-assistance program or the Export-Import Bank loan, although as to that I have some grave doubts. I have been concerned in this matter chiefly with funds appropriated for the Marshall plan. I believe the record is clear, and that if this amendment is adopted as it is presently proposed the intent will be well established that of the total sum of $50,000,000 authorized to be used out of the ECA appropriation, $12,000,000 of such authorization is to cover the moral commitment heretofore entered into by our Government.

Mr. President, I do say to the ECA Administrator that while we feel there is a moral obligation which we will cover in this instance, we do not want it to become a precedent, and that he may turn down such a request if it should ever come up again.

Mr BREWSTER Mr President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NEELY in the chair). Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. BREWSTER. I noted what the Senator had to say about the Export-Import Bank. That action disturbed and disquieted some of us a very great deal because, so far as I was able to learn, it is a precedent in respect to that sort of thing. The Export-Import Bank was created for quite another purpose, and has always operated quite carefully to confine itself to what was certainly the spirit and intent of the law. But if we pass this over now, and it is indicated that our action is being established as a precedent, it might get us very far afield in going into various ventures of this character. Is there any way that we could effectively indicate what seems to be the position of the Senator from Nevada that this is not a precedent for a course to be followed hereafter?

Mr. McCARRAN. As regards the item that came from the Export-Import Bank, I said I had grave doubts as to its legality, because I do not think the Export-Import Bank was established with that object in view.

As to the $12,000,000 from ECA which was used in this connection, I have even more grave doubts about the legality of the right to use those funds. However, that money was used and now the executive branch is morally committed. It was done in the following manner: Germany and Italy furnished flour to Yugoslavia. Now the executive branch has committed itself to furnish grain to Germany and Italy, to take the place of that flour. So it is a moral commitment which I do not wish to do away with entirely, but I say to the Senate that it should not be established as a precedent. I say we should frown on it and should continue to frown on it. If those in the executive branch wish to do these things, they should first come to the Congress and obtain authority for them.

Mr. BREWSTER. In the case of military assistance, was there not perhaps some greater warrant within the scope of the executive authority?

Mr. McCARRAN. Yes.

Mr. BREWSTER. Is there anything in the measure now before the Senate which, at any rate, would clearly put the Congress on record as not in any way condoning this departure from what we understand to be the spirit and the letter of the law?

Mr. McCARRAN. I had hoped, and I continue to hope, that perhaps my remarks and the remarks of other Senators on this subject, expressed on the floor of the Senate, will be a signboard to those who hereafter will administer it.

Mr. BREWSTER. When the next appropriation for the ECA comes before us, will it be appropriate to consider at that time making some clear indication that further ventures of this character are not to be encouraged?

Mr. McCARRAN. I think it would be, but I do not know whether that would reach the Export-Import Bank.

Mr. BREWSTER. Of course, that is a matter of their loans. The Export-Import Bank does not come to us for appropriations, does it?

Mr. McCARRAN. That is correct; the Export-Import Bank makes loans.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, at the moment I do not know of any other Senator who wishes to speak.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I have an amendment which I have had read at the desk. I should like to call the amendment to the attention of the Senator from Texas, in the hope that he may be able to accept it. If he does accept it, I intend to support the Yugoslavia aid bill.

The amendment is very brief, comprising only six lines, which read as follows:

At the end of the bill add the following new section:

"SEC. 7. This act shall not become effective until at least $38,000,000 of the $75,000,000 appropriated for the purpose of carrying out section 303 of the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949, as amended, has been expended or obligated for expenditure for assistance to the Republic of China."

Mr. President, I say to the Senator from Texas that I was in the Senate Chamber at the time when the original unanimous-consent agreement was entered into, prior to which there was a quorum call, in accordance with the general understanding. That unanimous-consent agreement dealt with the railway labor bill. When the unanimous-consent agreement was entered into, I left the Senate Chamber, because in the Armed Services Committee we had been holding hearings on the Rosenberg appointment.

Sometime later—and the proceedings appear 14 pages later in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, namely, on page 16351, whereas the original unanimous-consent agreement proceedings appear on page 16337—we find that the original unanimous-consent agreement was amended, without having a quorum call in advance; and as thus amended the agreement takes in an entirely different piece of proposed legislation, namely, the Yugoslavia aid bill.

I would feel that I had been foreclosed from a right in connection with the bill if the question of germaneness is raised against my amendment, because my understanding of the germaneness provision is that the purpose is primarily to prevent FEPC proposed legislation from being tacked on to a bill which has no relationship to FEPC.

This amendment is one with which I have been concerned for some time. If this amendment and the other amendments which have been proposed are adopted, I shall be perfectly willing to support the Yugoslavia aid bill, because I think it is important to break Yugoslavia away from the Soviet bloc, if that can be done.

However, I also feel that some of us who previously have supported proposed legislation to give aid to the Republic of China, and then found that only an infinitesimal amount of the funds appropriated by the Congress for that purpose had been used for that purpose, have a right to bring up that matter by way of proposed legislation of this kind.

For that reason, I should like to have a few minutes to discuss the amendment.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I shall have to make a point of order against the amendment, on the ground that it is not germane to the original bill.

I do not object to the Senator's having time to debate the amendment, if he desires to do so; but I reserve the right to make the point of order later. I do not wish to make it now if the Senator from California wishes to debate the amendment.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, then, at least, I should like to have some time to discuss the amendment.

If the point I have raised does not receive consideration, namely, that I was foreclosed from offering this amendment by entering into a modification of the unanimous-consent agreement—for which modification a quorum call was not had before the modification, which greatly broadens the scope of the unanimous-consent agreement relative to the railway-labor bill, by including the offering of the Yugoslavia-aid bill, was entered into—then, Mr. President, when the next piece of proposed legislation comes before the Senate, I shall be prepared to offer the amendment as a rider to be attached to that measure, and shall accompany that offer with the statement that I was foreclosed from doing so at this time.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I cannot object now to what the Senator from California may do with respect to the next bill, but I can do so with respect to this bill. Therefore, I make the point of order that the amendment is in violation of the unanimous-consent agreement.

It seems to me that the question the Senator from California raises as to whether there was a quorum call is foreclosed by reason of the action of the Senate. Advantage would have to have been taken of that at the moment when the proposed agreement was before the Senate; some Senator would have had to suggest that a quorum was not present.

However, if a unanimous-consent agreement is obtained without having a reservation of that kind, a quorum call is foreclosed; a month later a Senator cannot object to the agreement on the ground that a quorum call was not had at that time.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I hope that in the future both the majority and the minority leadership will protect the Members of the Senate who are absent from the floor of the Senate in the discharge of their obligations, by seeing to it that if a unanimous-consent agreement is broadened to include another matter, a quorum call is had first.

In this case, the Senate had entered into a unanimous-consent agreement relative to the further proceedings in regard to the railway labor bill, an important piece of proposed legislation with which every American is concerned. Then we find, as appears 14 pages later in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—thus indicating that an appreciable amount of time must have elapsed during that period—that a modification of the unanimous-consent agreement was entered into, and as a result some of us have been foreclosed from offering an amendment of this kind, which I think is vital in the field of foreign relations.

The Senator from Texas has made his point of order, and thus has foreclosed me from offering the amendment, if that is the ruling of the Chair.

However, at least I should like to have time to speak on the amendment.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am very glad to give the Senator time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is not the ruling of the Chair, because the point of order has not yet been made; and the Chair cannot rule on a point of order until it is made.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. When the agreement was originally entered into, I was not on the floor of the Senate. When I arrived on the floor, I found that the only issue which had been resolved was that a vote would be taken at 4 o'clock today on the Yugoslavia aid bill. It was then that I suggested to the disinguished Senator from Texas and to other Senators who then were on the floor that if other amendments were to be offered, and I did that to try to modify a request which already had been entered into, additional time should be given—for instance, 20 minutes in total on each amendment, with 10 minutes for each side; and I said that the usual provisions with respect to unanimous-consent agreements should be entered into. By that I meant that in order to accommodate those on the other side of the aisle, the usual provision with respect to germaneness, which in this case has to do with civil-rights measures, and which provision is always included in such agreements, should be written into the agreement.

It was not my intention then, nor is it now, that under that understanding, which was rather a gentlemen's understanding among us, any Senator would be foreclosed from offering an amendment having to do with the proposed Yugoslavia aid legislation or with other measures pertaining thereto.

Because of the fact that a quorum call should have been had at that time—there is no doubt about that, because at that time we were attempting to modify a unanimous-consent agreement already entered into—I hope the distinguished Senator from Texas will permit the Senator from California to offer his amendment, and then let us have a vote on it.

I am satisfied that if the Senator from California had been on the floor of the Senate at the time when the modification of the agreement was proposed, he would have objected unless it was agreed that he could offer this amendment. Certainly, since it has nothing to do with civil rights, it has a place here for consideration. I shall deeply appreciate it if the distinguished Senator from Texas will permit the Senator from California to offer the amendment, particularly in view of what was said after the unanimous-consent request had been agreed to, in which deliberations I had no part.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Nebraska says the Senator from California was not present. That is true. But the Senator from Nebraska was present, and he should have asked the Senate to observe the requirement of a quorum call then, not now.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. If the distinguished Senator will recall, I was not present when the original unanimous-consent agreement was entered into.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator was present on the subsequent occasion.

Mr. WHERRY. Not until I rose, after the agreement had been made, to ask whether we could not have a modification of the agreement to include amendments which might be offered, instead of confining it merely to a vote on the one amendment regarding which there was a unanimous-consent agreement. I feel sure the distinguished Senator remembers that. It was late in the afternoon. I suggested that we could get a vote on additional amendments, if the usual procedure were followed of allowing 20 minutes for debate on each amendment, 10 minutes to a side. I stated it was my feeling that we ought to modify the unanimous-consent agreement which had previously been made, and the distinguished Senator from Texas, because of his thoughtfulness and interest, agreed to that. When that was done, it was my intention that any germane amendment could be offered, unless it had something to do with the civil-rights measure, and a provision as to germaneness is always included in a unanimous-consent request.

Mr. CONNALLY. However, it is necessary that we proceed according to what the record shows, not according to what may be in the mind of the Senator from Nebraska. The Senator from Nebraska is not always present. He has pointed out that he was not present on a previous occasion. If we are to go out in search of the Senator from Nebraska, to learn what is in his mind, that is one thing. If we are to proceed according to the record made in the Senate, that is another thing. I do not wish to be either hostile or contrary. I am perfectly willing that the Senator from California may have such time as he may need in order to discuss the amendment. I do not think the amendment is germane, and, that being so, it becomes my duty to oppose it. I shall therefore make the point of order.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. KNOWLAND. The Senator from California had no desire to delay action by the Senate on the Yugoslavia relief bill. I felt that an amendment of this kind was germane to the general subject matter with which we were dealing. There is a difference of opinion about that, and perhaps the precedents and the rulings will sustain the technical objection made by the Senator from Texas. However, since the unanimous-consent agreement did not provide a final hour for voting on the bill itself, but merely on the amendments, the Senator from California may find it necessary to move to recommit, with instructions to the committee to report back the amendment which I have offered. Since there is no hour set for a final vote on the bill, that amendment might be in order. I do not want to be compelled to proceed in the way I have indicated if we can get a straight vote on the amendment prior to that time, but in my opinion it is so important that, if I am foreclosed from having a vote on the amendment, I should then feel it necessary at least to exhaust whatever parliamentary rights were still left to me under the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I want to assure the Senator from California that he will have plenty of opportunity in connection with other measures to offer his amendment. The Yugoslavia relief measure relates to our foreign affairs. If the Senator from California could have heard the discussions in committee I am sure he would not have offered this amendment. It is of vital importance that the pending bill be passed, and that it be passed promptly. It affects, I think, what is usually in the mind of the Senator from California; that is, it is an anti-Communist move. The Senator's proposal, which would tie this up with the Chinese situation, would result in interminable debate not germane to the subject of aid to Yugoslavia. I must, therefore, insist on the point of order, although I shall be glad to withhold it temporarily if the Senator wants to discuss it.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I desire to speak on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. How much time is yielded to the Senator from California, and by whom?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I should like to have 15 minutes, if possible.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time is under the control of the Senator from Nevada and the Senator from Texas. Does either Senator yield time to the Senator from California, and if so, how much?

Mr. McCARRAN. I suggest that the Senator from Texas and I each yield 7½ minutes to the Senator from California.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is agreeable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I desire to discuss briefly the history of the arms implementation legislation, insofar as it provided the appropriation of $75,000,000. We were then meeting as a joint committee, composed of the Armed Services Committee and the Foreign Relations Committee. I supported the arms implementation legislation for Europe and for the other countries which were included. We had before the committee testimony relative to the Republic of China, and during those hearings Admiral Badger, who has represented the United States Government in command of the fleet in the Far East, appeared before the committee to testify.

The original amendment which I had submitted for aid to the Republic of China, had provided, according to my recollection, for $100,000,000 or $125,000,000. Suggestions had been made that it be cut to $50,000,000. When Admiral Badger was before the committee, the question was asked him, "What in your judgment is the minimum amount necessary to give some effective aid to the Republic of China?" He answered, "$75,000,000." That is the legislative background with respect to the origin of the figure of $75,000,000.

There was still quite a bit of discussion and controversy in committee, however, as to what aid, if any, should be given the Republic of China. As a result of a compromise suggested by the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], the language was used "in the general area of China," and it was pointed out that in the event it was not feasible to give aid to the Republic of China, as such, it might be feasible to have the language so drawn that aid could be given to southeast Asia or other sections, if that were necessary. I had no objection to the compromise proposal. It made sense. No one knew, in this changing world, exactly what the conditions might be.

The fact is, however, that of the original $75,000,000 allocated to the Republic of China, and which was a clear congressional intent that it should go to the Republic of China, an infinitesimal amount was used, if any. The bill was again amended when it came up this year. In the second arms implementation bill, the $75,000,000 was again included. There was a slight change in the language, which permitted the President to expend about half of those funds without accounting for them to Congress. But again the general intent was that it should be spent on "the general area of China," and certainly many of us who supported it felt that one of the chief reasons for its being included was in order to aid the Republic of China.

Mr. President, I think I am realistic enough to recognize that there is value in breaking Yugoslavia away from the Communist satellite states, and under proper safeguards I certainly have no objection to, and would like to support, any move which would tend to break down the solid front of the Kremlin. But I should like to call attention to the fact that one of the great difficulties in the foreign policy which we have followed has been the fact that we did not recognize that communism was a global menace, that it was no less menacing in Asia than in Europe.

I have supported the arms implementation program, the North Atlantic Pact, the Greek-Turkish aid program, and ECA, because I felt that they were contributions toward closing the door to communism in Europe. Where I have differed with the administration has been in the fact that while we were closing the door in Europe, we were leaving it wide open in Asia. The fact of the matter is that on the island of Formosa today there exists a legal government of the Republic of China, a nation with which we have had friendly relations for a period of a hundred years. The Republic of China was our war-time ally in two wars. They are permanent members of the Security Council. They are charter members of the United Nations. I have visited the island of Formosa twice. They have complete religious freedom. They have a fine educational system. The American press is freely admitted. There is no censorship; there is no persecution of anyone because of his religion or color. That is the record of Nationalist China.

In addition to that, they have more than 600,000 non-Communist troops, which is a larger body of non-Communist armed forces than exist in all the rest of Asia together, including the troops of India, Pakistan, the Philippine Republic, the Indonesian Republic, the British in Malaya and Hong Kong, the French in Indo-China, the Korean army, and the United States forces in Korea.

It does not make sense, Mr. President, to begin to aid the Communist Government of Yugoslavia, albeit that government has broken from the Kremlin, when we neglect to give infinitesimal aid to the Government of the Republic of China which is non-Communist in character and which is protecting our far-eastern flank. The fact of the matter is that the Republic of China has never shot down American planes, and Yugoslavia has done so. The Republic of China has voted with the free nations in the United Nations on the question of the Korean invasion, a hundred percent of the time. If Senators will examine the record of Yugoslavia, they will find that it has supported the free nations of the world a very small fraction of the time in the matter of the Korean invasion.

There is complete religious freedom in the Republic of China on the island of Formosa. That does not exist in Yugoslavia.

As I pointed out to the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, I am perfectly willing, if, in the judgment of the administration, it is necessary in the interests of our national defense to give some aid to Communist Yugoslavia, in the general interest of the world-wide situation which exists, to give such aid, but I say, Mr. President, at the same time that we should no longer ignore the mandate of the Congress, both in connection with authorization legislation and appropriations, which indicated that the Congress of the United States at least thought it was equally important to give aid to the non-Communist Republic of China.

If I am foreclosed from offering this amendment, Mr. President, by a technical point of order which forecloses me from exercising in part my duties as a United States Senator, I want to serve notice now that upon the third reading of the bill I intend to move to recommit it to the Committee on Foreign Relations with instructions that in the bill which is reported thereafter there be a provision similar to that which I am offering as an amendment. If that is done, I hope the Committee on Foreign Relations will very promptly take up the bill and report it with the amendment which I have offered; and at that time I shall be prepared to support the bill for aid to Communist Yugoslavia which has broken with the Kremlin, but also for aid to Nationalist China which has never been Communist and which has consistently supported the United States and the United Nations in the matter of aggression in Korea.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I wish to say that I join the Senator from California wholeheartedly. I stand behind what he has said and will support his motion if it comes before the Senate. I regret that a point of order should be invoked against the amendment of the Senator from California.

Mr. President, I have no confidence in the present Yugoslav Government. I have no idea that the Government of that nation is serious in its break with its political parent. I have no idea that Mr. Tito has any remorse for what he has done politically and religiously or in any other way. I regret that it may be necessary to do what we are proposing to do here by way of lending aid. But I certainly regret more that we should deny immediate aid to Nationalist China, which is now isolated, in part, on the island of Formosa. If we had given some aid—not very much, but some aid—to Nationalist China when it had a solid foothold on the continent of Asia, in my judgment, American boys would not be dying in Korea today. But we did not do that, although some of us were urging that a few officers be sent over there to guide the military maneuvers of Chiang Kai-shek and to assist the Nationalist Chinese Army in setting itself up against the hordes of communism that were being guided by the Kremlin. But that was not done. It is now water over the wheel, and there is no use in complaining about what has passed. It is the future and the present to which we must look.

In my judgment, there is much merit in the amendment to be offered by the Senator from California, and I shall support him in every way if the amendment comes to a vote on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. President, so far as I am aware, there is no other Senator who cares to be heard with reference to the amendment which I have offered, and I shall be glad to yield the floor.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, under the unanimous-consent agreement, we cannot vote on any amendments until 4 o'clock.

Mr. McCARRAN. I so understand.

Mr. CONNALLY. I say to the Senator from Nevada, who says this amendment should be voted on, that the bill itself was carefully considered by the Committee on Foreign Relations. The committee had testimony from outsiders, from the State Department, and from members of the committee, so that we understand it thoroughly. Why cannot the amendment of the Senator from California go through the same route? Let him submit it to some committee, let that committee consider it and hold hearings, and then report it. Why do we have to railroad this particular amendment of the Senator from California by recommitting the whole bill, in order that he may try to take a course which is against the standard rules of the Senate? I do not want to be in any wise lacking in consideration. I gladly yielded time to the Senator from California to make his speech. But that does not mean that I care to see the rules of the Senate violated and the unanimous-consent agreement ignored in order to railroad through some proposal which is contrary to the purpose and intent of this particular bill.

As I stated a while ago, we considered this bill thoroughly in the committee. All Senators are aware of the break between Tito and the Cominform. The testimony revealed that the Yugoslav Government and the people are gradually coming more and more around to the viewpoint of the West. The testimony further is that Yugoslavia has suffered the worst drought in the history of any living person in that country. The testimony is that most of the supplies will be from the United States.

So, Mr. President, from all the considerations, in view of the fact that the committee favorably reported the bill, I very much hope that it will be passed without any undue delay. I realize that we cannot vote until 4 o'clock, and I am not adverse to any Senator who wants to discuss the question having the time in which to do so. I shall gladly yield any such time out of my allotment as is desirable and necessary.

It is now 3 o'clock, and we cannot vote until 4 o'clock. I do not know who put that provision into the agreement. I think it is very unwise to provide that the Senate cannot vote until such and such an hour. I think it is important to vote when we conclude the discussion. I should be willing to vote on the amendment of the Senator from Nevada which the committee has indicated it is willing to accept.

Mr. McCARRAN. I am not holding up a vote until 4 o'clock. I am ready to vote now.

Mr. CONNALLY. Under the unanimous-consent agreement we are not able to vote until 4 o'clock.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I am glad to yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I am asking the Senator from Nevada to yield some time to me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas has the floor.

Mr. WHERRY. I understood that the Senator from Texas would surrender the floor.

Mr. CONNALLY. I think I shall. What does the Senator desire to ask me?

Mr. WHERRY. I should like to ask the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] to yield me 5 minutes.

Mr. McCARRAN. I am permitted to yield time now, I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Nebraska.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I do not desire to discuss the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND]. Neither do I wish to discuss the merits of the so-called McCarran amendment. I wish to make some observations on unanimous-consent requests.

The distinguished Senator from Texas has stated that it is 3 o'clock, and we cannot vote now because under the unanimous-consent agreement we agreed not to vote until 4 o'clock. He said he did not know why anyone should make such an agreement. Mr. President, to begin with, I was not on the floor when the original agreement was entered into. I was here when some modifications were made. However, I should like to say to the distinguished Senator from Texas that in my opinion the only way it is possible to enter into a unanimous-consent agreement—and I think properly so—is by having a definite time stated in the agreement when a vote is to be taken. The reason for such an understanding as to time for voting is to permit Senators to plan to be in attendance at such time. If such an agreement as to time were not made some Senators would find it impossible to be present when a vote was taken.

I believe the practice we have followed in that respect is good. I believe it has met with the approval of almost all Senators. When a definite time for taking a vote is fixed in a unanimous-consent agreement, Senators can plan in advance to be present when such a vote in taken. Therefore, there can be no complaint on the part of any Senator about not being able to be present. So far as I am concerned, on the basis of the experience I have had with such agreements, I believe it is the only way in which a unanimous-consent agreement can be entered into.

Mr. President, I should like to say also that a unanimous-consent agreement expedites the work of the Senate. Very often such an agreement saves a considerable amount of time. Sometimes debate runs out before we reach the hour fixed for a vote. However, that happens very seldom. In my opinion—and Senators who are my senior will agree with me, I think—ofttimes a unanimous-consent agreement tends to terminate or limit debate to a great extent, thus enabling the Senate to do other constructive work. Therefore, I think it is a good thing to enter into a unanimous-consent agreement on which all Senators are agreed.

The third point I wish to make is that I am satisfied the Senator from California has made a perfect case relative to procedure in connection with the present unanimous-consent agreement, namely, that under the circumstances there should have been a quorum call. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE] insists on a quorum call even when a unanimous-consent agreement is proposed on an important amendment—and I think rightly so—because ofttimes a Senator is attending to important committee work and is not able to be on the floor to protest. Usually, in the judgment of the minority leader, it is good practice to have a quorum call when a unanimous-consent agreement is proposed, even on an amendment. On occasions I have taken pains to call Senators who I thought would be interested in certain amendments and have asked them whether or not it met with their approval to have a unanimous-consent agreement entered into with respect to an amendment.

I was not present the other day when the original unanimous-consent agreement was entered into. If I had been present I would have requested a quorum call, because the agreement includes a provision with respect to a vote on the final passage of the bill. I have tried to follow that procedure since I have been a Member of the Senate. I have always felt that a quorum call should precede that kind of unanimous-consent agreement. It is true that I should have been here, but I will leave it to my colleagues to decide whether or not I have not been present in the Chamber as much as any Senator can be expected to be present and at the same time carry on the other work of the Senate, as well as my duties as minority leader. As I say, I was not here when the original agreement was entered into, but the Senator who sat in my chair——

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I have only 5 minutes allotted to me. However, I am glad to yield to the Senator from New Mexico if he wishes to ask me a question.

Mr. CHAVEZ. I agree with the Senator from Nebraska. At the moment members of the Committee on Appropriations are expected to attend a meeting of the committee. If we are attending such a meeting downstairs, it is impossible to agree to any unanimous-consent agreement that may be offered in our absence. There are approximately only a half-dozen Senators on the floor at the present time. I for one feel we should have a quorum call. I would like to submit an amendment to the pending measure. I believe the Senator from Texas is technically correct. However, in the future I wish such procedure as the Senator from Nebraska suggests could be followed. I know that unanimous consent was given in this instance, and the Senator from Texas is therefore correct. However, in the future under such circumstances we should have a quorum call. I should like to submit an amendment with reference to Spain, inasmuch as we are about to take care of the hungry people of Yugoslavia. There are other places in the world that should be taken care of, too.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. WHERRY. May I have additional time?

Mr. McCARRAN. I am glad to yield an additional 5 minutes to the Senator from Nebraska.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Senator from New Mexico for his observations. He has had long experience in the Senate. He knows how important it is to expedite the work of the Senate. I know that when we approach the end of a session late in the evening the tendency is not to have a quorum call. However, it is my opinion that before agreements to vote are entered we should have a quorum call on important amendments, and as well as on the passage of a bill.

I have not had lunch, and there is a hearing before the Committee on Appropriations which I should like to attend.

The other day when I came to the Chamber during the discussion of the unanimous-consent agreement I asked that the consent agreement be modified, because I thought additional amendments might be offered. My statement in that respect is found in the colloquy following the unanimous-consent request. I requested that if additional amendments were offered 20 minutes be allowed for a discussion of each amendment, with 10 minutes allotted to each side. I made such request in order to protect Senators who may wish to offer additional amendments. I thought it would protect the rights of Senators who were not present at the time the unanimous-consent agreement was entered into. I made the request in good faith.

I also requested that the question of the germaneness of an amendment be included in the modified agreement. I was merely protecting the rights of those who would have objected if such a modification had not been included. I did not think for a moment that with the insertion of a provision requiring germaneness, thus barring any amendment which dealt with civil rights any Senator would be deprived of the opportunity of offering any other amendment appropriate to the bill, in view of the fact that the hour for a vote on the bill was stated in the agreement and the time for debate was to be limited to 20 minutes on each amendment. I have the very highest regard for the distinguished Senator from Texas, and he was very cooperative in arriving at the unanimous-consent agreement, and at what I would call the amended amendment to it. He agreed to it. A few moments ago he said that he had to protect the rights of Senators.

Of course, technically if a Senator wishes to raise the question of germaneness, he has the right to do so. That right exists with respect to any amendment. We could debate the issue, and we could accept, or not, the interpretation of the Presiding Officer with respect to it. However, that does not foreclose a method of procedure by which it would be possible to get a vote on the amendment offered by the Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND].

Personally I would deeply appreciate it, in view of the situation and the effect it would have on obtaining future unanimous-consent agreements, if the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], in line with the observations made by the Senator from California, would permit his amendment to be considered, with the understanding that debate on it would be limited to 20 minutes, with 10 minutes allotted to each side, and that a vote on it be then taken. If the Senator from Texas would agree to such procedure, it would preserve the rights of all Senators, and I am satisfied that in the future it would not create difficulty on getting unanimous-consent agreements. Otherwise, if we are to rely on technicalities we may be forced to see to it that a quorum call is had under similar circumstances, and great care in that respect would have to be exercised. It may be that Senators who are today relying on technicalities will be the first to say, "Let us waive this right. It is not important. Let us expedite the work of the Senate."

I hope and pray that the distinguished Senator from Texas will allow this amendment to be considered under a 20-minute limitation, and permit a vote to be taken on it. If we can do so, it will help the unanimous-consent procedure, and there will not be any hesitancy about continuing to enter into unanimous-consent agreements. Otherwise, those who are responsible will be forced to see to it that the rules are strictly interpreted with reference to unanimous-consent requests.

I thank the Senator from Nevada for giving me time. I hope the distinguished Senator from Texas will agree that it is the proper procedure to expedite the work of the Senate to give us an opportunity to vote on the amendment.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, in response to the urgent language of the Senator from Nebraska, I yield such time as is necessary to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, I should like to make one or two observations. I think the chairman is entirely correct, for this reason; we had no hearings whatever on this proposal. It was not suggested to the committee at all during the hearings. No member of the committee offered an amendment of this kind. That includes the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], who, I am sure, is sympathetic to this idea. In fact, no amendment dealing with this subject was considered.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Just a moment.

Under the normal procedures, proposals which have not been considered in committee are not usually accepted on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, before the Senator leaves that point, will he yield for a question?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I am not sure about this, but I am asking for information. Was the amendment of the Senator from Nevada considered by the committee?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. It was not.

Mr. WHERRY. My understanding is that on Friday before the Senate took a recess the committee was perfectly willing to accept the amendment.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. The amendment of the Senator from Nevada is not a matter of substance at all. It deals only with the procedure of making the money available. It does not go to anything of substance. On the other hand, here we have an entirely new subject matter introduced, a matter which I think the Parliamentarian will have to hold is not germane. The amendment of the Senator from Nevada is in no sense comparable to the amendment of the Senator from California.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. WHERRY. I think the amendment of the Senator from Nevada is far-reaching. It is my opinion that if there were an unexpended balance the Senator's amendment would provide not only the authority, but the appropriations in the same amendment. If the McCarran amendment is adopted, if there is an unexpended balance the effect of the amendment will be not only to authorize, but to appropriate. That is pretty far-reaching. That is a pretty important amendment as a precedent for the future. I submit to the Senate that if the McCarran amendment was not presented to the committee, committee members should not complain that the amendment of the Senator from California was not submitted to the committee. Both amendments should follow the same procedure.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, I see no analogy and no similarity whatever between the substance of the amendment of the Senator from Nevada and the amendment of the Senator from California.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point for a question?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I yield.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I know that the Senator wants to be fair in this situation, as he always is.

In the first place, the amendment which I have offered neither authorizes new funds nor appropriates new funds. Both legislative committees, the Committee on Armed Services and the Foreign Relations Committee, have already twice passed upon the subject, and the Committee on Appropriations has already twice passed upon the question of appropriations. So the amendment would not provide any new money. It would merely ask the executive branch to carry out the intent of Congress. So the question has had legislative consideration.

Secondly, I do not believe that even the able Senator from Arkansas would maintain that the United States Senate, consisting of 96 Members, should surrender all its legislative prerogatives into the hands of any 13-member committee. I speak as a member of the Armed Services Committee. I would not expect to foreclose amendments from the floor by Senators other than those who are members of the Armed Services Committee. That question goes to the heart of the subject of legislation.

Each of us has an obligation not only to the entire United States, but to our States. The fact of the matter is that there are vast areas in this country which are not even represented on the Foreign Relations Committee. So we must not take the position that 96 Senators are foreclosed from offering amenments to a bill, and that we must merely rubber-stamp anything which any Senate committee reports to this body. On reflection, I do not believe that the Senate can accept any such doctrine.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Of course, the authorization of $75,000,000 was not made under existing conditions. As I recall, there was discretion for its use in the general area of China. The conditions which have arisen in the past few weeks, or the past 6 months, from one point of view have altered our relations in the Far East very substantially. I believe that a proposal of this kind should be considered very seriously.

I am slightly acquainted with some of the speeches of the Senator from California. I am not prepared to say that I agree or disagree finally with his views about what our foreign policy should be with regard to China. I think it is an extremely serious question. I would not want to do anything which might seem to commit us to a war with the existing Communist regime in China. At the moment I am inclined to think that that would be a disastrous policy. Whatever may have been done prior to the recent developments with regard to China, I think that question—to use a term to which I do not object—should be reexamined in view of recent developments. I do not believe that we ought to take precipitate action in a matter of this kind. I do not say that I would definitely oppose such action. I think that our action should be consistent with the position of the best minds we have, both military and civilian. I do not believe that the committee or the Senate, without any hearings and without having consulted our leaders in the military and civilian fields, should take such action as is proposed, which certainly could be subject to being interpreted as an overt act toward the reopening of the active intervention or active warfare between Chiang Kai-shek's forces and those of Red China. The position at the moment is an extremely delicate one. I do not wish to commit myself today. I do not believe that I know exactly what I think is the wisest thing to do; but the wrong thing to do is for the Senate, without ever having examined the question, and without having the benefit of any advice from our exccutive department, to take such action. That is the only point I make. The amendment is not germane to the subject matter of the measure under consideration, and I do not think it ought to be passed at this time. I see no reason why the Senator from California cannot this afternoon introduce a bill which would go to the committee, where it would be immediately subjected to study. I do not say that I would be against the proposal. I am against it being adopted in this fashion, without any hearings and without any advice.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I do not know what the Secretary of Defense, the Secretary of State, or the President would say about it as of this moment.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I yield for a question.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Does the Senator know that 2 years ago the Senator from California submitted a resolution in which he requested that consideration be given to an examination of the entire far eastern policy? The resolution was referred to the Senator's committee, but no hearing was ever held on it. Does the Senator know that this amendment was introduced in the committee in the belief—and I believe there was fair reason for the belief—that funds in substantial part would be used for the help of the Republic of China? For 2 years, with two different amounts of $75,000,000 authorized and appropriated, an infinitestimal amount, if any, has been spent. That is the reason why the Senator from California feels that it is necessary to proceed in this way.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. As I have tried to point out, whatever may have been done 6 months, a year, or 2 years ago is not very pertinent to what we ought to do in the immediate difficulties which confront us. We did a number of things back in those days we might not want to do now. I certainly think that what has been suggested by the Senator from California is a matter we ought to examine with a view to determining just how far we desire to go.

I believe the Senator from California stated on the floor that we ought to advance and help in every way attacks by Chiang Kai-shek's forces on Red China, and so on. That may turn out to be our policy; but it is not our policy as yet. I must say that I am very fearful of becoming involved in China, whereas our real enemy is not China at all. That is the secondary enemy. The primary enemy is in Moscow, as the Senator knows, and the inspiration for all these moves in the Far East, in the Middle East, and in Europe, comes from Moscow.

Mr. President, I do not believe our objectives are different at all. We may disagree as to what is the most effective way to reach the objectives. I know the Senator from California is just as sincere and anxious to promote the safety and preserve the integrity of this country as I am, but there is always room for legitimate differences as to the best way to accomplish that objective. That is the only difference between us.

We are in a period when very difficult decisions must be made. As I have tried to say on one or two occasions, this is a time when as respects both Houses of Congress and the Executive, there is no longer room for personalities, when we must close ranks, and try to develop some kind of concrete action in the near future.

In my opinion, the worst thing that could happen would be the creation of the impression, either in the minds of our allies or in the minds of our enemies, that we were all torn up, that we did not know what we were about, that we were fighting among ourselves. I think we have got to compose our differences.

The Senator says he has sent several amendments or bills of a similar nature to the committee. I do not recall—and, of course, the Senator from California knows that I do not set the agenda of that committee—why such a bill was not considered or reported.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I yield.

Mr. McMAHON. I should like to observe that I did not become a member of the Foreign Relations Committee until the Eighty-first Congress, and I know the Senator from Arkansas became a member of the committee during the Eighty-first Congress. I am sure the Senator will remember that during the late spring of 1949 we spent days and weeks in reviewing the situation in the Far East, listening to the testimony of military men, listening to the testimony of Navy men, and of the State Department, and in obtaining all the information we could get with relation to the far-eastern situation.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Yes.

Mr. McMAHON. It was the full committee which heard that testimony. The testimony was not given in executive meeting, and the majority of the committee certainly did not exclude the minority. I can remember very well our distinguished colleague, the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], who, unfortunately, is not with us now because of illness, being present at those meetings. I can remember the active part he took during those deliberations. It may be true, as the Senator from California said, that he did not secure a hearing on his specific proposal, but that there was not a very thoroughgoing review of the Chinese situation, and the oriental situation I think is contradicted by the record.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I thank the Senator from Connecticut for reminding me of the hearings on the far-eastern situation. I do recall now that we went over the whole program very carefully. Particularly I recall that the Korean ECA situation was discussed and rediscussed. As a matter of fact, at that time, as the Senator will recall, I moved to cut the Korean appropriation to $50,000,000, from $150,000,000. We also discussed the area of the Chinese appropriation. I do not think it ever was specifically for the Republic of China. Discretion was left to the Executive to use the appropriation in that general area.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arkansas yield to me for an observation?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Yes.

Mr. LUCAS. I invite the Senator's attention and the Senate's attention to the report, under the caption "The main purpose of the bill":

> This assistance, most of which will be in the form of food, is being provided in order to assist the Yugoslav people to avoid economic havoc arising out of unusual drought conditions during 1950 and thereby to maintain their independence from the Soviet Union which can be expected to do its utmost to encourage the disintegration of an independent Yugoslavia.

This is emergency legislation, as I understand the report of the committee.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. That is correct.

Mr. LUCAS. So, it ought to be passed with all convenient speed. Yet when we read the amendment offered by the able Senator from California we find:

> This act shall not become effective until at least $38,000,000 of the $75,000,000 appropriated for the purpose of carrying out section 303 of the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949, as amended, has been expended or obligated for expenditure for assistance to the Republic of China.

If the amendment offered by the Senator from California is adopted, then, before we can do anything for Yugoslavia, it will be necessary to carry out the conditions set forth in the amendment of the Senator from California. The Senate well knows that the State Department, which will have the power to do what the Senator from California expects to be done by his amendment, is not going to expend $38,000,000 for some time, and it is not going to obligate that sum for some time. If the State Department has to go into this phase of the program at this particular time, I undertake to say that it will be probably many, many days before the Department finally determines how it is going to obligate the $38,000,000; therefore, the result of the amendment will be to defeat the very program the Senate of the United States is seeking to put through.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I wish to make one observation before yielding. I appreciate the contribution by the majority leader. Obviously, adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from California would cause considerable delay in putting into effect the proposed legislation which is under consideration. Even with the best of good will, the expenditure and obligation of the funds would necessarily take a substantial time. It is important that the food be made available to Yugoslavia prior to the next crop year. That is when the real crisis will come in Yugoslavia. I believe the testimony was that it would be reached along in February, March, and April. If we now get into a controversy over the matter involved in the amendment of the Senator from California, it is obvious that it will take longer than that actually to obligate this substantial amount of funds.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I yield for a question.

Mr. KNOWLAND. First, if the Senator from Arkansas will permit, I should like to place in the RECORD section 303 of title 3 of Public Law 329, Eighty-first Congress, and also section 8, which relates to section 303, of Public Law 621, of the Eighty-first Congress, second session, which relates to the $75,000,000 fund.

There being no objection, the sections referred to were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SEC. 303. In consideration of the concern of the United States in the present situation in China, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated to the President, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $75,000,000 in addition to funds otherwise provided as an emergency fund for the President, which may be expended to accomplish in that general area the policies and purposes declared in this act. Certification by the President of the amounts expended out of funds authorized hereunder, and that it is inadvisable to specify the nature of such expenditures, shall be deemed a sufficient voucher for the amounts expended.

* * * * *

SEC. 8. Section 303 of such act is hereby amended by designating such section as subsection (a) and by adding thereto subsection (b) to read as follows:

"(b) In addition to the amounts heretofore authorized to be appropriated, there are hereby authorized to be appropriated to the President, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $75,000,000, to be used as provided in subsection (a) of this section, of which not more than $35,000,000 may be accounted for as therein provided and any amount accounted for in such manner shall, with the exception of $7,500,000, be reported to the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate, the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and of the House of Representatives, and the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives."

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Arkansas first, if he does not recognize that what the amendment seeks has been authorized by Congress not only once but on two occasions, so that under the Knowland amendment all that is necessary is an administrative act by the executive branch of the Government to carry out the intent of Congress.

The second point is that the full needs of the Republic of China have been carefully surveyed by a group which was in the Republic of China, and received the figures from the Government of the Republic, that those figures have been sent on from the Far East to the Government of the United States, and have been in Washington for at least 2 months; so that, so far as surveying the needs is concerned, all the necessary information is presently available in th hands of the executive branch of the Government of the United States.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator if he interprets the language appropriating the $75,000,000 as meaning that this money must be given to or spent upon the Republic of China, that is General Chiang Kai-shek's government.

Mr. KNOWLAND. No. I will say, as I explained, I think before the Senator came into the Chamber, that the legislative history of it was that the first amendment I submitted provided the aid specifically for the Republic of China consisting of about $125,000,000. We had a considerable discussion in the combined committee. There was some objection to giving the Republic of China anything. There were some who wanted to give less, and some who wanted to give the Republic of China more. We had Admiral Badger before us. We questioned him on the needs of the Republic of China. I believe the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] or one of the other members of the combined committees had asked, "Cannot we agree upon $10,000,000?" That question was put to Admiral Badger. His testimony was that the minimum amount they would need in order to do any kind of a job for the Republic of China was $75,000,000. That is the legislative history of the figure $75,000,000.

The committee was still in dispute. Finally the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] suggested, so that we could make a unanimous report of the combined committees, the language "in the general area of China." The argument was made—and quite properly, I think—that we could not be certain that the Republic of China would still be in existence when the funds were provided; perhaps the Republic of China would have been overwhelmed by that time.

So, in order to provide some flexibility to the administration in the use of the funds, so that they would be available perhaps in southeast Asia or elsewhere in the vicinity of China, we agreed upon that language. None of us thought China would be excluded in that situation or that the funds would be put into a deep freeze, so that they could not be used to help defend the Island of Formosa, which many of us believe is vital to the security of the entire defense perimeter in that area of the world. That is the legislative history of that matter.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, I think the Senator from California has accurately stated the legislative history; and from his point of view, he had that in mind. However, the fact is that we did not provide that the money would be spent by or given to the Republic of China. I happen to be one member of the Foreign Relations Committee who would not have gone along with such a bill. I objected to the China-aid bill, and I offered amendments to the Korean bill.

So it is not correct to say that the Congress has appropriated $75,000,000 for the Republic of China. That simply is not a fact. The money was appropriated to be spent in that general area.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I do not yield at the moment. The Senator from California has made his speech, and now I should like to have a little time in which to present my own thoughts. I shall yield to the Senator a little later.

Today, Indochina, in southeast Asia, is in the throes of a civil war brought on by Ho Chi-minh and his adherents against the established authorities there. I think it is very pertinent for us to consider whether the funds should be spent in Indochina; at least, that should be considered. We know that the funds of our Government are not unlimited, and that we must get a dollar's worth of value for every dollar we spend in this field.

Therefore, Mr. President, in view of the situation today, we should give very serious consideration to what we do with our money. I, for one, do not want to make a snap judgment in regard to a matter which would constitute an overt act and certainly could be considered by the rest of the world as a step by us toward entering into a war with the rest of China.

There is a point which I should like to mention in order to impress upon the Senator from California that there are Members of the Senate who have very different views from his about our ultimate over-all security.

The Senator from California—and quite properly and legitimately, from his point of view—sees our entire future and safety in Asia. I happen to disagree with him.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Oh, Mr. President——

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, I wish to make one or two points without being interrupted.

Mr. KNOWLAND. As a matter of personal privilege, Mr. President, when my position is unintentionally misrepresented here on the floor, I should like to have an opportunity to state what my position really is.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Very well; I yield on a question of personal privilege.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I wish to say that I have never taken the position that our whole future is wrapped up in Asia. On the contrary, I have supported the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] and the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT] in connection with all proposed legislation calling for aid by us to Europe.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I agree that perhaps I overstated the case. However, I believe that every time the Senator from California has made speeches here in the Senate, many of which are extremely well prepared and good, they nearly always present that point of view.

As I have said, I am not criticizing the Senator from California for that. He is acquainted with that area, and it is perfectly proper for him to present that viewpoint. However, certainly it is accurate to say that the emphasis in the Senator's viewpoint is upon the Far East, as are most of his speeches and discussions. I have read them with much interest, and I must say they are well prepared and excellent. The Senator has just been in that area of the world on a trip, and so forth; and he is well qualified to speak regarding it.

However, I must say that from my point of view our really basic relations in this world are with and toward Europe. Our basic institutions, including the legislative branch of our Government, our religious system, and most of the ancestry of the people of the United States, derive from Europe, not from the Far East. We have connections there that are very significant in an all-out struggle for survival. In Europe there are organized governments which have institutions similar to ours. When people really are in desperate straits I think they are inclined to cooperate.

The people of Europe understand our system of society much better than do the people of the Far East. I do not say this in criticism of anyone; it is simply a fact of life. In fact, those societies in Europe are capable of being directed either for or against us much more affirmatively in the long run, than is the Far East. The productive power in the case of steel and similar commodities, which I do not wish to review at this time, for we have discussed them many times, is much greater in Europe. Europe can be an offensive power if directed by the Russians, I think, to a much greater extent than in the case of China, especially if we get away from land warfare, where great masses of troops are a major consideration. In other words, if we get into push-button warfare or aerial warfare or other types of warfare which are largely dependent upon the developments of science, Europe will be much more important.

I happen to think that it would be much more dangerous to us if Western Europe and England were to fall under the domination of the Kremlin than if Asia were to fall under Kremlin domination. Of course, it would be better if none of them fell under the domination of the Kremlin; but if we have to make a choice in connection with that matter, as it increasingly seems likely that we may have to, I would say that our emphasis should be placed upon the society and the peoples in Western Europe; I think that should be our objective.

I recognize that there is a fundamental difference between the objective of the Senator from California and my own, and it is one which must be weighed carefully in connection with the consideration of these matters and these legislative proposals. I am not willing, and I do not think our Government is in a position, to make a snap decision in regard to a matter of this much importance, which the Senator from California is seeking to have the Senate act upon now. I think the matter should be studied and carefully considered by the Senate.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Vermont.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont is recognized.

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, I wish to speak in behalf of the bill providing authority for the appropriation of funds for Yugoslavia. I am in favor of the passage of this bill because I conceive that it is in the minds and the purposes of all of us that the Soviet Government should not overrun and control the continent of Europe. If there is anyone who lacks interest in that objective, I can readily understand why such a person would vote against this measure authorizing an appropriation for Yugoslavia.

One has only to look at the map of the Mediterranean to realize that the country of Yugoslavia, with its two-hundred-fifty-odd miles of coast-line as the crow flies, and probably double that amount if the indentations of the coast are included, could be a serious menace if it were under the control of the Soviet Government. It represents an ideal location for nests of submarines. The only location which perhaps would be better in that respect would be Greece; but for the time being—and permanently, we hope—we have saved Greece from conquest by the Soviets. We must help Yugoslavia for the same reason—we have saved Greece—to prevent her conquest by the Soviet Union.

For Russia to have usable submarine bases on the Mediterranean would be an inconceivable situation. True, we are informed that the shorter coast line of Albania, which continues to be under Soviet control, is provided with a least one major submarine base. This is a menace. But so long as Albania is cut off from land connected with the Soviet Republic by Greece and by a hostile Yugoslavia, the usefulness to the Soviet Union of the Albanian submarine base will remain very small indeed. So it is in the support of Yugoslavia's independence from the Soviet Government that we find our tactical and strategic reason for the appropriation called for by the pending bill.

The bill is designed primarily for the relief of populations; but it will help from the military standpoint, because, unless the people of Yugoslavia or of any other European or Asiatic country are reasonably well taken care of according to their own standards, so far as food, clothing, and shelter are concerned, they are bound to fall under the influence of Soviet propaganda. So, from the military standpoint, the first thing we have to think about in connection with Yugoslavia is that her people shall not be subject to subversive influences; and the means of insuring that is to carry her people through the coming winter and into the harvest of next year, when they will again be able to feed themselves and to become prosperous as a result of their own work, done upon their own soil, under their own government.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All the time of the Senator from Texas has expired.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, if the Senator from Vermont desires to continue, I shall be glad to yield 5 or 6 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator may proceed for 5 or 6 minutes.

Mr. FLANDERS. I thank the Senator from Nevada. I may say that I had about concluded my argument and was planning to finish in a burst of oratory. However, the interruption has interfered with the burst of oratory, and I trust that I may be pardoned if I conclude without it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Illinois.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, in my opinion the sum which we are about to authorize in behalf of Yugoslavia, dollar for dollar, as was said here recently, is about the best investment we shall have been able to make by way of loans or grants to foreign countries, perhaps, aside from aid to Turkey. In the report prepared by the Committee on Foreign Relations, we find the following statement, which I think should go into the RECORD:

> Tito espouses nationalist communism rather than imperialist communism which seeks to bind all Communists to the Kremlin. Soviet imperialist communism seeks to rob all states of their independence. Titoism seeks the independence of Communist states from Soviet dictatorship.

Mr. President, I may be wrong about that, and the committee may be in error, but I am absolutely convinced that that is true. In 1948, before Tito broke with the Kremlin, there can be no doubt that Yugoslavia under Tito's domination was at that particular time the principal satellite of the Russian Government. Yugoslavia has now definitely broken with the Kremlin according to all the information which we have in this country. To me, the best evidence of the break with the Kremlin is to be found in the very thing we are doing here. In other words, the Russian Government definitely and categorically refuses to give any economic aid, or to give any relief in the way of food, to people who, as a result of the drought in that country, are on the verge of starvation. If that is not evidence of a break between the two governments, then in my opinion there can be no evidence of such a break. To me, it is conclusive evidence that there is a break, and that it is definite and final; and I sincerely hope that it is.

It seems to me that Tito's government is the one government in central Europe at the present time which stands against Russia and her satellites in their purpose to overrun the Balkans entirely. Perhaps they can overrun them anyway, but at least the Yugoslavs at the present time have 32 divisions, fighting men, if you please, Mr. President, who, I believe, despite what others may think, will fight if and when the time comes. Certainly by giving this small amount of aid to Yugoslavia, which will reflect itself in the army and in the strengthening of Tito's government as a whole, we are doing a very helpful thing.

A moment ago the Senator from Vermont spoke of what had happened in Greece. The truth of the matter is that the guerrillas are out of Greece at the present time, in my judgment, basically because of what Tito has done. In other words, Tito has drawn off his forces around the Greek border, and that is one of the primary reasons for what we find in Greece at the present time. Had Tito continued the course he was pursuing prior to 1948, there would have been a possibility that Greece at the present time would be dominated by the Communists. It is highly important to keep that area from going Communist, because, once Yugoslavia went Communist, Greece would go Communist, and Russia would then control the Mediterranean, a thing which she has sought for a very long time.

I desire to discuss one other point briefly. I hope every Senator will read the report which has been prepared by the Committee on Foreign Relations. It is a very important one. It is constructive and very brief, although it really tells the whole story.

I wish to speak briefly concerning the mathematics of the situation. Merely to equip a single American infantry division costs $75,000,000. It costs another $94,000,000, or approximately $5,000 per man, to maintain such a division at full strength for a year. The grand total is about $170,000,000, the cost of maintaining one American division in this country for 1 year at the present time.

The PRESIDING OFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. LUCAS. May I have 3 minutes more?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield 3 minutes more to the Senator from Illinois.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois may proceed for three additional minutes.

Mr. LUCAS. Tito, as I said before, commands 32 divisions. If Tito is kept in power, these divisions, I am convinced, will fight in case the Kremlin attacks. The Congress is being asked to appropriate less than one-third of what it would cost to equip and maintain an American division for 1 year, in reality, in order to keep 32 divisions going in Yugoslavia. That is why I said a moment ago that from my own viewpoint the dollars we are spending now are the best dollars we shall have spent in a very long time in Europe, because, as I view the matter, the $39,000,000 we are appropriating is enough to keep the 32 divisions going, and yet it represents but a third of the amount required to equip and maintain one American division in the United States for a year.

Even in simple terms of dollars and cents, if any Senator is economically minded about it and desires to oppose it upon grounds of economy, it seems to me it would be rather foolish to do so, in view of the example which I have given.

Mr. President, those are the two points which I desired to make briefly with respect to the amendment offered by the Senator from California. I hope the Senate will not adopt the amendment at this particular time. It is inconsistent with section 303 of the Mutual Defense Assistance Act. The amendment provides as follows:

> This act shall not become effective until at least $38,000,000 of the $75,000,000 appropriated for the purpose of carrying out section 303 of the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949, as amended, has been expended for assistance to the Republic of China.

Section 303 of the Mutual Defense Assistance Act does not, as the Senator from Arkansas said a moment ago, confine itself solely to China, but refers to funds which may be expended in that general area.

The Senator from California wants to expend $38,000,000 of the $75,000,000 for the Republic of China. Where is it to be spent? What use is to be made of it? That information would all come out in a hearing, I take it, with respect to the $38,000,000 which the Senator wants to expend or at least to obligate for the purpose of helping the Republic of China. I did not hear the Senator's speech, but I doubt if he outlined what he would do with the $38,000,000.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Illinois has expired.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I yield a minute so that the Senator from California may make his statement.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Illinois that when he was out of the room I pointed out that there have already come from the Republic of China requests which have been screened by the proper authorities, for funds in order to maintain a body of non-Communist troops on the island of Formosa, which is an even larger body of troops than is the group in Yugoslavia.

Mr. LUCAS. Very well. But I think Congress should know for what this $38,000,000 would be spent. Suppose it were to be used to help blockade China. Would the people of the country agree to that? In other words, what does the Senator mean when he says he wishes to have expended $38,000,000 for the Republic of China at this particular time in the crisis which exists in the Far East? The President now has the power to spend $75,000,000 in that area, but by the Senator's amendment we would be telling him to spend $38,000,000 for the Republic of China. If we are going to tell him that, we who are responsible for the amendment ought to indicate to him, before it is appropriated, how he is to spend it and how the Secretary of State would spend it or how the military forces would spend it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] intimated that he wanted some time. So far as I am concerned, he may have the remainder of my time.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. President, I should like to say a word in order to make it perfectly clear that, as a member of the Foreign Relations Committee, I am heartily supporting the Yugoslav bill, so-called. I also want to make it perfectly clear that the amendment of the Senator from California has my full approval. The $38,000,000 provided by the amendment comes in the category of the $75,000,000 which was appropriated for the area of China 2 years ago and continued last year, but was to be spent by the executive department in areas which needed it most.

I have been as much concerned as has been the Senator from California because practically nothing has been contributed to the Republic of China. As I understood, when the Korean crisis arose it was the policy of the Government to support the forces in Formosa against any attack which might come. In fact, we went so far as to say the Seventh Fleet was to be used to protect against an attack. I have been urging on the State Department and on the Department of Defense that such aid be given to the Nationalist forces to help them to defend themselves. I am not talking about a war by the United States in China as referred to by the Senator from Arkansas, but to the Nationalists there. I think the administration is open to criticism for not having given attention to this phase of the matter and in not using some of the appropriation in that area. But I pass that for the moment, because we shall soon be discussing it when the Senator from California makes his motion to recommit the bill.

I listened to all the testimony with respect to the bill. I had as many doubts as had any other members of the committee. Every member of the committee had doubts whether the reason for the hunger in Yugoslavia today is that the Yugoslav farmers themselves have been dragging their feet when it comes to producing because of Tito's regulations with regard to farming, and so forth. It was suggested in many quarters that it was due to their own fault and to the regulations of the government that food was short. But I was convinced that that argument had been overstated when a representative of our own Agriculture Department, Mr. John J. Haggerty, who has been in that country 2 or 3 years and has made a complete study of the whole situation, pointed out that the famine this year was unprecedented in the history of that area, and that unless aid came very quickly there would be widespread famine and distress. If that should come about, then we would be faced with the danger that if we declined to render aid, aid would come from the other side of the iron curtain, and Yugoslavia would become a satellite of Russia.

So we had all the humanitarian inducements to save people from distress, and we had all the inducements that it was necessary and desirable at this time to keep Yugoslavia on this side of the curtain and a member of the western nations who are resisting Communist domination from Moscow. Of course, we know that Yugoslavia is a Communist state, but it is no longer, in my judgment, connected with or dominated by Moscow. It is opposed to Moscow and is trying to prevent being taken over by Moscow. When we considered the eastern end of the Mediterranean in its relation to Turkey and Italy, looking at the matter from a purely military standpoint, I was convinced from the testimony of our military advisers that the thing to do was to give this aid to keep 30 divisions in Yugoslavia in line with the western group of nations if there should be any invasion of Europe.

Mr. President, I support this bill and I hope it will pass.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada has 2 minutes remaining.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I have no desire to take up the time of the Senate, except to make one expression, and that is that the amendment which I have offered will take nothing from the effectiveness of this bill. It will permit the utilization of not to exceed $50,000,999 from ECA funds for Yugoslav relief. Already $12,000,000 has been morally committed for the relief of Yugoslavia, and $38,000,000 more is requested by the bill. The amendment, if it is adopted, will eliminate the idea of having to make another appropriation. It will simply use not to exceed $38,000,000 more than has been already used from ECA funds for relief purposes in Yugoslavia.

Mr. President, I repeat what I said a little while ago, that I have no faith in Mr. Tito. I do not believe he means to be friendly to this country. I do not believe he is at heart other than the reddest of red Communists. I do not believe he has any sympathy with our form of government. But the people of Yugoslavia may be starving and may be dying, and it may be that by this shot in the dark we may be able to strengthen ourselves in central Europe.

So far as I am concerned, without any faith in Mr. Tito whatever, because I think he is a brigand and a murderer of the first order—he has murdered his way into the position which he now occupies, and he is destroying every phase of godliness that there is in his country—at the same time, if it will save American lives when the struggle comes, which I believe is coming, between this country and Russia, I am willing to go along with the bill. But I do not think we should make another appropriation and thus lay another burden on the taxpayers of America when we have more than enough money to carry out all the plans of ECA, and, at the same time, to take care of this item out of ECA funds.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 4 o'clock having arrived, the question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MAHON], for himself and the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY].

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum has been suggested.

Mr. CONNALLY. Then I cannot proceed.

Mr. WHERRY. I shall be glad to withhold my suggestion of the absence of a quorum.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, as chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, I should like to state that the committee accepts the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that the so-called McMahon-Connally amendment, with respect to religious persecution, is the pending amendment. The absence of a quorum has been suggested. The clerk will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A quorum is present.

Under the unanimous-consent agreement, the question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCMAHON] for himself and on behalf of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY]. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the proper place in the bill, it is proposed to insert the following:

SEC. —. Nothing in this act shall be interpreted as endorsing measures undertaken by the present Government of Yugoslavia which suppress or destroy religious, political, and economic liberty, and the Yugoslav Government shall be so notified when aid is furnished under this act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that all time for debate on the amendment has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment which the clerk has read.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment.

Mr. MCCARRAN. Mr. President, I offer my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 1, line 5, through 8, it is proposed to strike out all of section 2 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

The President is hereby authorized to expend not in excess of $50,000,000 of the funds heretofore appropriated for expenses necessary to carry out the provisions of the Economic Cooperation Administration Act of 1948, as amended (Public Law 759, 81st Cong.), for the purpose of providing emergency relief assistance to Yugoslavia under the authority of this act.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, as chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, I accept the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the terms of the unanimous-consent agreement, debate on the amendment is limited to 20 minutes, to be equally divided and controlled, respectively, by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN] and the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY].

Mr. MCCARRAN. So far as I am concerned, I have no further remarks to make.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If no other Senator wishes to be recognized, the question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MAGNUSON and Mr. MCMAHON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON].

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I make a point of order against the amendment offered by the Senator from California.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I have not yet offered the amendment. I should like to have an opportunity to explain it. I am entitled to be recognized for 10 minutes. I thought some other amendments would be accepted by the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, and we could get such amendments out of the way first.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has recognized the Senator from Washington.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The legislative clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 3, line 11, it is proposed to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 5. At least 50 percent of the gross tonnage of any equipment, materials, or commodities made available under the provisions of this act and transported on ocean vessels (computed separately for dry bulk carriers, dry cargo liners and tankers) shall be transported on United States flag commercial vessels at market rates for United States flag commercial vessels, if available.

On page 3, line 17, strike out "6" and insert in lieu thereof "7."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the terms of the unanimous-consent agreement entered into, 20 minutes of debate is allowed on the amendment. The time for debate is to be equally divided and controlled, respectively, by the Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON] and the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY].

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I shall take only a few minutes. The purpose of my amendment is to again place into the economic aid acts the restriction that at least 50 percent of the goods which America sends to foreign countries shall be transported in American-flag ships if they are available. This is the only way in which we can keep our merchant marine alive. The amendment would bring the pending bill into conformity and uniformity with all other foreign-aid acts. I am sure there will be no objection to it.

Mr. MCCLELLAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I yield.

Mr. MCCLELLAN. Why not make it 100 percent? If we are to fly our flag over there, why not let the people over there see it as often as possible, since we are to spend our dollars over there?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I should like to make it 100 percent, but as a practical matter is it not advisable, because in many cases the availability of American-flag ships is such that they could not transport 100 percent of the goods. In this particular case there may have to be some deviation, as provided in the bill, if the ships are available. Like the Senator from Arkansas, I believe that the day is coming soon when we can ship in American-flag ships a great deal more of the goods we are providing for Europe.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

Mr. McMAHON. I am informed that the chairman of the committee has agreed to take this amendment to conference.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. At the end of the bill it is proposed to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. —. At the termination of each 3-month period after aid has been extended under this act the Secretary of State shall make a full and detailed report to the Congress. Said 3-month reports shall not be limited to, but shall include (1) information as to whether or not Yugoslavia is abiding by the agreement as provided for under section 3 of this act; (2) information as to any developments in the attitude of Yugoslavia with respect to basic human rights.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, so far as the chairman of the committee is concerned, and the committee, we are willing to accept the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McMAHON].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment and ask that it be read for the information of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. At the end of the bill, it is proposed to add the following new section:

SEC. 7. This act shall not become effective until at least $38,000,000 of the $75,000,000 appropriated for the purpose of carrying out section 303 of the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949, as amended, has been expended or obligated for expenditure for assistance to the Republic of China.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President——

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I have not yet offered the amendment. I wish to explain it in the 10 minutes available to me.

Mr. CONNALLY. How can the Senator have it read and speak on it without offering it?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I have not yielded for the purpose of the Senator making a point of order. I shall offer the amendment, but I desire the floor so that I may explain it.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator will get the floor when his time comes. I insist on my right to make a point of order.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I have not yielded for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair had recognized the Senator from California.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President——

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I make the point of order——

Mr. KNOWLAND. I have not yielded for that purpose, I respectfully say.

Mr. CONNALLY. I yielded to the Senator and let him speak for 10 or 15 minutes, but now he has not the courtesy to yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. KNOWLAND. No; because I do not want my amendment ruled out by the chairman before I have an opportunity to explain the background for it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time is running.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, since it is obvious that a point of order is to be made, I think the Senate should understand the background of this situation. In the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of December 8 it will be found that there was a quorum call, as is usual when a unanimous-consent agreement is entered into, in connection with the railroad labor bill. That information is found on page 16336. Fifteen pages later in the RECORD, without a quorum call, the original unanimous-consent agreement was amended to include the bill for Yugoslavia. The agreement also contained a provision that amendments which were not germane should not be included. My general understanding of the purpose of such a provision is to prevent, for example, an FEPC amendment, or some civil-rights amendment being offered. I believe that my amendment is quite germane, although technically it may not be, under this provision.

It is therefore foreclosed, even though I was present at the time of the original unanimous-consent agreement, but then I left the Senate Chamber to participate in hearings of the Senate Armed Services Committee. I was engaged in Senate business. I had no idea that a unanimous-consent agreement was to be entered into in connection with the Yugoslavian situation. Had I been present, I would at least have insisted that I be allowed to offer this amendment. So I am foreclosed from offering the amendment if, presumably, the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. President, I am prepared to support some aid for Yugoslavia, even though I recognize that it has a Communist government, although it is temporarily not alined with the Kremlin. On two different occasions, in the first session of the Eighty-first Congress and again in the second session, the Congress provided $75,000,000 for the general area of China, with the clear intent that at least a substantial part should go to the Republic of China. First, there was authorization legislation, which was later confirmed by appropriation legislation. Then the money was put into a deep freeze and buried, so that little if any of the money was used. So the only point at issue is that it seems to me that, since communism is global in character, we have a right to say that our Pacific flank is no less important than our Adriatic flank.

The able Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] stated that Mr. Tito had approximately 32 divisions. If those divisions are on the Russian model of 10,000 men each, that means 320,000 men in the Communist army of Mr. Tito, who is temporarily not alined with the Kremlin. If those divisions are approximately as large as ours, consisting of 15,000 men, it means a total of 470,000 men. But I call attention to the fact that on the island of Formosa there are more than 600,000 non-Communists; and if it is important from a manpower situation to give aid to Communist Tito, it is equally important to give aid to the non-Communist Republic of China, which has been our ally in two world wars, is a permanent member of the United Nations, and is a permanent member of the Security Council.

I point out that the Republic of China has never shot down any American planes and Mr. Tito's Yugoslavia has. The Republic of China has consistently supported in the United Nations the efforts of the free world against aggression in Korea. China has voted with the free nations of the world 100 percent of the time I submit that the record of Yugoslavia is that she has very seldom voted with the free nations of the world.

I have been on the island of Formosa twice. In Formosa there is freedom of the press. There is freedom of religion for every church of every type and character. I submit that that situation does not exist in Yugoslavia.

I have no objection, in order to drive a wedge into the ranks of the satellites, to giving some aid to Yugoslavia, and will support it. But I also say that it is equally important, since communism is global in character, to take advantage of some 600,000 non-Communist troops who are subject to aggressive action by communism, across the straits between the Republic of China on Formosa, and Red China on the mainland.

That is the basic issue. This amendment does not provide a single extra dollar. The money has already been appropriated by the Congress. It does not provide a new authorization. The authorization was made in two sessions of the Eighty-first Congress, by the Congress of the United States.

When it was obviously shown that the legislative history was that the Republic of China was meant, some flexible language was inserted so that in case the Republic of China should be overwhelmed, the funds could be used in southeast Asia or elsewhere. But it was never intended, so far as the Republic of China was concerned, that the funds should be put in a deep freeze, and that the Republic of China should get very little, if anything, from the two appropriations of $75,000,000.

Mr. President, I am forced into this situation because of the background which I have pointed out. There was no quorum call prior to the unanimous consent agreement. If the point of order is made and sustained, I do not intend to appeal from the decision of the Chair, but I do intend to offer a motion to recommit, reading as follows:

I move that the bill (S. 4201) to promote the foreign policy and provide for the defense and general welfare of the United States by furnishing emergency relief assistance to Yugoslavia be recommitted to the Committee on Foreign Relations with instructions to report the bill back to the Senate forthwith, including therein all amendments agreed to by the Senate to date, together with the following amendment:

Then follows my amendment adding a new section at the end of the bill.

I am forced into this situation, because I am foreclosed from offering and securing a vote on the amendment itself. All it will do will be at least to give the Senate an opportunity to vote on the question as to whether non-Communists in the Republic of China are at least worthy of as much consideration as the Communists of Yugoslavia.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, am I in order to make a point of order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STENNIS in the chair). Yes; the Senator is in order.

Mr. CONNALLY. I make a point of order on the amendment of the Senator from California.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California propose his motion now?

Mr. KNOWLAND. No. I move my amendment, which is now subject to a point of order.

Mr. CONNALLY. I make the point of order that the amendment of the Senator from California is not germane as an amendment to the original bill. It is set forth clearly in the unanimous consent agreement that amendments have to be germane. I make the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. CONNALLY. No.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, it seems to me obvious that the amendment offered by the Senator from California is germane. Exactly the same question is involved in it as is involved in the bill. Many Senators may hesitate to vote for aid to a man who has killed American boys, who murdered Mikhailovich, unless the Senate is prepared to adopt, as a part of a general policy, that Nationalist China shall be treated in a similar way. Just as Yugoslavia is considered at least to be a diversionary force against Russia, so non-Communist China may be considered as a diversionary force against Communist China.

Mr. President, it seems to me the amendment is perfectly germane. It is clearly involved in the general subject of the bill. It is a part of the one general policy. I submit that the Chair should rule the amendment to be in order.

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, I wish to clear my mind on one point in regard to the question of germaneness. Did I understand the Senator from California to designate in his amendment the Republic of China?

Mr. KNOWLAND. Yes.

Mr. FLANDERS. Was there a Republic of China designated in the original legislation authorization, or was it some vaguer term like "in the general vicinity"?

Mr. KNOWLAND. In the original bill, in order to obtain a compromise and receive the support of those who would vote for aid to the Republic of China as well as those who would not, the general language was adopted "in the general area of China," but it was felt, I am sure, that no one would claim on the floor that the Republic of China was not one of the nations in the general area of China.

Mr. FLANDERS. It would seem to me, Mr. President, that in coming to a determination as to whether the amendment is out of order, consideration should be given to whether it introduces a new piece of legislation in that it restricts application of the fund to the Republic of China instead of to the general area.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FLANDERS. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. The section which is involved, section 303 of title III of Public Law 329, Eighty-first Congress, reads as follows:

> In consideration of the concern of the United States in the present situation in China, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated to the President, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $75,000,000 in addition to funds otherwise appropriated as an emergency fund for the President, which may be expended to accomplish in that general area the policies and purposes declared in this act.

The amendment of the Senator from California now would direct the President to spend $38,000,000 in the Republic of China, which clearly conflicts with the original language.

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, I should like to say I am in sympathy with the Senator from California in feeling that there has been a complete evasion of the intent of Congress in making the $75,000,000 appropriation. I nevertheless feel strongly that anything which delays or cripples the protection of the Mediterranean Sea against a new nest of Russian submarine bases has got to be considered on its own merits. It is for that reason I hope that, so far as the substance is concerned, real justification will be found for ruling this particular amendment out of order.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FLANDERS. I yield.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Is the Senator from Vermont familiar with the fact that while there may be potential submarine bases in Yugoslavia, there are also potential submarine bases and air bases in Formosa; that it was from Formosa that the Japanese war lords attacked the Philippines, and that we have a very deep obligation to the Philippines and to Australia? So if we are going to close the door to communism in the Adriatic, we should take some realistic and practical steps to close it in the Pacific Ocean as well.

Mr. FLANDERS. I may say to the Senator from California——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Permit the Chair to make an observation. It seems to the Chair that the point of order comes under the 20-minute rule. The unanimous-consent agreement provides that the time be divided equally between the mover of the amendment and the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY]. If there is going to be extended debate the Chair thinks the time limitation ought to be observed. Does the Senator from Texas wish the floor?

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, does the unanimous-consent agreement cover debate on a point of order when the Chair is about ready to rule?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is discretionary with the Chair whether he wants to hear debate or not. He is glad to hear the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not care to argue the point of order. It seems to me that under the unanimous-consent agreement it is perfectly obvious the amendment has no relation whatever to the bill, which deals exclusively with Yugoslavia. Now to endeavor to bring in Chiang Kai-shek is not germane at all. Besides, as pointed out a minute ago, the amendment does not even comprehend the original law, because instead of saying, "in the general area of China," which the authorization provided, it restricts itself to "assistance to the Republic of China." So the amendment narrows the original scope.

Mr. President, I do not care to argue the point of order. I simply think the amendment is not germane under the language of the act, and I submit the question to the Chair for decision.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator from California yield to me for a question?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I do not have the time.

Mr. PEPPER. I did not understand there was any time limitation. As I understood, the Chair said discussion could be had in the discretion and indulgence of the Chair at this time.

Mr. KNOWLAND. If I may do so, I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. I regret I did not hear all of the learned address delivered by the Senator from California. I have read the able Senator's amendment, however. I do not know how he happened to have chosen the figure $38,000,000. What I wanted to ask the Senator is, Does he know what commitments have already been made with respect to the $75,000,000 provided for in the original act, which was to be spent in the general area of China?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I will answer the Senator from Florida in this way. The $38,000,000 is to place the far eastern flanks on a parity with the situation dealt with in the particular bill before us. That is number one.

No. 2. It is within, and well within, the over-all figures of $75,000,000, which the Congress has twice approved as a matter of policy, and twice approved as a matter of appropriation.

The third point is that with the exception of a very infinitesimal amount, there has been little, if anything, given to the Republic of China out of the two $75,000,000 amounts. The last figures I saw showed that a considerable amount, in the neighborhood of from thirty to thirty-five million dollars, was left out of the last appropriation of some $75,000,000. I do not have the most up-to-date figures, but that is, I believe, substantially correct.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. KNOWLAND. Yes.

Mr. PEPPER. The reason I make the point is that on the one question whether we would appropriate $38,000,000 or not I might feel entirely different. But if we direct that $38,000,000 be taken out of a particular appropriation we might be running the risk of taking away funds that had perhaps already been committed. For example, I remember distinctly that some of that money is going to Siam, to provide for its defense, and Siam has troops fighting with us in Korea. There might be other cases in which commitments of this money have been made, and the $38,000,000 might not be available. If the Senator wants to have Congress appropriate $38,000,000 of new money, so there would not be any possibility of conflict, that would be something else. Has the Senator assurance that $38,000,000 of the particular fund he describes remains available and is not committed? That is something that should be considered.

Mr. KNOWLAND. In the first place, there have been two appropriations of $75,000,000. Certainly in both of them it was not expected by the Congress that the Republic of China would be put into a deep freeze and not obtain any substantial help out of either of those $75,000,000 appropriations.

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, I raise a point of order. I judge that debate on the amendment has been concluded by reason of the time factor, and that we ought to be debating the point of order. Should not the subsequent discussion be directed strictly to the point of order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question before the Senate is the point of order.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. WHERRY. The Chair does not mean to state, does he, that the point of order on the question of germaneness, which is being raised, is subject to the limitations of the unanimous-consent agreement?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that it is discretionary as to whether debate shall be heard. The Chair has been very glad, indeed, to hear the debate, so far as it has covered the subject matter.

Unless some Senator has a point to make as to the germaneness of the amendment, the Chair is prepared to rule.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Chair for that observation, because it is in keeping with the decisions of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the only question in the mind of the Chair.

Unless some Senator has something to say that is particularly pertinent to the immediate question before the Chair, the Chair is prepared to rule.

By referring first to the provision contained in the unanimous-consent agreement:

> That no amendment or motion that is not germane to the subject matter of the said bill shall be received—

We find that any motion or amendment must be germane to the subject matter of the bill.

What is the subject matter of the bill? It is "to promote the foreign policy and provide for the defense and general welfare of the United States by furnishing emergency relief assistance to Yugoslavia."

In other words, there is a very broad opening there, but a very fine bead is drawn by the word "by." The words "furnishing emergency relief assistance to Yugoslavia" seem to limit the entire scope of the bill. Strictly under those terms, the Chair thinks the point of order is well taken; and the Chair so rules.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I should like to observe that sometimes we move along very rapidly. I have prepared a motion to recommit, and I understand that the motion is in order following the third reading of the bill, just before the final passage of the bill. I wish to be protected in my right to offer that motion, and therefore I give notice that I intend to offer it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's motion will be in order at any time before the final passage of the bill.

The bill is open to further amendment.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, a further parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. WHERRY. When the Senator from California makes his motion to recommit, he then will have 10 minutes to speak on his motion, will he not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I am very happy to note that the Senate adopted the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McMAHON]. That amendment, as I understand from reading it, requires, among other things, that there shall be a periodic report upon the attitude of Yugoslavia with respect to the observance of basic human rights by the Government of Yugoslavia. It is the observation of basic human rights which lies at the very heart of the present critical dilemma with which the world is faced.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let the Chair observe that the Senate is operating under a special limitation of debate, with 20 minutes allowed for debate on any motion or amendment. No amendment is pending, so far as the Chair understands, and no motion is pending.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I do not intend to take very much time. If necessary, I offer a technical amendment to strike out paragraph 3 (a) on page 2 of the bill, an amendment which I shall later withdraw.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Very well; the Senator from Wyoming may debate his amendment for 10 minutes.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I am about to say that I have observed that section 3 of the bill provides that:

> No assistance under authority of this act shall be made available nor shall any funds appropriated hereunder be expended until an agreement is entered into between Yugoslavia and the United States—

Containing certain undertakings.

I wish to make the record clear that, for my part, I believe that the provisions of the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut are just as binding as are the provisions of section 3 with respect to the agreement. As a member of the Appropriations Committee, I shall be free at all times to pass upon not only the agreement contained in section 3 and the reports which may be made upon the manner in which that agreement is to be carried out, but also the reports which are to be made with respect to the observance of basic human rights. I wish it to be clearly understood that I undertake no obligation, legal or moral, with respect to my judgment as a member of the Appropriations Committee to vote for or against any of the appropriations which are authorized in this measure.

I now withdraw my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Wyoming is withdrawn.

The bill is open to further amendment.

If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I submit the motion, which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

> I move that the bill (S. 4234) to promote the foreign policy and provide for the defense and general welfare of the United States by furnishing emergency relief assistance to Yugoslavia, be recommitted to the Committee on Foreign Relations, with instructions to report the said bill back to the Senate forthwith, including all amendments agreed to by the Senate to date, together with the following amendment; viz, at the end of the bill, add the following new section:
>
> "SEC. 7. This act shall not become effective until at least $38,000,000 of the $75,000,000 appropriated for the purpose of carrying out section 303 of the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949, as amended, has been expended or obligated for expenditure for assistance to the Republic of China."

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, as I understand, I have 10 minutes in which to speak on the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes. The Senator from California is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I wish to point out to the Members of the Senate that, had it not been for the second unanimous-consent agreement, which was made some time after the first one, and appears in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD 15 pages after the first one, for which there was properly a quorum call, although there was not a quorum call immediately prior to the second unanimous-consent agreement, the amendment would be germane to the bill. It is foreclosed by the second unanimous-consent agreement, immediately prior to which a quorum call was not had.

I wish to point out that if the Senate, consisting of 96 Members, representing the 48 States of the Union, surrenders the power to legislate into the hands of any committee of 13 members, regardless of how distinguished its members may be, we shall have completely surrendered into the hands of the committee the legislative power of the Senate of the United States.

If we are to discharge our responsibilities properly, I take it that we are not required to rubber-stamp the action of the Foreign Relations Committee or of the Armed Services Committee or of the Appropriations Committee; and I say that most respectfully, as a member of both the Armed Services Committee and the Appropriations Committee. Certainly I would never consider urging upon the Senate the passage of a bill, as reported by any of its committees, without the crossing of a "t" or the dotting of an "i," because the legislative power and the constitutional responsibility for foreign policy as well as for domestic policy rest in the hands of the Congress of the United States, of which the Senate is a coordinate branch.

I quite frankly admit that there is room for an honest difference of opinion as to whether we believe that in dealing with communism, an international world-wide menace, the door to Asia should be closed as tightly as the door to Europe is closed. However, I submit that is a very pertinent question in connection with the matter of foreign relations.

I speak as one who has supported the bipartisan foreign policy. However, it does not make sense for us to close the door of Europe against communism, but leave the door of Asia wide open to communism, when there are many persons who sincerely believe that if we permit the billion and one-half persons in Asia and all the vast stores of tin, rubber, petroleum, and other important products to be found in that part of the world to fall into the hands of the Soviet Union, it will be most difficult to stop aggressive communism in Europe alone. That is a basic issue which we are facing today, and I am forced to this parliamentary procedure because I was foreclosed by the unanimous-consent agreement to which I have already referred.

I now yield to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. President, in answer to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS], I wish to point out that this would involve no delay, because the motion to recommit provides that the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations shall report back forthwith. There cannot be a delay of more than 24 hours at most, and it would be a very wise delay, for it would enable us then to provide some aid where it would help protect the American boys who are now fighting in Korea, at the same time that we are providing aid to save the starving people of Yugoslavia.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the motion is made to recommit the bill to the committee for the purpose of having the committee report some provision to give money to the Republic of China. We all admire the zeal with which the Senator from California rushes forth, sword in hand, whenever anyone mentions the Chinese Nationalists or Chiang Kai-shek. It is really a fine, loyal position for him to take. But, Mr. President, why should we restrict it to the Republic of China? I invite the attention of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS]. Why should we not give some of this money to Indochina? Why should we not bring in Burma and appropriate a large amount of money for Burma? Why not aid Pakistan? Why not aid other Asiatic countries? Why should we restrict it to the Republic of China?

The Senator says, "We have not done anything for China, and we are not doing anything for her." Did we not do something for China when she was supposed to be fighting the northern Chinese and the Communists? Did not the United States, from its coffers, hand over to Chiang Kai-shek $2,000,000,000 in supplies and ammunitions? General Barr, an American, was in the Far East as an observer. He testified before our committee that Chiang Kai-shek's troops had never lost a battle as the result of lacking arms, supplies, or materials—which we were furnishing. The only battles they lost were those in which they did not want to fight, and in which they did not fight. The situation is quite different today. Do Senators want an all-out war with Red China?

Mr. President, why should the Senate recommit this bill? It is an important measure which has been carefully considered by the Committee on Foreign Relations. The committee held hearings. Witnesses appeared before the committee. The situation is important, and the demand is insistent. Everyone knows the attitude of communism in Europe. The pending bill is a vital one, designed to put a stop to Communist pressure on Yugoslavia and other Balkan states, upon Greece, and upon the Mediterranean area generally. I trust that the Senate will not vote to recommit the bill.

Why did not the Senator from California come before the committee when the bill was pending there to propose his amendment? He did not come. He was not even present when the unanimous-consent agreement was entered into in the Senate. The Senator says, "Mr. President, we are not going to permit one committee—we are not going to permit any committee—to take over the legislative duties of the United States Senate." The statement is gratuitous. We are not proposing to take over the duties of the Senate. Merely because the Senator does not happen to be present in the Senate when a unanimous-consent agreement is made is that a denial of the power, the authority, and the sovereignty of the Senate itself? The Senate is governed by rules. If we do not follow the rules, they can be invoked through points of order followed by appropriate action. One may not remain at home, or in a committee room, and expect to run the Senate.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. If the Senator will permit me to make this observation in his time, I desire to say that it seems to me the important thing about the bill is that it is an emergency measure. It has been reported as such. The Committee on Foreign Relations, at the request of the President and of the Secretary of State, were diligent in bringing this measure before the Senate, in order that we might make some disposition of it before this short session closes.

Mr. President, as surely as I stand here, if this bill is recommitted, the Yugoslavs will receive no aid during this brief session of the Congress, because the committee will take time to discuss this $38,000,000 item, as to where it shall go and as to how it shall go, and as to how it shall be expended. Witnesses will have to appear. I undertake to say that we are jeopardizing our own interests through not speeding this measure on its way and appropriating the money it provides for Yugoslavia, if the drought and the resulting shortage of food are as reported to the Senate and to the people of the country.

The bill should be passed speedily in the interest of the safety and security of the country. With all due deference to my friend from California, and even though he may be justified later in seeking to have what he proposes done through a separate bill, I say it should not be tied into the pending bill, perhaps resulting in defeat of a measure which is so urgently needed at this particular time.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Illinois that, if this proposal came before the Senate by the introduction of a separate bill, it would be another matter. The Senator from California could have such a bill considered by the appropriate committee, and it would be given proper consideration by the Senate. I submit that to tie down the present bill with an amendment of this sort would be destructive of the purposes of the bill. Furthermore, it would not, in the long run, accomplish what the Senator from California has in mind. If it is proposed to penalize the Yugoslavs in order to make a gesture toward the Chinese Nationalists, the result would be that neither of them would be served properly.

This is a vital measure. The emergency is upon us. We ought to act upon the bill as reported, and we ought to act promptly in order to get this relief to Yugoslavia. If we hesitate, if we play tricks here in considering this matter, the effect of it will be that the Yugoslavs will lose some of their ardor. They will begin to doubt our sincerity. They will begin to doubt our anxiety to give them aid. So, Mr. President, I oppose the motion to recommit, and I urge the Senate to vote it down, so that we may proceed to a vote upon the pending bill.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, how much time do I have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California has 6 minutes remaining.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I shall merely take 2 minutes, after which I want to yield some time, because certain questions have been raised. I want to be stopped at the expiration of the 2 minutes.

The question is: Why did not the Senator from California offer this amendment earlier?

I shall give a very real reason: It is because I had hoped that in the communiqué which was issued by the President of the United States and the Prime Minister of Great Britain they would show that a firm stand would be taken in the Far East. But I did not expect the British Government to offer its hand of welcome into the United Nations to the bloody Chinese Communists who are killing United Nations forces in Korea today. I did not expect that to happen. That is why I was not before the committee earlier.

I called the attention of the Senate to the fact that from VJ-day until last year the Chinese Communists had suffered a million and a quarter casualties at the hands of the Chinese Nationalists. It is true that the Chinese Nationalist forces were being pushed back; but so are United Nations forces in Korea today.

I called attention also to the fact that in the white paper itself, in the statement by the President of the United States in January 1946, he said that of the surplus material there was none that had not been demilitarized.

Mr. President, I yield 2 minutes, first to the Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER], and the remainder of my time to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, I regret that this has become a matter of controversy. I think we all recognize the seriousness of the situation. I desire to make clear that it is not at all evident exactly what we are getting for the $38,000,000 or the $75,000,000 we are making available to Yugoslavia. In that connection I want to read briefly from a letter published in the New York Times of today under the heading "Appraising Tito's Army" and to have the entire letter inserted in the RECORD. I read:

In his dispatches, your Belgrade correspondent has repeatedly stated that "the Yugoslav Army is the strongest army in Europe except the Soviet Army." It seems that the same opinion has been shared by some other American observers in Europe also; so it is stated by one of them that Tito's army has "30 or 32 divisions of hard-beaten fighters."

Moreover, some official American documents recently published show that the above opinions have been accepted by the American authorities as statements of fact.

May I warn against precipitate and hasty acceptance of such opinions?

The superficiality of western and especially American opinions regarding the real strength of the Yugoslav Army in the wars sounds a warning against hasty opinions. In the years when the Nazi menace was growing on the European continent, western observers considered and publicly praised the Royal Yugoslav Army of those days as "the strongest army in Europe." Even the shrewd observer John Gunther wrote in Inside Europe in 1936 that the Royal Yugoslav Army was "probably the most formidable army in Europe."

When, however, this army was put to the test, it proved worthless and was unable to offer any serious resistance. The enormous discrepancy between the opinion of western observers and the realities was due principally to the uncritical acceptance of the information supplied by an authoritarian regime as well as to the inadequate regard for the feelings and opinion of the masses which form the vital component of a modern army but have no possibility of expressing freely their sentiments in peacetime.

* * * * *

I wonder whether they are aware that Tito's army officers, owing to their overbearing and haughty behavior and to their privileged position, are the most hated and despised group of the present ruling class of Yugoslavia.

Mr. President, I ask that the remainder of this letter be incorporated in the RECORD at this point, and I hope we shall have some assurance that some of these persons will fight with us and work with us if we go forward in this program.

There being no objection, the remainder of the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

May I quote in addition three points which call for cautiousness in conclusions:

How little western observers on the spot know of Tito's army is illustrated by the fact that they were able to get Tito's military publications only recently.

I wonder whether they are aware that Tito's army officers, owing to their overbearing and haughty behavior and to their privileged position, are the most hated and despised group of the present ruling class of Yugoslavia.

The problems arising from the formation of only one up-to-date division should indicate the value of statements regarding Tito's "30 or 32 divisions of hard-beaten fighters."

JURAJ KRNJEVIC,
Former Vice Premier of Yugoslavia, Secretary General, Croatian Peasant Party.
LONDON, December 4, 1950.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I am wondering if the distinguished Senator from California would consider amending his motion so that it would provide only that the bill be recommitted with instructions to report forthwith, and omit the specific portion of the amendment, for this reason, that I hope if the Senator modifies his amendment the Senate will approve it. Certainly the Senator from California has a right to his day in court, without setting out the specific amendment, but letting the committee report the bill to the Senate forthwith, at which time the Senator from California can offer any amendment he chooses to offer.

I make that plea because, when the agreement was entered into, I was not on the floor. I later suggested that there might be other Senators who desired to offer amendments, which is the general rule, so that there would be 20 minutes upon the amendment, 10 minutes on each side.

The Senator from California offered an amendment. It does not make any difference whether it was submitted to the committee or whether it was not, because he had a right to offer it, and he feels strongly about it.

Mr. President, this is a moral obligation. It is in the interest of fair play that the Senator be given an opportunity to offer his amendment on the floor of the Senate. If he should do what I have suggested, it would not mean that we would be voting on the amendment at all; we would simply be recommitting the bill so as to clarify the procedure, and the committee could report the bill. If we do not want the amendment, we can vote it down, or some other amendment can be adopted. That is the fair way to do it.

I hope every Senator will give the Senator from California a chance to have his day in court. It can be done in that way without hurting anyone's feelings.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I modify my motion to that extent, cutting out all the language beyond the word "forthwith."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator modifies his motion to the extent of eliminating certain language. The clerk will read the language of the motion as modified.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to modify the motion to read as follows:

I move that Senate bill 4234 to promote the foreign policy and to provide for the defense and general welfare of the United States by furnishing emergency relief assistance to Yugoslavia be recommitted to the Committee on Foreign Relations with instructions to report the said bill back to the Senate forthwith.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, if the bill is recommitted and then reported to the Senate, does that mean that the debate starts anew and can continue for an indefinite period?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There will be a new day in court when it comes back.

Mr. AIKEN. And the debate can continue indefinitely?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes; the Senator is correct.

The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from California, as modified.

Mr. WHERRY and other Senators requested the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. LUCAS. I announce that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BENTON], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. TAYLOR], and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] are necessarily absent.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire is recognized.

Mr. BRIDGES. I vote "aye."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The result has been announced. The vote of the Senator from New Hampshire cannot be cast at this time.

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, I wish to say that it was with some regret that I placed myself on the side opposite to that taken by the Senator from California. I did so because of my feeling that the undertaking in Yugoslavia ought to have a free road. I also feel that the discussion and determination of our policy with reference to the Chinese Republic should likewise have a free road, and that we should have early discussion and an early decision of that question. I merely wish to place myself on record as feeling that necessity exists for arriving at such a decision, and to express the hope that we can get to a consideration of the subject in the opening days of the new Congress.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted at this point in the RECORD a statement prepared by me relating to the pending bill.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The total proposed program of emergency relief assistance for Yugoslavia consists entirely of commodities procured or to be procured through the Department of Agriculture and shipped directly to Yugoslavia. The program totals 603,900 tons, including 464,500 tons of grains, 70,000 tons of vegetables and rice, 20,000 tons of lard, 20,000 tons of sugar, 4,500 tons of dried eggs, 6,000 tons of dried milk, 900 tons of canned meat, and 18,000 tons of seeds. The total costs of supplying these foods including transportation is $69,400,000.

Under the stopgap program already in progress, 248,900 tons of food and feed are being provided under the Economic Cooperation Administration Act, the Mutual Defense Assistance Act and under a line of credit extended to the Yugoslav Government by the Export-Import Bank. As a part of the stopgap program 140,000 tons of wheat are being shipped by the ECA from the United States to Italy and Germany, which countries are in turn supplying about 110,000 tons of milled flour to Yugoslavia. The processing of this wheat into flour has afforded the milling industries of Italy and Germany an opportunity to utilize their facilities more fully and in this way a definite contribution has been made to the economic health of these countries. The $5,600,000 in funds provided by the Export-Import Bank were used for the purchase and shipment of surplus beans, eggs, and meat from the Department of Agriculture, also for lard purchased in the open market by the Department of Agriculture for Yugoslav account.

The remaining portion of the program now before the Congress consists of 355,000 tons of food, feed, and seeds as follows: 276,000 tons of grains, 50,000 tons of vegetables and rice, 5,000 tons of lard, 6,000 tons of dried milk, and 18,000 tons of seeds. The cost of the commodities and their shipment under this part of the program is estimated at $34,400,000. All of these commodities will be procured by the Department of Agriculture with appropriated funds. No funds will be turned over to the Yugoslav Government.

Of the total program before the Congress, 71 percent will be procured from stocks of the Commodity Credit Corporation while the balance or 29 percent, chiefly flour, lard, and seeds, must be purchased in the open market.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. SALTONSTALL and other Senators requested the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LUCAS. I announce that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BENTON], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. TAYLOR], and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] are necessarily absent.

So the bill (S. 4234) was passed.

Mr. O'CONOR subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a statement explanatory of my vote on the Yugoslav bill be printed in the RECORD immediately following the vote on its passage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The statement is as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR O'CONOR

In the light of established facts as to Tito's antagonism to the United States and to the democratic freedoms for which this Nation always has stood, our people have a right to ask—as they are asking—"When are we going to stop giving aid to our enemies; when are we going to cease strengthening those whose announced purpose is to destroy us?"

In my opinion a Communist is a Communist, whether he practices his nefarious creed in Russia, north China, or in Yugoslavia. Their ultimate objective is to destroy our way of life, which is the only barrier to their quest for world supremacy.

I am not unmindful of the new doctrine which the State Department is espousing at the moment, that Tito is going to help save us from Russia, if we, in turn, will keep him from being driven out of his Communist dictatorship. But, like so many of my fellow citizens, I am becoming somewhat disillusioned about the chances of winning avowed Communists to our side. The glaring evidence of Communist solidarity against western aims for peace is vividly before us in Korea. We were going to wean the Chinese Communists away from their motherland, Russia, by kindness, but, instead, the United States helped to make possible their recent conquest of the mainland and their aggression in Korea, and has paved the way to a possible show-down struggle between the east and west by supplying them with many of the vital supplies they needed to prepare them for war against us.

Are we going to make the same blunder again, by strengthening Tito just when nature and the accumulated results of his diabolic rule were threatening to bring about his downfall?

Has Tito proven his friendship for the United States? In the light of Moscow's oft-demonstrated policy of double-dealing and hypocrisy, of lying and deceit, can anyone be reasonably sure that Tito's protestation of enmity toward the Soviet is genuine, and not simply another of the devious deceptions for which Moscow is so well known?

Yugoslavia, under Tito, has violated, time and time again, every principle of justice and humanity in its dealings with minority groups within its own borders. To question any of the unjust practices of Tito's totalitarian regime has been to invite death or banishment; even to question the morality of the most vicious acts of violence against members of racial or religious groups has been an open invitation to disaster. Many of Yugoslavia's leading patriots and finest citizens have faced the firing squad, or are undergoing the living death of forced labor, because they could not approve the injustices upon which their dictator depends to rule.

Tito has vented his rancor against America on many occasions. His underlings rarely have missed an opportunity to express their scorn of all things American in their treatment of United States nationals, and in their replies to official United States protest. Their shooting down American flyers, 2 years after the war's end, in two separate attacks, killing five of our aviators, at the very time when American help was being given generously to aid Yugoslavia's hungry people, was an instance of their supreme contempt for their benefactors.

What of the vicious facts of Tito's dictatorship and of the thousands of members of Yugoslav religious groups, Orthodox, Protestant, Catholic, and Jewish, whose persecution and sufferings have shocked the world since Tito's accession to power? Civilization was aghast at the farcical trial of Archbishop Aloysius Stepinac, a patriot who had won highest military honors in the army of his native land, and whose heroic resistance first to Nazi intolerance and later to Tito's ruthlessness knew no boundaries of color, or race, or creed. But Archbishop Stepinac was only one of 1,500 Yugoslav priests who were killed, imprisoned, or exiled—only one of 400,000 members of his faith in Croatia alone who have given their lives because they would not bow to Tito's will.

That our memories may be refreshed as to the type of government and type of dictator-ruler to whom we are now being asked to supply additional aid, I will take but a moment to quote very briefly excerpts from statements and editorials, the truth of which has not been controverted by any later developments in Tito's regime.

Winston Churchill advised the British House of Commons on November 1, 1946, and I quote: "Conditions in Yugoslavia are sinister and melancholic. The whole country is being as far as possible converted into a Communist area. Communism is being taught in schools and every effort is being made to create a Soviet Socialist Republic."

The New York Times in an editorial declared in condemning the trial of Archbishop Aloysius Stepinac: "The Communist dictatorship will not tolerate among the masses any influence it cannot digest and use for its nutriment. It will acknowledge no control over men's minds other than its own."

Again the New York Times declared editorially: "The Croat prelate's trial and conviction violates Yugoslavia's pledge to the United Nations to respect human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language, or religion."

In resigning as Yugoslav consul in New Orleans Basil S. Rusovitch declared: "I no longer feel that I can belong to such a mockery of government. * * * My decision was prompted by the unjust trial and execution of Gen. Drazha Mihailovitch, the killing of American pilots over Yugoslavia, and finally the infamous trial of Archbishop Stepinac, an innocent man, beloved in Yugoslavia."

The quotations could go on indefinitely, but brief as they are, they emphasize the infamous character of the man and the regime we now are asked to help keep in power.

As indicative of the outraged feelings of our countrymen with regard to the wanton killing by Yugoslav flyers of our airmen who were forced off their course by bad weather I quote from the New York Times of Tuesday, September 10, 1946, the refusal of members of the International Longshoremen's Association, A. F. of L., to continue loading relief supplies aboard a ship bound for Yugoslavia. The president of the longshoremen's association, Joseph P. Ryan, declared at that time that no members of the union would load any ships with relief supplies for Yugoslavia, "until proper action was taken against those who were responsible for shooting down our planes in Yugoslavia, which caused the death of our airmen."

It is interesting also to note the authenticated reports that UNRRA vehicles were used by Yugoslav Communist youth groups to carry out their program of intimidation against religious groups in their country.

As further evidence of the type of injustices dealt out by Tito to his own subjects I have just been advised by a well-informed citizen of Maryland, that her aged aunt and uncle in Yugoslavia have had to serve 30 days each in jail because they were unable to furnish the Yugoslav Government with their quota of grain.

They could not raise their normal amount of grain because of the drought. Tito's agents refused to accept such an explanation even at the very time that their government was appealing to Washington for increased assistance because of the very drought which had prevented these poor people from meeting their commitments to the government.

I am informed likewise that this is not the only incident of its kind—rather the practice was general of requiring the poor farmers to serve time, pay fines, or give up their cows and other stock in lieu of their alloted quota of grain.

In the face of all these facts I cannot in good conscience vote to supply money exacted from the American taxpayers to a nation which is committed to communism and therefore to the destruction of freedom and liberty throughout the world.

Mr. LANGER subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to insert in the body of the RECORD tomorrow an explanation of my vote against the bill providing aid for Yugoslavia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

EXTENSION OF RENT CONTROL IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 209, Calendar 258, and I ask the clerk to state the joint resolution by title.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 209) to amend and extend the provisions of the District of Columbia Emergency Rent Act, as amended.

Mr. LUCAS. I may say that if there is no serious objection to the joint resolution—and I understand that there is not—we may pass it yet this evening.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the distinguished majority leader yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. Earlier in the day the distinguished Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY]——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion has not yet been put.

Mr. WHERRY. I understand.

Mr. LUCAS. I merely moved that the Senate proceed to consider the Senate Joint Resolution 209.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I stated earlier to the distinguished Senator from West Virginia that I should like to have him withhold the request for the consideration of the joint resolution until some Senators who were particularly interested in it could be present in the Chamber. They are now present. Therefore, so far as the minority leader is concerned, there is no objection.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I ask that my motion be put.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Illinois.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 209) to amend and extend the provisions of the District of Columbia Emergency Rent Act, as amended, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment, after line 7, to strike out down to the end of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 2. (a) Subsection (3) (b) of section 2 of such act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"(b) Any housing accommodations the construction of which was completed after March 31, 1948;".

(b) Subsection (4) of section 2 of such act is repealed.

SEC. 3. Section 2 of such act, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsections:

"(6) Notwithstanding any other provision of this act, the maximum rent chargeable for any housing accommodations which on or before June 24, 1950, were self-contained family units located in hotels (as defined by regulations issued by the Administrator) or which now are such self-contained family units located in hotels shall be (1) the rental rate prevailing for such accommodations on June 24, 1950, or (2) if not rented on June 24, 1950, the rental rate prevailing for comparable housing accommodations; subject to such adjustment as may be made pursuant to sections 3 and 4.

"(7) Any additional housing accommodations, created by conversion after March 31, 1948, and any housing accommodations created by conversion resulting in additional self-contained family units after May 1, 1949, shall continue to be housing accommodations subject to maximum rent ceilings and minimum service standards: Provided, That the rent first charged by contract between the landlord and tenant for additional housing accommodations created by conversion after March 31, 1948, or conversions resulting in additional self-contained family units created after May 1, 1949, shall be deemed to be the maximum rent ceiling until the Administrator shall determine an appropriate rent for the same. In making this determination the Administrator may consider costs of materials and labor used in bringing such housing accommodations into existence, and he may issue any necessary regulations and general orders to effectuate the administration of the above provisions."

SEC. 4. This act shall take effect on the first day of the first calendar month following the month in which it is enacted.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, if Senators desire to discuss the District of Columbia rent control joint resolution, I have no objection to postponing its further consideration until tomorrow. I made the suggestion a moment ago that we might conclude consideration of the joint resolution tonight, in view of the fact that the Senator from West Virginia understood, after discussions with various Senators, that there was a probability that we might pass it tonight. I am not trying to hurry Senators.

Mr. WHERRY. I am quite satisfied that there are some Senators who would like to say a word briefly, and that there will be no opposition to the joint resolution.

Mr. LUCAS. I yield the floor.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, the sole purpose of the joint resolution is to extend the present rent-control law of the District of Columbia until the 28th day of February. It was unanimously approved by the District Committee.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. NEELY. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. Exactly what does the joint resolution do?

Mr. NEELY. It merely extends the law enacted during the last session of Congress until the 28th day of February.

Mr. LANGER. As I understand, it deals with rent control.

Mr. NEELY. For the District of Columbia only.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for one question?

Mr. NEELY. I yield.

Mr. CAIN. Does the joint resolution to extend until the 28th day of February Federal rent control for the District of Columbia change in any way whatever the law under which rent controls are being administered in the District today?

Mr. NEELY. Not even to the dotting of an "i" or the crossing of a "t."

Mr. CAIN. As the Senator well knows, the Senator from Washington voted against the present rent-control law for the District of Columbia.

Mr. NEELY. That is true.

Mr. CAIN. I therefore feel constrained to vote against the measure which is now the pending business. However, the Senator from Washington has no intention of arguing the question at this time, in view of what the Senator from West Virginia has just said.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, how long would rent control be extended under the joint resolution?

Mr. NEELY. Until the 28th day of February. However, there is an amendment, offered by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. HUNT] to extend control in the District until the 31st day of March in conformity with the general law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I move the adoption of the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NEELY. There is another amendment proposed by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. HUNT].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 1, line 6, after the word "thereof", it is proposed to strike out "February 28," and insert in lieu thereof "March 31."

Mr. NEELY. I move the adoption of that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there further amendments to be offered? If not, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 209) was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed as follows:

Resolved, etc., That section 1 (b) of the District of Columbia Emergency Rent Act, as amended (D. C. Code, 1940 ed., sec. 45–1601 (b)), is hereby amended by striking out "January 31, 1951" and inserting in lieu thereof "March 31, 1951."

COMMITTEE SERVICE

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, the steering committee of the majority has discussed the question of the assignment of committee memberships to the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CLEMENTS] and the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. We have agreed temporarily to assign both Senators to the Committee on the Judiciary and the Committee on Rules. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SMITH] will take the same two positions our former colleague, Senator Graham, occupied, and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CLEMENTS] will take the same two positions the Senator from Kentucky, Mr. Withers, our former colleague, occupied.

Mr. President, I send to the desk an order and ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The order will be read.

The order was read, as follows:

Ordered, That Mr. CLEMENTS, of Kentucky, and Mr. SMITH of North Carolina be assigned to service on the Committee on the Judiciary and the Committee on Rules and Administration.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, one word before the Chair puts the order before the Senate. It is definitely understood by members of the steering committee on the majority side, as well as the two Senators who are receiving these assignments, that the assignments are temporary only, and that the new steering committee which will be named in January will then reconsider the assignments, because it could be possible that older Members, who have seniority rights, may make request for these positions. I merely state that for the RECORD so that the Senators who are receiving the appointments will be under no misapprehension as to the position of the steering committee of the majority.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the order?

The order was considered and agreed to.

PREVENTION OF CORPORATIONS FROM ACQUIRING ANOTHER CORPORATION BY MEANS OF ACQUISITION OF ITS ASSETS

Mr. AIKEN obtained the floor.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 2734, Calendar No. 1777, an act to amend an act entitled

"An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," approved October 15, 1914 (38 Stat. 730), as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understood that the Senator from Illinois had yielded the floor, and the Chair recognized the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, I have no objection to the bill being taken up for consideration, so long as it does not jeopardize my rights to the floor.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, many Members have left the floor. The Senator from Illinois has now moved that a bill be taken up for consideration. I am in favor of the bill and I think it should be considered. I doubt if there is going to be any controversy about the bill. Why cannot it be made the unfinished business, and a vote be taken on it tomorrow when the Senate reconvenes.

Mr. LUCAS. I should like to have the bill made the unfinished business. If any Senator should object tomorrow, I shall be glad to have the vote by which it was made the unfinished business reconsidered.

Mr. WHERRY. I do not think objection will be made then, but it is too late now to obtain a quorum in an endeavor to pass the bill.

Mr. LUCAS. It is not my purpose to have the bill passed today. My purpose is merely to have the bill taken up and made the unfinished business.

Mr. WHERRY. I agree to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Illinois that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 2734. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 2734) to amend an act entitled "An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," approved October 15, 1914 (38 Stat. 730), as amended, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments.

PROPOSAL NO COMMITMENTS BE MADE WITH BRITAIN WHICH ARE NOT SUBJECT TO SENATE REVIEW IN TREATY FORM

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Vermont yield to me?

Mr. AIKEN. I yield.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Mr. President, as a cosponsor of Senate Resolution 371 I have been very much encouraged by the wholesome acclaim which it is receiving in many quarters. It is crystal clear from the praise it is receiving, that the people of America are alert to the dangers which confront them and are prepared to demand of their Government a full and complete accounting of the Nation's needs, particularly as those needs are to be affected in the future by commitments abroad.

In the Thursday issue—December 7—of the New York World-Telegram, there appeared an editorial entitled "The People's Voice," which was both timely and ably written.

In the light of the fact that we of the Senate of the United States will shortly be given the opportunity to support Senate Resolution 371 I cannot recommend too strongly a careful reading of this editorial on the part of every single Member of this body. That it may be made immediately available for that purpose, I ask unanimous consent that it be incorporated in the body of the RECORD at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE PEOPLE'S VOICE

A resolution introduced by 20 Republican Senators cautions President Truman to undertake no commitments with Britain which are not subject to Senate review in treaty form. This is a proper assertion of the Senate's rights to a voice in the conduct of foreign relations.

During World War II President Roosevelt drifted into the bad habit of negotiating with other governments on a personal basis in a manner certainly never contemplated by the Constitution. He not only neglected to seek the advice and consent of the Senate, but he also often bypassed his own State Department as well.

The agreements made at Cairo, Tehran, Yalta, and Potsdam included political commitments which were in no sense essential to conduct of the war and were clear evasions of the Senate's right to share the treaty-making power with the President.

This secret diplomacy has continued to operate since the war, to the practical exclusion of Congress, particularly in the Far East.

Senator CAIN, of Washington, one of the sponsors of the resolution, has asked for an immediate balance sheet showing what contributions of manpower and resources are to be made by our Allies to the common defense effort. He urges the rearming of Germany and Japan, and the inclusion of Turkey, Greece, Spain, and, if possible, Sweden, in the North Atlantic Pact.

Most of these things suggest themselves to the average citizen. We are losing a war. Strong measures must be taken to avert catastrophe.

We may be dealing with a question of life or death and in a representative democracy the people have a right to know what is going on. Then, if they are not satisfied with the measures being taken, they can suggest alternatives.

If the President expects to have public confidence, he must take the people into his confidence and conduct our international relations in the manner provided by the supreme law of the land.

THE ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, I wish to take a few minutes to discuss a matter which is of great importance.

The current issue of Fortune magazine contains an article entitled "Battle of the St. Lawrence" by Mr. Freeman Lincoln.

In publishing this story, Fortune has rendered a real service to the country and has shown courage and independence in the best tradition of a free press.

I commend this article to my colleagues as an excellent and accurate presentation of the case for the St. Lawrence seaway.

It points out a fact which many supporters of the St. Lawrence development have known for a long time—that the eastern railroads and utilities have been primarily responsible for the delay and the obstruction in developing this greatest all North American resources.

The source of this obstruction centers with certain financial and utility interests in a few eastern cities, principally Boston, Baltimore, and New York.

It does not suffice to point out to these interests that they would not be adversely affected by the development of the St. Lawrence Basin.

They are simply afraid of any change in the economic development of northeastern United States and Canada and their fears prompt them to resort to almost any means in their program of obstruction.

This article in Fortune magazine, which I wish that all Members of Congress would read, points out clearly the stake which the American people have in the development not only of our own resources but of Canadian resources as well.

I come from a State that is a next door neighbor to Canada.

We in Vermont have a keen appreciation of the importance of Canada to the welfare and security of the United States.

The international developments of the last few days have demonstrated clearly that when fighting is to be done and when material is needed for the defense of a free world, the North American Continent in the final analysis must supply the means.

A strong Canada is essential to the safety of our own country.

Mr. President, in the Niagara and St. Lawrence Rivers, there is today 9,000,000 horsepower of electricity going to waste. Two million of this horsepower belongs to the United States and 7,000,000 to Canada.

This 9,000,000 horsepower of electricity now going to waste is the equivalent of the human labor of 135,000,000 Chinese coolies.

If our boys are to fight in the Far East or anywhere else in the world, they are going to need those God-given horsepower behind them back home.

Canada and northeastern United States are desperately short of electrical energy needed for defense purposes.

A few days ago, limitations were put upon the use of copper because of inadequate supply.

Shortages of sulfur are beginning to appear also.

In my State of Vermont, there are enormous deposits of copper, but the production today is restricted to 8,000,000 pounds a year, and the byproducts of sulfur and iron to be found in the waste from the mine cannot be recovered at all because electrical energy is not available.

Yet, Mr. President, these great deposits of minerals so essential to the security of America are figuratively within a stone's throw of the millions of horsepower going to waste on the St. Lawrence River.

A few days ago, our Government contracted with the Aluminum Co. of America for a large amount of aluminum to be produced at the Alcoa plant at Massena, N. Y. This is the site of the contemplated Canadian-American dam on the St. Lawrence River. The power to produce this aluminum must be produced outside the area and transmitted several hundred miles to the aluminum plant at Massena.

In its contract with Alcoa, the Government provides that all the cost of electrical energy above 5 mills per kilowatt-hour will be added to the contract price of the aluminum. Since it requires 10 kilowatt-hours of electricity to produce a pound of aluminum, this means that the product of the Alcoa Massena plant will cost the United States not less than 5 to 6 cents a pound above the contract price because the development of the power in the St. Lawrence River has been blocked.

We have in Vermont, also, large deposits of asbestos—another strategic material—and are today supplying 8 percent of the Nation's needs. The other 92 percent is imported.

There is no question but that the development of an adequate supply of low-cost power on the St. Lawrence would add immensely to our national security through enabling us to produce greater quantities of critical materials.

No less critical than the power shortage in northeastern United States and Canada is the desperate need for the improvement of navigation on the St. Lawrence River.

The great Midwest steel industry is threatened today because of the rapid depletion of high-grade iron ore; yet the almost unlimited quantities of high-grade ore discovered in Labrador could be made available to the steel plants of Buffalo, Cleveland, Gary, Chicago, and other Great Lakes steel centers if we were able to transport this ore up the St. Lawrence River to where it is needed.

Unless a new source of iron ore is made available, the midwest industries and agriculture will have to pay much higher prices for steel in the future, while the industry itself will be driven to the sea coast, where it will be exposed to enemy action of all kinds in the event of war.

Nor can we depend on offshore sources of supply of iron ore at all in case of a war emergency.

We shall need the St. Lawrence seaway to keep our supply lines protected from enemy action.

Furthermore, Canada will be our main reliance not only for iron ore, but for titanium, uranium, nickel, and many other products needed to manufacture the implements of defense.

For 5 years since World War II, we have poured billions upon billions of dollars into Western Europe and the Far East to build power plants and navigation works on the Rhone, the Rhine, and other rivers, and to build factories and industrial plants for other countries all over the world. Some of my friends who oppose the St. Lawrence have strongly supported such expenditures.

But, in the final analysis, we will find that when sacrifices are to be made and fighting is to be done and material is to be supplied, we will have to do the job largely with Canadian help.

I call upon my colleagues in this Senate to reconsider their opposition to the development of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence waterway; and I call upon the financial and utility interests of our eastern seaboard to brush aside the mist which has obscured their vision, to forget their self-interest, and to support the needs of their country in this crucial hour.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STENNIS in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the Committee on Armed Services.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following favorable reports of nominations were submitted:

By Mr. McCARRAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary:

Holmes Baldridge, of Oklahoma, to be an Assistant Attorney General; and Leonard R. Carpenter, of Nevada, to be United States marshal for the district of Nevada, vice Edward M. Ranson, resigned.

By Mr. GEORGE, from the Committee on Finance:

Albert H. Kleffman, of Hibbing, Minn., to be collector of customs for customs collection district No. 35, with headquarters at Minneapolis, Minn., in place of Viena P. Johnson; and

H. Tucker Gratz, of Honolulu, T. H., to be collector of customs for customs collection district No. 32, with headquarters at Honolulu, T. H.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will proceed to state the nominations on the calendar.

DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE—NOMINATION PASSED OVER

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Anna M. Rosenberg, of New York, to be Assistant Secretary of Defense.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, that nomination is to be passed over.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, the Armed Services Committee is holding hearings on the nomination. I ask that it be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The nomination is passed over.

DIPLOMATIC AND FOREIGN SERVICE

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Sidney H. Browne, of New Jersey, to be a consul general of the United States of America.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On a previous day objection was made to that nomination.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, all objection to this nomination has been withdrawn, as I understand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the nomination?

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, with the understanding that objection has been withdrawn——

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. That is the information I have. If it is not correct, I should not want the nomination confirmed.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, with the understanding that the objection is withdrawn and that the nomination will not be reported to the White House until two more executive sessions have been had, anyway, I raise no objection.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. That is perfectly agreeable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

That completes the calendar.

RECESS

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate now stand in recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Tuesday, December 12, 1950, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATION

Executive nomination confirmed by the Senate December 11 (legislative day of November 27), 1950:

DIPLOMATIC AND FOREIGN SERVICE

Sidney H. Browne, of New Jersey, to be a consul general of the United States of America.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, DECEMBER 11, 1950

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Bernard Braskamp, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou great God, our Father, we have entered upon a new day challenged by tasks which are far beyond our own wisdom and strength and far larger than all party differences. Give us now a clearer vision of high and helpful things that we may do together.

We pray that Thou wilt make us more radiantly sure of Thyself and may we not lose the sense of Thy presence as we face our duties and responsibilities.

Thou knowest how frequently our minds and hearts are assailed with moods of doubt and despair, of futility and frustration. May we never accept the verdict of these low moments or take counsel with our fears.

Help us to affirm more earnestly the great divine certainties. Show us how we may have our life oriented in Thee and find the secret of peace for ourselves and the whole world.

Hear us in the name of the Prince of Peace. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, December 8, 1950, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Woodruff, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had Ordered, That the Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS] be excused as conferee on the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 207) entitled "Joint resolution to continue for a temporary period certain provisions of the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended"; and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER] be appointed in his stead.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 207) entitled "Joint resolution to continue for a temporary period certain provisions of the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended."

RESIGNATION FROM AND APPOINTMENT TO COMMITTEE

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following resignation from a committee:

Hon. SAM RAYBURN,
Speaker, United States House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I hereby respectfully tender my resignation as a member of the Post Office and Civil Service Committee of the House of Representatives, the same to become effective immediately.

With good wishes, I am,
Respectfully,
F. ERTEL CARLYLE.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resignation will be accepted.

There was no objection.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution (H. Res. 879) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That F. ERTEL CARLYLE, of North Carolina, be and he is hereby elected a member of the standing Committee of the House of Representatives on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FOOD PRICES

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, yesterday's newspapers report retail food prices jumped 2 percent in the last 2 weeks of November.

These newspapers quote administration officials as saying they are powerless to do anything about rocketing retail food prices because of a provision in the Defense Production Act which says price ceilings on food must reflect parity prices to farmers.

What attempts have these Government officials made to determine whether prices paid by consumers should reflect parity prices to farmers; whether there is an unconscionable price spread between the farmer-producer and the consumer?

If, as stated, 14 major farm products still are selling below parity, then who is gouging who?

Let it be remembered that Alan Valentine, President Truman's Economic Stabilization Administrator, is also a director of the Freeport Sulphur Co. which recently boosted the price of that war essential commodity 22 percent.

It is about time Government officials quit flimflamming the public and display the courage and intelligence to deal with the facts of life or resign and get out.

DISMANTLING OF GERMAN STEEL PLANTS

Mrs. ST. GEORGE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ST. GEORGE. Mr. Speaker, I have spoken before and I am going to continue to speak, I am afraid, on the question of the dismantling of the steel plants in Germany. I have here a report which has just been published in the New York Times, which can scarcely be accused of being in any way pro-German. They criticize very severely the dismantling of a plant at Salzgitter, where both aluminum and steel have been made for years. This plant produced over 400,000 tons of steel before the end of the war. It is now dismantled, and produces 19,000 tons. Unemployment is waxing heavier and heavier in this region. We, the American taxpayers, are having to feed these people and take care of these unemployed. They are now sending 3,000 of their children on what are known as free holidays into the Russian zone. These children are returning to their embittered parents fully indoctrinated with the Communist philosophy.

CONSTANTINO BRUMIDI

Mrs. BOLTON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include the remarks I made last evening at a dinner given in honor of Dr. Myrtle Cheney Murdock, wife of our distinguished colleague from Arizona [Mr. MURDOCK] whose beautiful book on Constantino Brumidi, artist of the Capitol, called the Michelangelo of the Capitol, goes into the book stores today; and I further ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mrs. BOLTON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, it was my privilege last evening to attend a dinner at the National Democratic Women's Club honoring Dr. Myrtle Cheney Murdock, the talented and very charming wife of the distinguished gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MURDOCK], whose beautiful book on Constantino Brumidi goes into the book stores today.

There were present many distinguished people, including, of course, Senator and Mrs. McFarland, of Arizona; Congressman and Mrs. Patten, and Mrs. Wiley, president of the Chevy Chase Penwomen's League of which Dr. Murdock is a member. The wife of the Italian Ambassador was present in his absence in Italy and spoke delightfully. The wife of the air attaché, Signora Cigerza accompanied Signora Tarchiani.

Fourteen years of consecrated research on Mrs. Murdock's part have resulted in a most beautiful book which preserves for our generation and for generations yet unborn a record of this man who came to this country in the middle of the last century a political refugee, and of his works.

It is to Dr. Murdock that we owe the discovery of the grave of the man whose artistic genius and passionate devotion to the land of his adoption filled our Capitol Building with beauty. You will recall that we appropriated $200 to mark this grave.

Mr. Speaker, there are to be found in this volume unbelievably beautiful reproductions of examples of Brumidi's work which should make us aware that we have taken all too much for granted the beauty on these walls put there by the man who is called the Michelangelo of the Capitol.

Under unanimous consent granted me by this body, I am placing in the Appendix of the RECORD the few words I was privileged to speak last evening.

COMMUNISM IN ILLINOIS

Mr. VELDE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. VELDE. Mr. Speaker, apparently communism is not dead in the great State of Illinois. I hold in my hand a piece of Communist propaganda, issued by the Communist Party of Illinois, at 208 North Wells Street, Chicago, advocating to our young men in the State of Illinois, especially those in our great universities, that they refuse to be drafted and refuse to fight in the present war. This piece of literature says, among other things: "Is it not obvious that American leaders are wasting American lives to support another Chiang Kai-shek?" This literature is being circulated by the Communist Party through the Communist Party at the University of Chicago, and is going to the University of Illinois, Bradley University, Northwestern, and also the Chicago University. In 1949 when the Republicans were in control of the senate in the State of Illinois, an antisubversive committee was set up to investigate communism in the University of Chicago, and other universities and colleges within the State. This committee was headed by Senator Paul W. Broyles. The appropriation allotted to the committee was meager, and while investigators for the Broyles committee had a great deal of previous experience in investigating communism, yet the pressure by the Communist Party and its supporters in the legislature against the investigation made it impossible for this committee to effectively perform its function. On top of that, young Communists from the University of Chicago came to Springfield and picketed the committee during its attempt to ferret out instructors and students who were subversive in our State schools. These pickets were able to obtain the sympathy of a large segment of the Illinois press and radio news commentators. As a result of the tremendous opposition to the investigation, it failed to accomplish its purpose. Upon the convening of the Eighty-second Congress, I shall ask the Un-American Activities Committee to make a complete investigation of communism in the State of Illinois.

Chicago, and its largest institution of higher learning, the University of Chicago, has been a hotbed of communism for many years. It is high time that an objective study and report should be made of communism in the State of Illinois and the extent of its influence in Illinois, as well as throughout the Nation.

HOW TO STOP HIGHER TAXES

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, and Members of Congress: A word to the wise is sufficient. If you want to stop taxing, remember "no giving, little lending, and less spending."

THE LATE HONORABLE CLIFTON ALEXANDER WOODRUM

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BURTON].

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Speaker, on October 6, 1950, the Honorable Clifton Alexander Woodrum departed this life, and the Commonwealth of Virginia and the Nation lost one of its most distinguished public servants. The passing of Clifton Alexander Woodrum brought deep sorrow to his many friends. His readiness at all times to listen to the problems of others and give freely of kindly advice and assistance have endeared him to a host of friends who mourn his loss.

Born in Roanoke, Va., on April 27, 1887, he was the son of Robert H. and Anna T. Woodrum. He was educated in the public schools of Roanoke, studied law at Washington and Lee University, and was licensed to practice in Roanoke on June 19, 1908. In 1917 he was elected Commonwealth's attorney for the city of Roanoke, and served in that capacity until August 1919, when he was unanimously chosen judge of the Hustings court for the city of Roanoke. He resigned from the bench on April 10, 1922, to become a candidate for Congress for the Sixth District of Virginia. He was successful in his candidacy and held his seat in this body until he resigned on September 1, 1945, to become the president of the American Plant Food Council, which position he occupied at the time of his death.

As a capable and illustrious legislator he was a vital force in shaping the trend of legislation in our country, and throughout his long term of service held high place in the respect and admiration of his colleagues. His interest and careful attention to the needs of his people have left an indelible impression on our area of Virginia such as made by few men. His sterling character and pleasing personality attracted to him a host of friends in Washington as well as throughout the State of Virginia.

I have been greatly impressed by the esteem and affection in which he is held in every hamlet of our district.

It is a great privilege and honor to have known Clifton Alexander Woodrum, and to have been one of his many friends. I feel a sincere sense of indebtedness to him for his kindness and assistance to me upon taking the seat in this body for the Sixth District of Virginia which he filled with great distinction for over 22 years.

It is with deep sorrow and a feeling of keen personal loss that I make this tribute to the memory of our distinguished friend, and offer sincere sympathy to his gracious and devoted wife, to his son, Clifton Alexander Woodrum, Jr., and to his daughter, Martha Anne Woodrum.

Mr. Speaker, on December 6, 1950, the board of directors of the American Plant Food Council, Inc., adopted the following in memoriam resolution in honor of the late Clifton A. Woodrum:

Whereas the Honorable Clifton A. Woodrum served with distinction and honor as the first president of the American Plant Food Council, Inc., until his death October 6, 1950; and

Whereas he established himself in the respect and affection of his State and Nation for his courageous and effective championship of the principles upon which our private enterprise system is founded; and

Whereas he rendered notable and effective service in creating a better understanding of the fertilizer industry, its contribution to agriculture and its relation to the national economy as a whole; and

Whereas as an acknowledged leader in Congress for 23 years he was constructive, practical, and farsighted in his approach to national affairs, always consistent with common sense in encouraging private initiative and discouraging regimentation; and

Whereas by his character and devotion to duty, his courage of conviction, his integrity of purpose and his love of mankind, he established himself in the esteem of all who knew him and was singularly effective as a spokesman for business without being unmindful of the well-being of his fellow citizens; and

Whereas his untimely death removes from government and business a leader of influence for a better, stronger Nation, a friend with practical understanding of human weaknesses and appreciation for human fortitude: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the board of directors, in session this 6th day of December 1950, unanimously record their respect, appreciation, and admiration for the late Clifton A. Woodrum, and recognize his effective leadership in the affairs of state and in the field of industry and particularly his manifold contributions in strengthening American business as the best safeguard of American democratic institutions, American initiative, and American strength; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the family of the deceased; that a copy be incorporated in the minutes of this meeting; that a copy be incorporated in the 1951 journal of proceedings of the American Plant Food Council; and that a copy be sent to each of the fertilizer trade magazines.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTON. I yield to the distinguished majority leader.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, the mere mention of the name "Cliff Woodrum" brings to us who knew him memories of a sweet character, a noble-minded gentleman, a great legislator, and a great American.

As I am speaking now I can see him during the years we served together in the House of Representatives, in conversation with him, on the floor of the House, and particularly the able and brilliant manner in which he handled legislation entrusted to his care. I can see him during the dark days preceding World War II, fighting in committees and in the well of the House, for the passage of legislation of vital importance to the preservation of our country. I can see that gray hair of his, that fine noble countenance. It seems he is with us today.

He voluntarily retired from the National House of Representatives, and the distinguished gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BURTON], who has announced his death, succeeded him.

On one occasion I went into his district to speak for him. Mrs. McCormack and I shall never forget the hospitality we received from him and the good people of his district on that occasion.

It is difficult to express in words the thoughts that I have in relation to Cliff Woodrum. In his passing Virginia has lost one of its outstanding sons and the Nation one of its outstanding citizens. I join with my colleagues in expressing to the Virginia delegation our keen regret as well as our sympathy in the passing of our distinguished late friend and colleague, and in particular to Mrs. Woodrum and her daughter and son I extend my heartfelt sympathy.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTON. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, we all heard with a deep sense of loss and regret of the death of our former colleague, Cliff Woodrum, of Roanoke, Va.

I had the honor to serve with Cliff Woodrum in this House for many years. Had he died 10 years ago it would have been a day of solemn mourning for this House and for the Nation. He occupied a most important position when he was a Member of the House. His record is written in numerous debates on vital matters that occurred during his time of service. For a long period he was chairman of the Independent Offices Appropriations Committee.

In any important matters which came up in the House during those years Cliff Woodrum was foremost in their consideration. He has written a fine record here in this House and in the country at large. I am sure we all feel a deep sense of loss and a deep sense of sympathy for his splendid family in the death of this man in the prime of life.

Mr. BURTON. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I wish to express my sense of sympathy in the loss of one of the finest legislators with whom I have associated since I have been in Congress. Cliff Woodrum to me was the ideal Member of the House of Representatives; he was honorable, capable, and most sincere in everything that he did. Could I emulate and follow the example of but one legislator with whom I have ever served, that Member I have said many times, would be Cliff Woodrum. He was my ideal Member of Congress. I feel that we lost a great friend, and the country a great man when Cliff Woodrum was carried to the Great Beyond.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK].

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Virginia has well spoken of the great willingness of Cliff Woodrum to lend assistance and support to those whom he might be able to help. Of that I can bear witness out of personal experience. Back in 1935 when I first came to the House, it fell to my lot to present a matter on the floor of the House that involved tremendous personal interest to certain people in my district. At the conclusion of my remarks a gentleman whom I did not know—I had not been here long enough to know anyone—made a splendid argument in support of the position I had taken, and that position prevailed. Subsequently I learned that the gentleman who had come to my assistance—one of the newest, youngest Members of the House—was Cliff Woodrum, one of the great, outstanding Members of the House. He did not know me, but took it upon himself, out of the greatness of his heart, to help me in what for me, as a complete beginner here, was a rather trying and difficult situation. Subsequent to that time I came to know Cliff Woodrum very, very well.

I think if any one thing could be said of him and stressed more than others it was that while he was great enough and able enough to deal with the tremendous responsibilities that came to him as one of the outstanding men of responsibility in the House, he never lost the common touch; he never lost that great solicitude for the minor things with which he might be able to help. That, I say, was a great tribute.

Cliff Woodrum was one of the most able debaters to whom I have ever listened. While he was strong, with it all he was gentle. I never knew him to take an undue or an unfair advantage of anyone, either because he might have been better informed on the matter before the House or because he might have had a little greater capacity or ability in presentation. That also was a great attribute.

I could say many other things, Mr. Speaker, but I have said only these few things to add my word of sympathy to his family and to wish for them the comfort that may be theirs in the sure knowledge that those of us here who knew Cliff Woodrum join with them in their great sorrow.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HARDY].

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, it was not my privilege to serve in the House with our distinguished former colleague, Cliff Woodrum. However, I did have the pleasure of seeing him and being associated with him occasionally during the past several years. I learned to respect him and to understand the high esteem and the admiration in which he was held by those who knew him intimately.

I join with my colleagues in mourning the passing of Cliff Woodrum and desire to express my sympathy to his family.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. RIVERS].

Mr. RIVERS. Mr. Speaker, our late former colleague, my friend, Cliff Woodrum, has passed away, but he left to us all a record of achievement seldom equaled by men who have chosen the tedious, uncertain, and quite frequently thankless job of public service. Those who had the honor of serving with him in the world's greatest deliberative body, the United States House of Representatives, will never forget this great Virginian.

But for the accident of a name, Cliff Woodrum would have been, when he decided to retire from politics, the chairman of the powerful Committee on Appropriations; I am informed that he and the now distinguished chairman, the Honorable CLARENCE CANNON, came to Congress at the same time and that Mr. CANNON was elected chairman because his name came first on the alphabet of the members, thereby giving him the seniority by which all chairmen are chosen.

Mr. Woodrum never failed to work in the closest harmony and cooperation with his chairman. In the darkest days of World War II I can see Cliff Woodrum now carrying the banner of his committee against uncertain and frequent odds on the floor of the House. Cliff Woodrum's life was replete with acts of helping his fellows. He was always part and parcel of the struggle for his brother's cause. He never stopped long enough to reflect that the uncertain hand would some day beckon him home. He did not take time to rest from the trials of his arduous undertakings. He died with his boots on. He died in the midst of his labor to bring greater blessings to the man who tills the soil. Mr. Speaker, the workingman lost one of his greatest benefactors when Cliff Woodrum "turned again home."

Cliff Woodrum was too busy to realize that—

Such a tide as moving seems asleep,
Too full for sound and foam,
When that which came from out the boundless deep
Turns again home.

Mr. Speaker, truly Cliff Woodrum has embarked on that bourn from which no traveler returns, but his legacy to Americans yet unborn, as well as those now living, will never be tarnished by the troth or everlasting moments of time. Though he has gone down the way of permanent sleep the Nation will be a greater Nation, the world will be a greater world, because he lived and worked for his fellow man.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO].

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, I join with my colleagues in the House and especially the members from Virginia in expressing my feeling of personal loss upon the passing of Cliff Woodrum. When I first came to this body a number of years ago, Cliff Woodrum was one of the first men I met and learned to love and admire. Whenever he took the floor of the House, Members on both sides of the aisle listened in rapt attention to what he had to say. He was one of the most distinguished Members of this body, he was one of the most convincing debaters who ever took the floor of the House of Representatives, he was a capable legislator and a very distinguished man. He was greatly admired and respected by Members on both sides of the aisle. A few years ago I was privileged to deliver an address in his home city of Roanoke, Va. From the people who knew him best and whom he served so ably in this body, one learned the deep faith, confidence, and affection in which he was held by them. Virginia has lost one of her great sons and the Nation one of its illustrious statesmen. I join the delegation from Virginia and the Members of this House in expressing my sense of personal loss and my sympathy to his widow and to his family.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE].

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I shall always count it as one of my great privileges that, when I was assigned to the Appropriations Committee, my first subcommittee was the Committee on Independent Offices, then headed by the distinguished gentleman from Virginia, Cliff Woodrum. I sat at his feet for several years. Everyone who has ever served on that committee will agree with me, I know, when I say it was not only a privilege, it was a great training to be there.

This man was one of the great men of the country in our time. I have always thought it was one of the unfortunate quirks of history not merely that Cliff Woodrum did not have an opportunity to be chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, but also that he did not have the opportunity to become President of the United States. He had the capacity for being a great President.

A few years ago, and some time after he had left the House of Representatives, Mr. Woodrum responded to an invitation to make the annual memorial address for the Elks Lodge in Rapid City, S. Dak., in my district. Accepting that invitation—I never knew quite why—he spent 2 days with us and made a great many friends in my part of the country. They were impressed by his spirit, his personality, and his great capacity. We shall always hold him in reverence. Mr. Speaker, I was tremendously shocked by Cliff Woodrum's death. I am glad to have this opportunity to say a few words in tribute to his memory.

Mr. BURTON. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON].

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, 10 years ago, in describing Cliff Woodrum, I said he was a man that had the stature, the mentality, the personality of a great statesman, and that he was of the stature and timber that really belonged in the White House and would grace the White House. I firmly believed that at that time and I still believe it. In Cliff Woodrum's death the Nation has lost one of the greatest of the great.

Mr. BURTON. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GARY].

Mr. GARY. Mr. Speaker, it was my privilege to know Cliff Woodrum during his entire public career. When he was Commonwealth's attorney in the city of Roanoke, I was counsel for the State tax commission, and as such collaborated with him in the trial of tax cases which arose in his city. When he was elevated to the bench, I tried several important cases before him. I had the pleasure of serving with him in the House and succeeded him as a member of the Appropriations Committee.

Cliff Woodrum devoted the best years of his life to the service of his State and Nation. His conspicuous ability, untiring energy, striking appearance, pleasing personality, and intense patriotism made him one of the outstanding leaders of this body. When he spoke on the floor of the House, he commanded attention and his remarks always carried conviction.

The Commonwealth of Virginia is proud of his record and mourns his untimely death. Today we join with his former colleagues in paying tribute to this truly great Virginia gentleman.

Mr. BURTON. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN].

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I join with the distinguished gentlemen who have just spoken in everything they have said about my friend, Cliff Woodrum.

I met him the first day he came to Congress, and was intimately associated with him during all the years that he was a Member of this House. I do not hesitate to say that Virginia never sent a worthier son to the Congress of the United States than Cliff Woodrum.

We had a clash at one time on the floor of this House, the result of which has always stuck in my mind as a manifestation of that character that distinguished him as one of the outstanding Members of the Congress. In 1938 he was chairman of the Subcommittee on Appropriations. We had up one of those large spending bills. Everyone knew of my intense interest in rural electrification. I offered an amendment for the first $100,000,000 for that purpose. It rather took Mr. Woodrum by surprise, and he opposed it. We finally adopted the amendment by seven votes in the Committee of the Whole, and then adopted it on the floor of the House over his protest.

That fall, after he had gone home, traveled over his district, he came back, and in his attitude manifested that high degree of magnanimity that characterized his entire career. He came to me and said, "John, I want to apologize to you. I was wrong in opposing your rural electrification amendment. Nothing else that has ever been done has inspired so much hope and enthusiasm among the farmers of Virginia as your amendment providing those funds for rural electrification."

I bring this incident to your attention to show you the magnanimity of this magnificent servant, this great man, this great American whose passing we all mourn today.

God grant that he may greet the coming of another age of youth and usefulness in another radiant Easter beyond the gates of night.

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTON. I yield.

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. The curtain of death has been drawn on a noble and illustrious life and the work and career of a great man ends. It was my pleasure to know Mr. Woodrum only a short while but I formed of him an opinion that placed him among the great men of this Nation.

I well remember that, when Mr. Woodrum gave notice that he was going to retire from the legislative halls, our Speaker, SAM RAYBURN, gave one of the finest tributes to Mr. Woodrum I ever heard. He placed him then along with Jefferson, Clay, Calhoun, Webster, and other illustrious statesmen.

The last time I saw Mr. Woodrum he appeared on the stage with me in my district to dedicate the Pompano Air Field. With him was his daughter, who is an aviatrix and piloted him to this airfield.

At that time he made a wonderful speech emphasizing the importance aviation played in World War II and how much more important it would be in any future conflict.

He was held in the highest esteem and admiration by his fellow citizens in Roanoke, as well as the entire State, and this high regard for him found expression in naming the airport at Roanoke after him and in his honor. This airport is now known as the Woodrum Air Field.

He was a grand and renowned American and rendered invaluable services both in private and public life.

In the nobility and immensity of his works, Cliff Woodrum lives on—and truly it can be said of him:

His life was gentle, and the elements
So mix'd in him that nature might stand up
And say to all the world, "This was a man."

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTON. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, Cliff Woodrum was a real Virginian, and better than that could be said of no man.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTON. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Virginia, for I feel irresistibly impelled to say that I join fervently in every tribute that has been paid to Cliff Woodrum.

The great State of Virginia has always been distinguished for the character and devotion of the men who have been sent by her to the Congress. Never has Virginia, or any other State sent as a Member of either House a more able, honorable, diligent, or effective servant than Cliff Woodrum. He not only was the Representative of his district, but also of State and Nation. We are grateful for the proud record the "Mother of Presidents" has made in the sons and daughters she has bred and shared their fruitful public services with the National Government. There never has been a man more worthy of the highest honor than our friend whom we "have loved long since and lost awhile."

Every heart who knew him is bowed in grief and sympathy with the bereaved family.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTON. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. The late Clifton Alexander Woodrum was elected a Member of the House of Representatives for 12 consecutive terms and served with signed ability from March 4, 1923, until his resignation on December 31, 1945, to become president of the American Plant Food Council, Inc., in which capacity he was serving at the time of his death some days ago.

Cliff Woodrum, shortly after he came to the House, became a member of the Committee on Appropriations. He was unusually well informed as to the fiscal affairs of the Government. He was painstaking and thorough in preparing and presenting appropriation bill to the House.

Cliff Woodrum had a good personality. He possessed an especially attractive voice. He was not only an able legislator but he was possessed of unusual executive ability. He presided well and most satisfactorily when called to the chair to preside in the Committee of the Whole, as was often the case. He was one of the most accmplished presiding officers within my recollection.

Cliff Woodrum was an outstanding Member of the House of Representatives. He had a most successful career. There was genuine regret in the House when he resigned. I gladly join in tribute to his services as a Member of the House of Representatives.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Speaker, the expressions so sincerely stated this morning indicate the high esteem and affection in which our former Member, Clifton Woodrum, was held by this body. We of Virginia feel highly honored to have been represented by a man of such high character and a man of his ability.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may extend their remarks at this point on the life and services of the late Honorable Clifton A. Woodrum.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was on objection.

Mr. FUGATE. Mr. Speaker, Clifton A. Woodrum was a native Virginian. He was born in Roanoke, Roanoke County. There he maintained his residence for all of the 63 years he lived. He attended the public schools of Roanoke. He received a degree from the Medical College of Virginia in pharmacy. He graduated from Washington and Lee University in law. He practiced law in Roanoke. He served as Commonwealth Attorney and judge of the Hustings court of Roanoke. He was elected to Congress in 1922. He served 11 consecutive terms, resigning in 1945 to become president of the American Plant Food Council.

While my association with Judge Woodrum was limited, I held him in high esteem. He was able, honest, and courageous. He was a man of sterling character. He possessed a magnetic personality. He had, in a marked degree, the characteristics of a great leader. While charitable with his enemies, he never compromised with wrong.

As a servant of his people and an exponent of progressive democracy, he was an influential Member of the Congress. He served as a member of the Appropriations Committee. Coming to Congress the same year that Chairman CLARENCE CANNON came, he was the ranking member when Mr. CANNON became chairman. His work on the committee was outstanding. His services during the war years were indispensable to the prosecution of the war.

Judge Woodrum was a fluent and convincing speaker. Because of his talents in debate, he wielded great influence. Constituents of mine still talk of great orations he delivered on many occasions in my district. They were masterpieces in rhetoric and logic.

He was a man among men, not a dreamer in the shadows. He was always out in front leading the parade for a better America. Virginia, America, and the world are richer and better for his having lived. His life was a blessing to mankind.

To his family I say, you should be happy, not at his passing, but for the rich heritage that he bequeathed. He was deeply devoted to you.

"THEY BROUGHT THEIR WOUNDED WITH THEM"

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, Sunday morning I heard a part of one of the most thrilling newscasts I have heard in my whole life. It was the news that the marines and the Third Division rescue column had joined up and had made the 30 miles into Hungnam. The short sentences ran something like this:

The marines came out proud. They were tired and hollow-eyed from 12 days of fighting but they brought their dead and wounded with them. They left behind no equipment that would be of benefit to the enemy. They carried with them what they would need for future fighting.

Mr. Speaker, those beleaguered men had made one of the great stands of all time. They had fought in the most severe weather ever encountered by United States troops in combat. They had been outnumbered seven to one. They were surrounded on all sides. They had to replace a bridge under fire. They had to fight their way down a winding, icy road in a narrow canyon with the enemy firing from protected heights and bunkers. They had to knock out road blocks and go through superior numbers. But they came through.

Mr. Speaker, there are many famous words in the history of American valor. I shall not attempt to recount them in this limited time. Many words, some complimentary, a few uncomplimentary, have been spoken and written about the United States Marine Corps—but while there remains such a thing as honor among men, and as long as hearts respond to the dignity of man and value the life of one human soul, let these words be remembered:

The marines came out proud—they brought their wounded with them.

TEMPORARY EXTENSION OF HOUSING AND RENT ACT, 1947

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 207) to continue for a temporary period certain provisions of the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement of the managers on the part of the House be read in lieu of the report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (H. REPT. No. 3182)

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 207) to continue for a temporary period certain provisions of the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the House amendment insert the following: "That section 204 (f) of the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended, is hereby amended by striking out 'December 31, 1950' in each place it occurs therein and inserting in lieu thereof 'March 31, 1951.'

"SEC. 2. Section 204 (j) (3) of the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended, is hereby amended by inserting before the period at the end thereof a colon and the following: 'Provided further, That as used in this Act the term "resolution" shall not be construed to be limited to ordinances or other legislative acts, and any resolution heretofore adopted by any local governing body is hereby declared to be effective for the purpose of this section 204 (j) (3) or section 204 (l) (1), whether or not such resolution was legislative in character; and no suit or action shall be brought under section 205 of this Act, or any other provision of law, on the basis of any administrative decision or the decision of any court that the resolution described in this Act must be a legislative act'."

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 207) to continue for a temporary period certain provisions of the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The Senate joint resolution provided for a 2 months' extension in the automatic decontrol provisions of the Housing and Rent Act of 1947. The House amendment provided for a 3 months' extension of this provision. The conference agreement adopts the provision of the House amendment on this point.

The Senate joint resolution also contained a provision clarifying the provisions of the existing law with respect to the action of local governing bodies in removing and continuing rent control. A recent decision of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit interpreted the provisions relating to decontrol by local bodies to mean that where under local law a different procedure is prescribed for legislative action by the local governing body than that prescribed for other action, a decontrol resolution must be adopted in accordance with the procedure prescribed for legislative action. The amendment is designed to make it clear that, for the purpose of removing rent controls or continuing them, resolutions heretofore or hereafter adopted which comply in all other respects with applicable local law are valid even though the procedure prescribed for legislative action was not followed. The conference agreement adopts the provision of the Senate joint resolution on this point.

Managers on the Part of the House.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, this is the conference report on the act extending rent control. It is a unanimous report of the conferees.

The amendment of the Senate provided that the act of the governing body of the municipality or local subdivision was not limited to ordinances or other legislative acts, and any resolution heretofore adopted by any local governing body is declared to be effective. This applied not only from the effective date of the act but was retroactive and makes action decontrolling the cities valid if done in conformity with the provisions of this act. The House concurred in this amendment.

The Senate bill provided that the Rent Control Act shall be effective until February 28, 1951; the House bill provided an extension of 90 days, or 3 months, to March 31 of next year. The Senate receded and concurred in the House amendment. So, under the act rent control is extended until March 31 of next year. The House conferees felt that it was essential that the act be extended for 90 days in order that it might be sufficiently considered by the House. We all know that a new Congress takes a long time to organize; there will be vacancies to be filled on the Ways and Means Committee, and, after those vacancies are filled, the Ways and Means Committee will proceed to fill vacancies on various committees. Those committees cannot function until they have been reported to the House and the action of the Ways and Means Committee has been confirmed by this body. We felt therefore that it was absolutely essential that the extension should continue for 3 months in order that proper consideration might be given to this question of the continuation of rent control.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPENCE. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. The same thing, of course, applies to our Republican friends' action on the part of the Republican committee on committees in relation to their members.

Mr. SPENCE. The gentleman is correct.

It was absolutely essential, and we felt that we made a very good agreement in this respect. We accepted the Senate amendment. The conferees on the part of the Senate in turn accepted the House amendment. We think this is substantially the bill as passed by the House, notwithstanding the agreement to the Senate amendment.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPENCE. I yield.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. It will also give an opportunity to about 40 legislatures in this country to consider rent-control legislation, and the States will also be given additional time, and the communities likewise, who want to comply or act under the law.

Mr. SPENCE. That is true, and the act as extended continues every right to municipalities to extend the act until June 30, 1951, if they desire to do so, or to discontinue rent control by a resolution of the governing body. Some cities have taken action that probably this might affect. The city of Los Angeles, which may be decontrolled by the passage of this amendment, can repeal the ordinances it has passed which have not yet become effective by reason of court action, and has it within its power to continue rent control in that city if it so desires. We have left it up to the cities; we have placed it back with local self-government, just where it should be.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MULTER].

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Speaker, I have no doubt that the conferees have done the best job they could and that they brought in a report which represents their best thinking on the subject. I wish, however, to direct the attention of the membership to what we do if we adopt this conference report. We override a decision of the court of appeals so that the people in the far West, particularly the people in the city of Los Angeles, will be deprived by their right to review anything that their local governing body has done or may do. In other words, as you probably know, if the local governing body of most localities throughout the West adopt a resolution of a legislative character or setting up policy, as these rent laws do, the people have a right within 30 days to demand a referendum and then determine for themselves whether that should be the law or not.

Under the provision which is written into the bill at this time you deprive those people of that right. You will now permit any local council to deprive the people in the community of the right to a referendum and to review what their city council or local governing body may do. If we agree to this conference report we are going to validate the decontrol action of the City Council of Los Angeles, and possibly of other places, contrary to the will of their people who seek to pass upon it by referendum.

Mr. McDONOUGH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MULTER. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. McDONOUGH. Does the gentleman oppose this conference report?

Mr. MULTER. I am constrained to oppose the conference report because of that provision which was defeated on the floor of the House last week. We had this identical provision submitted to us by way of amendment last week and the House rejected it. It is now put into the bill by the conference report.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MULTER. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. SPENCE. Does the gentleman think it is desirable that we get the additional 30 days for consideration by the House?

Mr. MULTER. I am quite in agreement it is important that we have 90 days rather than 60 days.

Mr. SPENCE. Does not the gentleman think that was very important?

Mr. MULTER. I heartily agree it is of the utmost importance.

Mr. SPENCE. The only way we could get it was to do a little trading with the Senate.

Mr. MULTER. I appreciate that. I know the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency and the other conferees did the very best they could. I still feel, however, that we have a very, very bad provision in this bill. The least we should do is alert the people of those communities so that they can get busy at once and, if necessary, recall their council members or the members of their local boards or otherwise try to do their will and get the control they need. When this bill is signed by the President, those places will be decontrolled and will not again be controlled unless we change existing law next year.

Mr. McDONOUGH. The gentleman's position is he is opposed to the extension of rent control because of the particular amendment that was added by the Senate which does not provide for the 30 days for any referendum covering a city council's legislative act?

Mr. MULTER. I am in favor of extending rent control until we can bring in here a bill which will extend rent control where it is needed, if it is needed.

Mr. McDONOUGH. But the gentleman opposes this conference report?

Mr. MULTER. I am opposed to this provision.

Mr. McDONOUGH. Then the gentleman is opposing extension of rent control?

Mr. MULTER. I am not opposing extension of rent control. I am directing your attention to the fact that by this provision you are depriving your constituents of the right to a referendum on a question of the utmost importance to them.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT].

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, it will be recalled that I was very much opposed to this bill. I may have a peculiar idea of the duties of conferees; however, I signed the conference report under the belief that I was representing the House of Representatives and was morally bound to see that the position of the House was presented to the conference and that everything was done to protect the House provisions of the bill, although I am still opposed personally to the 90-day extension. That matter has now been adjudicated so that it becomes simply a question, on the one hand, whether the automatic decontrols should be continued for 60 or 90 days after December 31, 1950. The Senate had a provision for 60 days and we had a provision for 90 days. But, on the other hand, I thought that the controlling thing which bothered us more than anything else was the provision of law which authorized a municipality to decontrol by resolution. It was very clearly the intent of the Congress when it wrote the 1950 Rent Control Act that a governing body of a municipality might decontrol or continue control by passing a simple resolution. We provided in that act that they might decontrol by passing a resolution or by a referendum. Now the governing body chose the method of decontrol. It could either pass a resolution or it could provide for a referendum as to whether there would be decontrol. In some eight-hundred-odd cases the governing body adopted a resolution which was honored by the Expediter and action was taken to decontrol those areas in which a resolution was adopted.

The matter went to the circuit court of appeals here in the District of Columbia and the circuit court of appeals picked out of clear air this issue as to whether we did not mean "ordinance" when we said "resolution." The matter had not been presented in any of the briefs submitted by either side of the controversy in the case. As I understand, the court on its own initiative framed the issue on whether we did not mean that a resolution included an ordinance. In other words, we had provided, and it was to be the intention to provide for administrative action only by the passage of a simple resolution, but the circuit court of appeals said that we intended that the resolution should be a legislative act which would have the full force and effect of an ordinance. So the Senate clarified that language by the provisions which are contained in the report.

Mr. McDONOUGH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. McDONOUGH. In order to remove any doubts in the matter I would like to ask the gentleman this question, whether the amendment added in the Senate will validate the resolutions that have been passed by some twelve hundred cities and counties in the United States, and especially in the one passed in the city of Los Angeles, and remove the necessity of the Supreme Court acting further on the question that was presented to them on an appeal from the Circuit Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I would assume that because of the action now being taken by the Congress in this respect that the matter now before the Supreme Court in the case of the City of Los Angeles against Tighe Woods, and others, has been completely settled and that there is nothing before the Supreme Court for adjudication in that case. But, notwithstanding the decision of the Supreme Court in that case, the language that we have written into the law in the so-called Cain amendment provides that the term "resolution" as used in the act shall not be construed to be limited to ordinances or other legislative acts. It means, therefore, that the resolution referred to in the act is something different than an ordinance or other legislative acts. Then the language goes on to say: "Whether or not such resolution was legislative in character" and, further, that "no suit or action shall be brought under section 205 of the act or any other provision of law on the basis of any administrative decision or the decision of any court that the resolution described in this act must be a legislative act." So, notwithstanding any decision of the Supreme Court or the circuit court of appeals, that stands.

We have provided that the term "resolution" does not mean a legislative act. In direct answer to the gentleman's question, I will say that under the terms of this amendment it is our intention to validate, and the language actually does validate, every resolution which has been passed by any governing body decontrolling or which might be passed by any Government body continuing controls, including the Los Angeles case.

Mr. McDONOUGH. Is it the gentleman's opinion that by the adoption of this conference report it is mandatory for Mr. Tighe Woods to sign the resolution adopted by the City Council of Los Angeles?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Absolutely. That was our intention to begin with. We seek to clarify his position in this matter. Hereafter, as on all of these occasions in the past, this will be considered a mandate to Mr. Woods that he must issue an order upon the passage of a resolution by the governing body of the city, notwithstanding any position which he might take to the contrary in respect to the merits or equities or facts in the case.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SEPARATION OF SUBSIDY FROM AIR-MAIL PAY

Mr. BECKWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 9184) to provide for the separation of subsidy from air-mail pay, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 9184, with Mr. BONNER in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. When the Committee rose on Wednesday there was pending the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. O'HARA].

Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota: On page 3, strike out subparagraph (2), lines 4 to 11, inclusive.

Mr. BECKWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I offer a perfecting amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BECKWORTH to the text sought to be stricken by the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. O'HARA]: On page 3, line 5, strike out beginning with the word "shall" down through the period in line 11 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "shall in no event exceed the reasonable and necessary cost to the air carrier, under honest, economical, and efficient management, of the mail transportation services rendered or to be rendered, including a fair return."

Mr. BECKWORTH. Mr. Chairman, when the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce brought before the House last Wednesday this legislation, all of us in the beginning stated the legislation was controversial, that there was disagreement with reference to its various provisions. We worked rather diligently, some of you are aware, Wednesday here in the Commitee, and the Committee rose late in the day. After that occurred it became the objective of those who are interested in finding a common meeting ground in regard to the provisions of this bill to hold additional meetings to see what we could work out which might be more acceptable to more of the Members who wanted to see something done. Accordingly we met from about 9:30 last Thursday morning until about 6 o'clock. Incidentally, we had with us representatives of the CAB, of the Post Office Department, and one member of the Hoover Commission when the Commission was in being, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN].

I can sincerely say to the members of the committee here assembled that a great effort was made to narrow the area of disagreement in regard to this important piece of legislation.

We agreed on some seven amendments. The question came up as to whether or not any Member is bound by the amendments. Of course, it has always been my contention that you do not bind Members of Congress very successfully. In the main each Member is a free agent and says what he wants to say and takes the action which he desires to take at any given moment. But I can say that as of the time we left that meeting Thursday, about 6 o'clock, there was no apparent overt disagreement on the part of any person. In my opinion we came near to getting together with reference to the seven amendments which will be offered here today to the Heselton bill. This, of course, does not mean each individual fully agrees with all which was done. The amendment I have just offered, which is one of the seven amendments, retains the cost standard which several of us said the other day was important to retain. It is a good anchor. It is the beginning, you might say, of the fundamental problem of doing this job of work well. May I say that almost to a word it is the language which the Civil Aeronautics Board wanted from the beginning. Although the language is not quite so specific as was the language we originally had in the Heselton bill, it definitely is the opinion of the authorities of the CAB that it constitutes a strong retention of the cost standard, a standard which the authorities of the CAB contended from the beginning is necessary to have in the legislation if the job is to be done well and efficiently.

As I said a moment ago it is hoped by each of us, and incidentally there were several members of the transportation subcommittee who attended the meeting all day long, and several others at least, two, who are not members of the transportation subcommittee; as I say it is hoped that we can work out this bill in such a way as to get a bill this session; yes, today. It is believed that the seven amendments to which I have referred do the job best as of this time.

It is my sincere hope that the Members of the Committee will go along with us in our effort to bring about the adoption of these seven amendments, including the one I have just offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Texas may proceed for two additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BECKWORTH. I yield.

Mr. HARRIS. Is it not a fact that the interested Members here on the floor, last Wednesday, when this matter was brought before the committee, met with the members of the Subcommittee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce for the period referred to, and resolved these differences to the point that it was believed that a bill we would pass today should be passed with these amendments adopted, agreed to, virtually, by the Members who participated in this conference, and we are bringing it to the House membership now with the explanation that this does what most of us want it to do, to bring about a compromise of the issues that were involved in the debate last week.

Mr. BECKWORTH. That is true. The bill is not exactly what each person who was there would like to see if he were writing his own bill, but it is about the best we can get in an effort to see that a bill is written, and at the same time undertake to get substantially that which each interested Member wanted.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BECKWORTH] has again expired.

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BECKWORTH] who has just spoken, has given you something of the picture of our attempt to work out the differences and difficulties which exist in this bill.

This amendment, which has been offered by the gentleman from Texas as a perfecting amendment to my amendment to strike out this language, as he has stated, and it is agreed to by those of us who sat in on the conference on these differences. While it is not completely satisfactory to me, I am supporting the amendment, and suggest that it be adopted in lieu of my amendment to strike out the language of the bill. That is in accordance with the labor and the effort put forth and the understanding had.

Permit me to say that in my minority report, which was filed in opposition to this bill, this is one of the things which caused me great concern. I am assuming that those who were in on the conference will also support the other six amendments which the gentleman has indicated would be offered.

Let me say to you frankly, I feel that the transportation of mail should be governed by the same rates and the same language, across the board, not only for air but for rail and for vessels that are carrying mail in sea commerce. My theory on that is that it is a fair principle to have the cost element the same in all of those. We are now setting up new language and a new measuring stick which will apply only to air. How it will work out and whether it will work out fairly to the taxpayers, whether it will work out fairly to the carriers, I do not know and I do not think anyone could say. However, it illustrates the difficulty of the problem that is involved in this legislation and in matters pertaining to interstate and foreign commerce in the carriage of mail, and should have future study and consideration.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. I yield.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. The gentleman has partly answered the question I was going to ask, which was that if all of the seven amendments are adopted, then the bill would be less objectionable to him?

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. That is correct. It is improved some, but I wish it might be further improved.

Let me say primarily from the viewpoint of the taxpayer and the Post Office Department, the ones who pay the bill, that I think in dealing with this subject we must approach it fairly, not only to the taxpayers in what we pay out for the carrying of the mail, the payment of subsidies as well, but also that it should be fair to the various transportation systems. But I do want to repeat that the manner in which we have worked out these differences is a compromise, and I think not only should this amendment be adopted but that the other amendments as they are offered should be adopted and made a part of this bill.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. I yield.

Mr. HALLECK. As the gentleman knows, for many years I was a member of the great Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. And a very able member.

Mr. HALLECK. It has been my observation through my years of service on that committee that it has always been the aim and purpose of the committee to bring legislation to the floor on which the committee was in substantial agreement as far as anyone could work it out, recognizing the necessities of compromise to make it fair and equitable. I want to commend the gentleman and the members on both sides of the committee who worked along in his group for the effort they have made to compromise and work out this legislation.

The bill as originally introduced provided that there should be a definite separation of subsidy from the regular mail-carrying charge. While I felt there were some serious defects in the legislation as originally reported and while I think the compromise now reached may not perhaps be perfect, yet I think it is a fair compromise and that it is a credit to those who worked it out.

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. Let me say that from the start I have completely subscribed to the theory that there should be a separation of air mail pay from subsidy. I believe that a transportation charge is one thing but that a subsidy is quite another, and that they should be separated completely.

Let me say to my colleague, also, that as he knows our committee has, in all the years I have served on it—and I am sure all the years he has served on the committee—not decided legislative matter on political issues. While there have been times when there were considerable differences in the committee, there were differences of opinion as to the merits of the legislation, never on political grounds; and that completely applies to this legislation; there has been a cross section of opinion both ways in the committee, but a cross section based on an honest difference of opinion and not on a political division in any sense of the word.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, the changes made in the bill over the week end number five or six.

There is one amendment made on page 3 on the important subsection dealing with cost. Language was put in that the CAB desired. I believe it is as effective as the previous language and I think it was a good compromise.

Another amendment deals with the time in which these sections shall be put into effect. It went perhaps farther than I would have wanted, but it is not unreasonable.

On page 8 there were several changes made which I do not think are basic and which we were glad to accept.

There are two sections, however, that were discussed and amended that I believe are basic to this bill. This House, however, has a great deal to do in the closing days of this session and I therefore will not fight against the amendments; perhaps they can be perfected in the Senate, or if the bill goes over until next year they can then be discussed. One is on page 6 and deals with the allocation of air-carrier receipts and expenditures. In the original language we stated that in order to determine what the cost of carrying air mail was the air carriers would have to break down their cost into four items: Transportation of passengers and their baggage, transportation of freight, transportation of express, and transportation of mail.

The point was made that there were other categories and it was suggested by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN], who was a member of the Hoover Commission, that we should not name definite categories. It was felt further by gentlemen representing the CAB that in order to determine the cost of carrying the mail these things would have to be done and there was no necessity in writing the amount. The change went a great deal further than it should have, and I think a mistake has been made.

There was another unfortunate change made. It is basic and a correction should be made if this bill goes to the Senate. Under the bill as we originally planned it, we stated that subsidies should be available to all those planes that have a certificate of operation. During the conference it was suggested that subsidies should be given only to those planes which had a certificate to carry airmail.

Now you give subsidies for three reasons: First, to help develop the airline industry; second, to help the Nation's commerce; and third, to help the Nation's defense. If we give subsidies only to those who happen to have a certificate to carry airmail, we deny subsidies to many other lines that do not carry mail, but who are important to the national defense. For instance, the Slick Airline in Texas has a large fleet of cargo carriers. If they were made eligible for a subsidy, perhaps they could perfect those cargo carriers so that if there were a national emergency they could be used to carry military personnel or cargo.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HINSHAW. I know the gentleman recognizes that the purpose of this bill is to separate airmail compensation from subsidies. Of course, in connection with these other carriers, while it may or may not be advisable to subsidize them, there is no question of any separation of subsidy because they receive no mail.

Mr. KENNEDY. Is it true that a subsidy is given not only for carrying mail but for national defense and to develop the commerce of the Nation? Because of national defense, should not other planes besides those that happen to have certificates to carry mail be included?

Mr. HINSHAW. That is a question which the committee has not considered as yet. This bill is for the purpose of separating compensation for carrying airmail from subsidies. Of course, that subject has not been considered by the committee and hence should not be contained in this bill.

Mr. KENNEDY. It seems to me as long as subsidies are based partly on defense, you should not give the subsidy to only those who have a mail contract.

Mr. HINSHAW. If the gentleman desires to introduce a bill which relates to the nonscheduled and nonairmail carrying carriers, of which there are something like 2,400, I am sure the committee will be interested in its consideration.

Mr. KENNEDY. The gentleman is wrong. Only 12 new airlines would be eligible.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. HESELTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that I opposed the original amendment last Wednesday, I should say for the purpose of the RECORD that this new amendment, in my opinion, is far more satisfactory. It does retain in the bill the essential cost element which is basic to any satisfactory separation.

There are, as others have said, five additional amendments. It is not my purpose to discuss each of them; however, I would like to join with my colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY] in what he has said about the probable necessity sometime in the immediate future for considering the wisdom of including other carriers than those who are authorized by certificate to transport mail. We all know that the armed services, particularly the Air Force, is very much concerned about a sound transport system. Certainly we, by our action, do not want to take any step that will be harmful in that respect.

The sixth amendment, which strikes out all of subsection 3 on page 6, is one which I could not personally recommend. However, it is true that in existing law the CAB does have the power to make these allocations. That being true, although they have not done it, and because I have been assured that Mr. Rentzel has said that he believes in separation and is going to see that it is done, and particularly because I realize the practical situation which confronts us here this afternoon, I shall not oppose it. Even without that section this is a bill which in my opinion separates the airmail pay and does it on a cost basis. I think this is so because I cannot conceive of the carriers being able to comply with any order that the CAB issues unless they do allocate their receipts and their expenditures into at least four categories, and those are the four categories that are eliminated by this amendment which will be offered. From a practical point of view I think the suggestion made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN] who was a member of the Hoover Commission, was far preferable to striking this entire section, but I will prefer that he speak for himself in terms of that suggestion.

On the whole, I think everyone who has been trying to work this very difficult and technical problem out is entitled to congratulations for what they have tried to do. I know that the gentleman from New York [Mr. ROONEY] has his doubts about one section. I share those doubts. In the over-all my feeling is definitely this: We have a chance this afternoon to pass a bill which we all agree upon in principle. It will take a long step toward separation. We should have separation by March 31, 1952. Congress will be in session between now and that time. If some of the things we are doing this afternoon are mistakes, I am sure that the committee will come back here and recommend additional legislation.

Consequently, Mr. Chairman, I am not going to oppose the amendments, and I shall support the bill this afternoon.

I do want to say for the RECORD that my colleague the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY] well merits our thanks and appreciation. He introduced the first comprehensive airmail subsidy separation bill, H. R. 2908, on February 21, 1949, the day the Hoover Commission reported its post-office recommendations to Congress. He testified before our committee and has cooperated fully with us in this exceedingly difficult task of bringing to you an amendment upon which we would join in recommending favorable action. Although it is true that neither he nor I can recommend certain of the amendments and voted against them while the effort was being made to work out the best possible compromise, it must be a source of real satisfaction to him to have so much of the vitally important points of his original suggestions now in this bill before us.

I can and do say that with this bill passed we are in an excellent position to see to it that the details are worked out and that there is no reason why we should not have the actual costs of carrying the air mail in the open by March 31, 1952. Then only those subsidies which can be justified as required for the commerce of the United States, the postal service, and the national defense bill be paid.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, when H. R. 9184 was before the House last week and we had before us a substitute bill, I made the suggestion that the measure be sent to, or taken back by, the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce for further consideration in an endeavor to work out some sort of an agreed bill that would carry out the recommendations of the Hoover Commission. That action was taken by the House, with the consent of the Members of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce in charge of the bill and the Democratic and Republican leadership of the House. Later the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce was courteous enough to extend me an invitation to appear before it, and to permit me to present some suggested amendments for consideration of the committee. Those suggested amendments, I should state, had been prepared by a number of us who had been interested in the Hoover Commission's work.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HINSHAW. I would like to say on behalf of the group that met that the suggestions made by the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN] were most valuable in helping us get together.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I appreciate your statement very much.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. HARRIS. I should like to concur in the statement just made by the gentleman from California [Mr. HINSHAW]. The gentleman who is now speaking, Mr. BROWN of Ohio, was a Member of our committee for a number of years, a very active one at the time he was on the committee, and familiar with some of the problems we have. Out of that experience he has given to us very valuable information and has helped the committee get together and come together and resolve the issues as we have presented them here today. We express our appreciation to the gentleman.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I thank the gentleman from Arkansas. The Interstate Commerce Committee, in its wisdom, did accept some of those amendments, at least in meaning and in content, if not in exact words, and has brought before the House an amended bill which has been agreed to by all the members of that committee.

I find the bill as amended, is in line with the Hoover Commission's recommendations, and will accomplish the purpose of those recommendations.

I can find just one thing about the bill with which I might personally differ and about which the Hoover Commission, as such, might have something to say. I refer to page 6. As mentioned by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HESELTON] we had suggested a portion of section 3 be retained in the new bill, down to the word "rendered" in line 22, to have the Civil Aeronautics Board, as a matter of instruction and policy, prescribe standards for keeping airline accounts and records. However, I understand the committee has been assured by the spokesman for and members of the Civil Aeronautics Board that such statutory language is entirely unnecessary, inasmuch as the Board now has that authority under present law. In other words, that there is no need for repeating in this act the authority the Board already has under present law, and that the Civil Aeronautics Board will do exactly that which would be required if this section were incorporated in the bill now before us.

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. Permit me to say that the Civil Aeronautics Act is much more broad and helpful to them than the language contained in the bill.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I hope that is right. I believe we discussed in your committee the fact that the bill as originally brought to the House did restrict the Board to a certain extent. The amendments I have suggested, and which were prepared by our group, would have eliminated some of those restrictions, and would have left the authority with the Board practically the same as the Board contends it now has.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I understand further that your committee does have statements from the Civil Aeronautics Board, and pledges or promises, whatever you might wish to call them, that the Board will follow faithfully the intent and purpose of the proposed amendment, and your committee therefore feels it is not necessary to write the amendment into the law. That being the case, and with that understanding, and notwithstanding the previous recommendation of those who worked on the Hoover Commission, I feel that we should accept this bill in order, as members of the committee have pointed out, that we may get action at this session of Congress. I believe the measure the committee has reported out and brought here is one all of us can accept and support, to the great benefit of all concerned, especially the taxpaying public.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. HARRIS. Personally I am glad to see the gentleman express himself on these various proposals, particularly the amendment to which he is addressing himself now. I appreciate the fact that he is willing to accept the committee action and go along. I believe it would be more advantageous to have it in this form than in the language the gentleman discussed with us a few days ago.

I might say to the gentleman further, to clarify this issue in his own mind, the Big Four case, which is being considered now, is having brought into it this particular point as an issue. The counsel to the Board advised us that they are in this particular and specific case putting into effect these various categories to which the gentleman is referring at this time.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I thank the gentleman.

In closing, may I reiterate that I believe this bill is in such shape each and every one of us can support it without any reservations.

May I also compliment the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce for having met a rather difficult problem ably and fairly, and very well. All the members of that committee are entitled to great commendation for having worked so diligently on this particular legislation, have compromised their differences and come up with what I believe is a good bill.

I hope it will receive the unanimous vote of this body.

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, in view of my statement and the conference which was had, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment, and accept the substitute in lieu thereof.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROONEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, for a number of years past, and previous to the formation of the so-called Hoover Commission, I have been very much interested in the subject of separation of air-mail pay from subsidy monies. The action of the committee today in bringing out the bill entitled "Separation of subsidy from air-mail pay" as now amended and weakened is at least a step in the right direction. I am not as hopeful as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN], that we are going to get this legislation enacted by both bodies during the present Congress. I feel it is highly important, however, that this House should right now demonstrate its intention and its eagerness that the taxpayer should know exactly how much of his tax dollar is being paid the airlines for carrying his mail, and how much is in the form of outright subsidy.

In my humble estimation, as a member of the Committee on Appropriations and as chairman of the subcommittee handling funds for the Civil Aeronautics Board, the airlines have been permitted to delay this needed reform for entirely too long. But be that as it may, I am going to go along on the compromise which was arrived at by the members of this committee on Thursday last after many, many hours of discussion. There are a number of matters which have been added to and deleted from the bill by way of amendments which will now be offered here on the floor by the committee with which I could not at all agree.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROONEY. I yield.

Mr. HARRIS. The gentleman from New York [Mr. ROONEY] has manifested great interest in this problem for some time. The gentleman from New York joined in the conferences we had on this and helped to work out these differences so that we are able to come before the Membership of the House as we are today with these different points which have been at issue resolved.

Mr. ROONEY. I thank the gentleman. Of course, my ideas did not prevail. I was outvoted on every issue except insertion of UPU, rates.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROONEY. I yield.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I commend the gentleman from New York for the position he has taken. I believe that he has had the same fears about this measure as I have had and expressed. However, I feel rather certain if the Civil Aeronautics Board will do that which they have pledged to the committee they will do, and that is put in this accounting system, they can and will properly separate and show what is paid for mail transportation and what is paid for subsidy and thus the whole purpose of the Hoover Commission recommendation will be accomplished.

Mr. ROONEY. I agree with the distinguished gentleman from Ohio to that extent, but I go a bit further. For instance, in this bill as amended there is no provision for allocation of costs. I think that such allocation was a vital part of the need for the original bill. I felt that the original bill introduced by the distinguished gentlemen from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY and Mr. HESELTON] was a good bill which did not require amendment and that to take out the allocation of costs between the four categories mentioned on page 6 of the bill, in my humble estimation is not the thing to do.

I also felt and so stated in the conference that the Postmaster General should be required to appear as a party at every hearing before the Civil Aeronautics Board and should in behalf of the public be required to submit a statement of the rates recommended by him as being fair and reasonable for delivery of the mail.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I understand the Postmaster has that authority.

Mr. ROONEY. The law does not now require him to do so. However, all legislation is the result of compromise, and feeling that it is best to get the House of Representatives of this closing Eighty-first Congress on record as favoring the general principle that air-mail pay and subsidy money should and must be separated, I shall go along.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. We appreciate it very much. I also favored the four categories, originally, but the Civil Aeronautics Board pointed out to me that naming four categories would restrict, and that in making this division they might want to divide it into more than four categories.

Mr. ROONEY. When you serve for a number of years as a member of the Committee on Appropriations you do not pay too much attention to what many of these agencies tell you. They never like to assume additional responsibility but delight in the receipt of greater power.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I agree fully with that statement of the gentleman also, but I do not limit it to just serving on the Committee of Appropriations where you learn that. You learn it from serving on other committees as well. But I believe there is something to the argument that when you write into the law a restriction of four categories you bar other categories. You seemingly set up only four instead of possibly others.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. ROONEY] has again expired.

Mr. ROONEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. HESELTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROONEY. I yield.

Mr. HESELTON. I agree with what the gentleman has said about eliminating the duty of the Postmaster General to recommend on all rates, but will not the gentleman agree with me that there is another factor, aside from the reasons so ably stated by him, that we have the Civil Aeronautics Board in a quasi-judicial position, you have the airlines coming in, with able counsel and able accountants, thoroughly presenting their case; but there is one great group of people who would not be represented unless the Postmaster General did present the public's case. I hope the Postmaster General will accept that responsibility if he has that power now.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. ROONEY] has again expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BECKWORTH].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HINSHAW:

Page 3, line 19, strike out "by an air carrier", and on page 3, line 21, strike out "include a statement of" and insert in lieu thereof "state and support in detail."

And on page 3, line 25, and page 4, line 1, strike out "(A) a statement of the rates recommended by him as being fair and reasonable, and (B)."

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, this is one of the amendments which has been agreed to by the group that has been described. This amendment removes the requirement that the Postmaster General state the rates which he considers fair and reasonable in every case where a petition is filed for the fixing or changing of rates. The Post Office Department has stated that to require it to suggest a rate in all cases would be to require it to build up a staff of rate experts which would unnecessarily duplicate the staff of the Civil Aeronautics Board. When the Postmaster General is the petitioner, however, he still would be required to state and support the rates he recommends.

There is no argument against this amendment, and I ask for a vote.

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I have asked for this time, not with any thought of opposing the amendment that has been offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. HINSHAW], but to emphasize the desire upon the part of the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce that his amendment and the others that have been adopted by the subcommittee will be adopted by the House.

In this connection I would like to further emphasize to the Members of the House that notwithstanding there has been some controversy between the members of the committee with respect to certain language in the bill, there has never been any controversy or difference of opinion between them with respect to the approval of fundamental purpose of this bill. I believe the membership of the House is interested in the fundamental purpose of the bill; namely, to separate air-mail compensation from subsidy in order that there may be a clear understanding with respect to what is paid for each.

The amendments that are offered as a result of the further study given to controversial questions have been arrived at as a result of a very sincere effort on the part of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and those interested Members of the House who have met with it. These amendments do not in any way change the underlying purpose of the bill, which, as I have stated, is to separate air-mail pay and subsidy. The controversy, based upon differing viewpoints, has arisen entirely through an effort to adopt proper language with reference to the formula of cost. The language of the amendments which have been agreed upon, as has been said already, have not in each case met entirely the views of each individual; however, the amendments that are presented to you do represent compromise language arrived at after very serious consideration of all the differing viewpoints that have been expressed.

The fundamental purpose has been that whatever formula was used or by whatever words it was expressed, it was intended that there should be a fair and reasonable rate allowed for carrying mail and whatever might be paid as a subsidy was to be separately considered.

Undoubtedly there will be some questions to arise in the future that may require further consideration by the committee, but at the present moment with the light the committee has and after the fullest discussion and consideration of the differing viewpoints, this bill as amended has been recommended to the House with the thought that it will maintain the basic principle and purpose of the bill. I believe that it is the basic principle of separation that the average Member of the House is interested in, and I trust the House will have confidence in the recommendations of the committee at this time, and, be assured of the intention of the committee to make certain that as experience comes to us in the future, that it will give consideration to any changes that may seem necessary to make the law just and equitable from the standpoint of the airlines and the taxpayers as well.

It is the desire of the committee that this bill be adopted at this session of the Congress. I think it will be a great achievement for this House and the Congress to adopt this legislation which comes to us as a result of the study that has been made by the Hoover Commission.

In addition to the recommendation of the Hoover Commission there have been many other studies that have been made, including studies by the Brookings Institute. All of these studies have resulted in the same conclusion, namely, that there should be a separation between air-mail compensation and subsidies. This bill will accomplish that very thing, and I am hopeful that the House will have confidence in what the committee has done in this respect and that it will give its approval to the legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HARRIS: Page 4, line 12, strike out "a certificated air carrier" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "any air carrier holding a certificate authorizing the transportation of mail by aircraft."

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Chairman, obviously the work of the members of the subcommittee, together with the able assistance of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. ROONEY] was very helpful and has brought forth some good results. I want to commend the chairman of our committee, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BECKWORTH], and the other members of the committee for the very fine, able, and constructive manner, as well as for the conscientious and determined efforts of coming together and to work out some of these points at issue in a manner acceptable to us under the circumstances.

When I offered the substitute last week it will be recalled there were some four or five specific objections I had to the bill reported by the committee. One was that it extended subsidies to all certificated carriers. Another was the cost-standard provision contained in the bill reported by the committee. Another was the cost allocation of the various categories of service which would have brought about a complete change in bookkeeping and a complete revision in the accounting system of the air carriers and would make it difficult for the Civil Aeronautics Board to administer.

Then there was a further objection I had with reference to the international carriers and the complications that would result in connection with the proposed bill. We have tried to resolve these points of difference. We have done a fairly substantial job, in my opinion. As the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BECKWORTH] said a moment ago, none of us are 100 percent satisfied, but we do feel that in the give-and-take proposition as good a job as could be hoped for has been accomplished. Personally, I am not satisfied at all with the effects or the results, so far as the international carriers' situation is concerned. I am not satisfied altogether about what the result may be in connection with the UPU rates and their effect on our carriers and just what their situation may be competitively with other international or foreign air carriers. Nevertheless, this is a part of the work we did as we come together and bring it to you in a manner that we believe will be for the best interest.

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRIS. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. May I say to the gentleman from Arkansas that I fully subscribe to what he has just said. I confess that on the subject of the international carriage of mail and UPU rates my own mind is somewhat in a state of confusion. I hear one view of some in the Post Office Department, another by the CAB, and still another by representatives of the airlines. I have not been able to satisfy myself about the situation. I do not say any of these gentlemen have misstated the facts. The trouble is, in my opinion, we have not always gotten the best information and the most thorough information that I would like to have on the subject, before we legislate on such an important matter.

Mr. HARRIS. That is the reason I said it is not altogether clear to me what the ultimate effect of this will be insofar as international carriers are concerned and the competitive position; nevertheless I do feel it is a matter that can be cleared up later and I am sure it will be.

Mr. HESELTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRIS. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. HESELTON. With reference to the particular amendment the gentleman has offered, over the week-end I had occasion to look over the brief of the Seaboard Airline's case pending before the Civil Aeronautics Board. The situation that bothers me is the cutting of this back to the certificated mail carriers. This particular line is the only unsubsidized freight service in the international field and they want to go forward with their work. They are carrying more freight now than any other single line, and I think it would be a great mistake for us to arbitrarily cut them out from possible consideration. I am sure the gentleman feels, knowing him and his ability and his fairness, that if situations like that develop, the gentleman would be glad to join in presenting a further solution.

Mr. HARRIS. I thank the gentleman. As has been so well said already, we did not have hearings on that particular point of issue before our committee. If it is a question that is to be taken up and considered, I will join with the other members of the committee at an appropriate and convenient time to take it up and give it most thorough consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARRIS. As the gentleman from California [Mr. HINSHAW] said a moment ago, this is a bill to separate subsidy from air-mail pay; that is all. It is not a bill to extend subsidy. That is the way I understand it. This amendment that I propose here limits the provisions of this bill just as it was intended, that is, to the separation of air-mail pay from subsidy payments by the Government.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRIS. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HINSHAW. Is not this amendment which the gentleman is offering now identical with the amendment recommended by the gentleman from Ohio after his discussion with the members of the task force of the Hoover Commission?

Mr. HARRIS. Identical. The amendment limits the class of carriers which may apply for subsidy payments to those carriers holding mail certificates. This limitation conforms to existing law. Under the bill as reported any certificated air carrier may apply for subsidy. The class of air carriers which may apply for subsidy should not be broadened beyond present law until this question is more fully explored. This is in accordance with the agreement and understanding of all of the Members present last week when we had our sessions.

Mr. Chairman, I trust that the amendment will be adopted and the other amendments we agreed to will be adopted and that this bill as amended will pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. HARRIS].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HINSHAW: Page 5, beginning in line 22, strike out "to make, with respect to the period beginning July 1, 1951, and ending March 31, 1952, or with respect to any part thereof," and insert in lieu thereof "to make."

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, this amendment removes the limitation on the period during which the Board will have power to make temporary subsidy payments. The need to make temporary subsidy payments will not be limited to the period immediately following the separation between rates and subsidy. Situations may arise at any time in the future where the difficulty of determining final subsidy payments makes it necessary to have authority to make temporary subsidy payments pending final determination as to the subsidy payments which should be made.

Mr. Chairman, this is another recommendation of the group which I mentioned a moment ago, and I urge its adoption.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. HINSHAW].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BECKWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BECKWORTH: Page 6, line 10, strike out "on or after July 1, 1951," and insert in lieu thereof "after March 31, 1952."

Mr. BECKWORTH. Mr. Chairman, this is one of the amendments that have been referred to. It simply gives the Civil Aeronautics Board nine additional months to do this job of separating mail pay from subsidy. One of the reasons is that the bill was reported last August, and some 3 or 4 months have elapsed since that time. It is necessary that the Board have additional time within which to do this job. This amendment provides that.

Mr. HESELTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BECKWORTH. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. HESELTON. As I heard the amendment read, it was to strike out the language "on or after July 1" and substitute "after March 31." Is that what the gentleman intended to do?

Mr. BECKWORTH. That is the language of the amendment. The words that are to be placed in the bill are "after March 31, 1952."

Mr. HESELTON. The gentleman intends to eliminate "on or after July 1"?

Mr. BECKWORTH. The amendment as offered is in a form which I think is correct. As I understand it, the intent is to have the separation take effect beginning with the second calendar quarter of 1952. This amendment could have been drafted to read "on or after April 1, 1952." The same result is reached by the pending amendment, which reads "after March 31, 1952."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BECKWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the remainder of the bill be considered as read and be open to amendment at any point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The remainder of the bill is as follows:

ALLOCATION OF AIR CARRIER RECEIPTS AND EXPENDITURES

SEC. 3. Section 407 (d) of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, as amended, is hereby amended—

(1) By inserting "(1)" after "(d)"; and

(2) By inserting at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(2) On or before July 1, 1951, and from time to time thereafter, the Civil Aeronautics Board shall, after notice and hearing, prescribe standards by which air carriers, in keeping their accounts, records, and memoranda, shall allocate receipts from, and expenditures for, the air transportation services rendered by them among the following four categories: Transportation of passengers and their baggage, transportation of freight, transportation of express, and transportation of mail. From and after July 1, 1951, it shall be unlawful for any air carrier, in keeping any account, record, or memorandum (other than any additional account, record, or memorandum kept pursuant to the proviso of paragraph (1) of this subsection), to allocate any receipt from, or expenditure for, any air transportation service it renders in any manner other than a manner which conforms to the standards prescribed pursuant to this paragraph."

ADDITIONAL INFORMATION IN ANNUAL REPORTS

SEC. 4. The second sentence of section 206 of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, as amended, is hereby amended by inserting after "civil aeronautics" a comma and the following: "including data relative to the mail payments and subsidy payments, both in the aggregate and on an individual basis, made under this act with a separate analysis of the bases upon which each such mail payment and each such subsidy payments was provided."

STUDIES AND REPORTS

SEC. 5. (a) The Civil Aeronautics Board is authorized to make studies in connection with any of the provisions of this act. In the conduct of such studies the Board is authorized, without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes to enter into contracts or other arrangements, or modifications thereof, for the carrying on of such studies by such persons or organizations as may be designated by the Chairman of the Civil Aeronautics Board and the chairmen of the Committees on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States.

(b) On or before April 1, 1951, the Civil Aeronautics Board shall, on the basis of a comprehensive study, render a written report to the Congress on what aggregate sums would be required during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1952, and during each of the four succeeding fiscal years (1) to provide fair compensation for services to be rendered by air carriers in the carriage of the mails, in accordance with the provisions of section 406 (a) of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, as amended by this act, and (2) to provide for payment of essential subsidy, in accordance with section 406 (c) of such act, as amended by this act. Such report shall include a study of the potential revenues from all forms of air traffic and of the potential economies which could be achieved in airline costs, as well as such other factors as may be pertinent to the development, with the least possible expenditures by the United States, of an efficient and economical air transport industry to the extent and of the character and quality required for the national defense, the commerce of the United States, and the postal service.

(c) There are hereby authorized to be appropriated to the Civil Aeronautics Board such sums, not to exceed $300,000 in the aggregate, as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this section.

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota: On pages 6 and 7, strike out all of section 3, lines 11 to 25, inclusive, on page 6, and lines 1 to 7, inclusive, on page 7, and renumber the subsequent sections of the bill accordingly.

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, this was one of the controversial features of the bill which was originally before us and which has been worked out by the compromise agreement.

This amendment strikes out section 3, which provided that the Civil Aeronautics Board would prescribe standards for the allocation of air-carrier receipts and expenditures for specified categories. It has been pointed out that the Civil Aeronautics Board, under existing law, has full power to prescribe these standards; and it is apparent that the Board will have to prescribe such standards in order to achieve the separation. However, in view of the difficult nature of the problem it is believed preferable to leave to the judgment of the Board the time when these accounting changes must take place.

Mr. Chairman, it happens to be a fact that under section 407 of the Civil Aeronautics law there is very comprehensive provision for the setting up of an accounting system. It took the CAB and the airlines something like 3 years to set-up that system. The regulations of the Civil Aeronautics Board comprise a book of approximately 100 pages of instructions. It took thousands and I presume hundreds of thousands of dollars to set up that accounting system throughout all the airlines of the United States. It is felt that the language in the present bill would be much more restrictive than the CAB might feel in order to determine the separation of air-mail pay and subsidy.

In the minority report of this bill there is fully set out the objections of the CAB with persuasive logic, the reasons why this amendment should be adopted.

It is felt it would be far better to permit the Board to have that leeway and from such studies as they may make or their experience may show to provide for a proper system of accounting to complete the separation.

Mr. ROONEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. I yield.

Mr. ROONEY. Do I understand the gentleman's position to be that the Civil Aeronautics Board already and upon passage of the pending bill has the power to prescribe standards by which air carriers in keeping their accounts, records, and memoranda shall allocate receipts from and expenditures for the air transportation services rendered by them, among the following four categories: Transportation of passengers and their baggage, transportation of freight, transportation of express, and transportation of mail? Does the Civil Aeronautics Board now have that authority?

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. They have that authority now. In addition, they have much more power because it may be, if I understand the situation, that about 80 percent of the airline business is on joint rates, and they have some tremendous difficulties.

Mr. BECKWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. I yield.

Mr. BECKWORTH. We specifically talked about this while we were in the series of meetings the other day. Would the gentleman give his impression as to what the CAB has indicated the CAB expects to do about this particular thing immediately?

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. It is my understanding they will set up such a system, and they are now in the process of working it out. The fact of the matter is that in the so-called Big Four cases the CAB has informed us that they have learned much themselves, so far as this subject is concerned, and they will undoubtedly follow up with additional regulations which will require all of the things we want to show with reference to the separation of air-mail pay from subsidies.

Mr. BECKWORTH. Is it not fair to state furthermore that the fact the language is not there is no evidence the Congress is not very anxious that they, insofar as possible, separate it into these four categories, or any other categories necessary to make this picture a clear picture? Certainly, it is my hope the four categories can be used. I would not want to limit the categories to four, however. If other categories are necessary, they, too, should be used.

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. Exactly.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. O'HARA].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BECKWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BECKWORTH:

On page 8, line 4, strike out "1951" and insert in lieu thereof "1952."

On page 8, strike out lines 7 and 8, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "it estimates will be required during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1950."

Mr. BECKWORTH. Mr. Chairman, this amendment postpones for 1 year the date by which the Civil Aeronautics Board is to report to the Congress with respect to costs to the Government of air-mail pay and subsidy. One of the purposes is to give the Board more time within which to make its study in that particular connection. When it reports, it is to report for the following fiscal year beginning July 1, 1952, and to report for 1 year only rather than for 5 years as the bill originally provided. It is felt that this is a more practical solution to the objective which the committee was seeking by the original language.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I simply want to say of course this bill is a compromise and the amendments which we have offered today are a compromise, and while perhaps none of us is satisfied, including myself, nevertheless, for the sake of getting a bill, we have gone along thus far. In no way have I personally changed the views which I expressed the other day when this bill was on the floor. I intend in the extension of my remarks to give some reasons why certain further changes should be made in this legislation before it is finally enacted into law and to that end I now ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, under authority to extend my remarks I reiterate that this bill should not be enacted into law and, in fact, no bill should be enacted until the Senate committee study of this subject has been completed and become available. However, as the House appears to be insistant upon some bill being passed now, I can say that this bill, H. R. 9184, with the amendments agreed to is in far better shape than it started out to be, and that doubtless it would have been had not an agreement on amendments been reached by our unofficial conference between differing members. The bill H. R. 9184 in its present form is not too seriously different from H. R. 9305, which we offered as a substitute except that this bill includes our air carriers in foreign commerce and certain other provisions which I shall discuss.

SEPARATION OF MAIL PAY AND SUBSIDY OF AIR CARRIERS OPERATING IN FOREIGN COMMERCE

Mr. Chairman, I believe that this is the wrong time to require separation of compensatory mail pay from subsidy to our air carriers in foreign commerce and doubt that a right time will come until foreign-flag carriers do likewise. Hidden subsidy is being furnished to all international carriers, whatever flag they carry. Our own flag international carriers are privately owned. Other flag air carriers are all government owned, and as such are not required by their governments to adhere to the same rigid accounting as are ours. That is the initial disadvantage we suffer. While those governments can see the published costs of our carriers, we cannot do the same for each of the foreign-flag carriers. Therefore, by our disclosing the amount of subsidy we pay to our airlines in foreign commerce, we lay ourselves open to a subsidy war. That alone is sufficient reason to exclude our air carriers in foreign commerce from this bill.

But for sake of argument, let us assume that the separation principle is correct. We have a number of so-called national-interest air routes. I do not think it is smart to disclose those routes and their cost in terms of subsidy support, and such would be required under this bill.

But in the general case what would be the effect? Let us take the three situations that would arise. First is the case where the compensatory rate to be established turns out to be greater than the rate now agreed in the Universal Postal Union—UPU—of 6 gold francs, or $2.86, per ton-mile in the North Atlantic. Second would be where the compensatory rate comes out equal to the UPU rate. Third is the case where the compensatory rate is less than the UPU rate.

In the first case, i. e., where the compensatory rate turns out to be greater than the UPU rate, then in that case our Post Office Department would be forced to offer our mail to foreign-flag carriers, because their rate, the UPU rate, would be cheaper. If the Post Office Department should refuse to do that, then foreign governments would have reason to claim we were discriminating against their lower-rate carriers in favor of our own higher-rate carriers. Compulsion would also come directly for budgetary reasons of the Post Office Department. At that point our carriers would lose the mail pay almost altogether and the subsidy payments would have to be increased accordingly. We would then have to pay twice—once to the foreign-flag carrier for carrying the mail and again to our own flag carriers as additional subsidy.

In the second case, that is, where the compensatory rate turns out to be equal to the UPU rate, an unlikely happenstance, our carriers would be on an equal footing with foreign-flag carriers so far as carrying the mail is concerned, but subsidy pay, if any, being disclosed unilaterally by us would open the way to charges against us on account of paying subsidy, and a subsidy rate war would ensue.

In the third case, that is, where the compensatory rate would turn out to be less than the UPU rate, then our Post Office Department, for budgetary reasons, would find it incumbent upon themselves to give all of our mail to our own carriers, instead of giving some of it to foreign-flag carriers as they do now. In that case foreign governments would doubtless retaliate by not giving any of their mail to our flag carriers as they do now, and hence our carriers as well as theirs would be flying their home-bound courses empty of mail, and that would be a loss to all concerned and require us to pay added subsidy to our flag air carriers.

Therefore, if any separation of subsidy from mail pay is to be made, it probably would be least damaging to us to establish a compensatory rate at whatever the UPU rate is at any given time, instead of going through the expensive process of trying to find a true cost. But that probably is too simple an answer to appeal to anyone.

OTHER PROVISIONS OF H. R. 8194

Mr. Chairman, there are numerous other reasons why I feel opposed to this bill at this time, but among them are the following:

First, as we are on the brink of war, this is no time to be asking either the Civil Aeronautics Board or the air carriers to divert their attention and resources to this business. At any time the National Defense Establishment may requisition a large number of planes and crews and thus throw accounting and the rigid accounting procedures in this bill into a cocked hat.

Secondly, the bill establishes a rigid accounting of cost of service which is a part of a larger service, and no two accountants can ever agree on exactly how to separate and allocate costs on an actual-cost basis. At best, the allocations of charges must be done empirically. To write "cost," as such, into the law may require a long court procedure and final Supreme Court decision as to what cost is to mean in each case that can be brought before it.

Thirdly, while compensation for carrying the mail at determined rates becomes an obligation of the Government, that is not the case in this bill so far as subsidy payments are concerned. The bill, H. R. 8194, leaves that question up to the whim of the Congress through its appropriations for paying subsidy. If the Congress appropriates less than the Civil Aeronautics Board determines as necessary, then the CAB must reallocate the subsidy payments appropriated accordingly. This means that no airline receiving subsidy can know what subsidy it is to be paid until after the Congress has acted and the Board then has acted accordingly. It means that airlines requiring subsidy will not be able to finance their operations as no responsible banking organization or group can offer finances on such a tenuous and uncertain prospect. Hence either Government financing or outright Government ownership of subsidized airlines would eventuate necessarily.

If it is desirable to control the continued enjoyment of route certificates then this is not the way to control it. A far better way would be to empower the CAB to issue an order to an airline to appear at a hearing to show cause as to why its certificate or any route certificate should not be revoked as being no longer in the public interest and to the public convenience and necessity to continue such certificate in force. Under this bill any air carrier or any route or segment of a route can be cut off without warning merely as a result of a specific cut or even a general cut in appropriations made by the Congress. This process can eventuate into overriding even a Presidential certification order and generally bring financial chaos to the entire commercial aviation industry. The payment of subsidy to an airline should be a contractual matter and not an indirect means of canceling certificates of public convenience and necessity without notice or hearing.

Mr. Chairman, there are other objections to this bill, H. R. 8194, as amended in the House, but these or any of them that I have presented appear to me as good and sufficient reason why H. R. 9184 should not become law in these last days of the Eighty-first Congress. I hope and trust that the counterpart of our committee in the other body will agree so that we may take another look at the subject in the Eighty-second Congress.

Mr. BECKWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I want to call attention to a letter which the Post Office Department wrote to the chairman of the committee the gentleman from Ohio, Hon. ROBERT CROSSER, on December 7, 1950. The Postmaster General mentioned several provisions he would like to see in the bill. There have been no hearings on some of these; although the committee has great confidence in the Post Office Department, it would wish to have hearings on all the suggestions.

I simply want the RECORD to show that the letter was considered by the group of members when we met the other day. Since there were no hearings held on some of the recommendations contained in the letter, we felt that we could not act on them at this time, but in the future we shall be glad to consider those recommendations. Also I desire to include a letter dated December 7, 1950, which was written to the gentleman from Texas, Speaker RAYBURN, by Hon. D. W. Rentzel.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
CIVIL AERONAUTICS BOARD,
Washington, D. C., December 7, 1950.

Hon. SAM RAYBURN,
Speaker of the House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I believe it to be of the utmost importance that I communicate to you at this time my feelings about H. R. 9184, a bill designed to accomplish the separation of the subsidy element from mail pay, now actively being considered by the House. While the Administration and the Board are on record as favoring separation legislation and while H. R. 9184 essentially accomplishes that purpose, there are nevertheless several very serious objections to some of the provisions of this bill. I shall not burden you here with a detailed statement of the objections, for they appear in a letter from the acting chairman of the Board to Congressman JOSEPH P. O'HARA, quoted in full on pages 18–20 of the report accompanying the bill. The views expressed in that letter were substantially the same as those expressed in response to a request by Congressman BECKWORTH several weeks previous to Congressman O'HARA's inquiry. At that time we submitted in outline form a comparison between the provisions of H. R. 9184 and the suggestions of the Board for a suitable bill, submitted by its chairman on February 15, 1950, before the Transportation Subcommittee of the House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee. We are enclosing a copy of that submission for your convenience.

The principal objections of the Board referred to above were as follows:

1. The bill extends opportunity for subsidy to carriers not now eligible by making all certificated carriers eligible.

2. The Board is not given authority to fix temporary subsidy payments pending the fixing of permanent subsidy.

3. The bill provides that the Board shall order each carrier to allocate costs and revenues between the different services, but apparently does not afford a particular carrier the opportunity for a semijudicial hearing to determine the propriety of such an order as applied to it.

4. The provisions as to the time in which the change-over should be accomplished are not clear and will result in confusion.

The objections that the Board has hitherto expressed to H. R. 9184, which objections I understand are not opposed by the administration, are the same today as they were before. It is true that by a subsequent amendment to the bill an attempt was made to cure one of these objections by giving the Board the authority to fix temporary subsidy payments for the period July 1, 1951, to March 31, 1952. This amendment, while allowing the Board a little breathing spell in the tremendous job imposed upon it in changing over to the new scheme of determining separately service and subsidy payments, does not eliminate the essential objection. In the first place, it does not allow enough of a breathing spell. It is difficult to see how the Board will be able to fix permanent rates and subsidies within the time contemplated by the bill. The result will be that many carriers will have to operate without substantial sums obviously due them from the Government. These carriers cannot but be seriously harmed by the delay. Quite aside from transition period problems, it is essential that the Board have a continuing authority to make temporary subsidy payments. The airline industry is still in a dynamic stage and with the nature and the risks involved in its operations, crises are to be expected more frequently than in ordinary public utilities. A good example of that was the period after the recent war. It is desirable that the flexibility with respect to temporary payments that the Board has under the present act be continued.

The Board feels that the elimination of the foregoing objections, which would make H. R. 9184 more nearly comparable to the bill suggested by the Board, would result in a bill much more administratively feasible than is H. R. 9184. We therefore urge that serious consideration be given to the Board's objections to H. R. 9184.

In closing, I should like to reiterate the Board's support of separation legislation. We are actively engaged in a proceeding to establish service rates for the largest four carriers in the industry. Our staff has put in a tremendous amount of work on the case and has now reached a point where it can make significant contributions to the very difficult problem of setting up definite standards for separation of the subsidy element. The Board continues to believe, further, that separation legislation should be passed at the earliest possible moment consistent with the drafting of a bill that will better accomplish the task. It is only on the question of the adequacy of the bill now actively under consideration that the Board has serious misgivings and believes that a more satisfactory bill can be worked out. I shall hold myself ready to supply any additional information and assistance that you may consider desirable.

Sincerely yours,

D. W. RENTZEL,
Chairman.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BECKWORTH. I yield.

Mr. KENNEDY. I would like to extend my thanks to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LINEHAN] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. ROONEY] for their invaluable work last week in trying to perfect this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BECKWORTH] has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BECKWORTH].

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BONNER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 9184, pursuant to House Resolution 854, he reported the bill back to the House with sundry amendments adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. ROONEY), there were—ayes 66, noes none.

So the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WOODRUFF asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include a letter addressed to him by John C. Manning, editor of the Detroit Times, and an editorial from the Detroit Times; and further to extend his remarks and include an editorial from the Detroit Free Press.

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include an article.

Mr. HESELTON asked and was given permission to revise and extend the remarks he made in Committee of the Whole and include extraneous matter and tabulations.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. BRAMBLETT for an indefinite period, on account of official business.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. PRIEST. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Tuesday, December 12, 1950, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1775.
